Allow a single Jew a single trading house in a city, it would allow trade to the whole nation; this would be to oppose to each trader the forces of a nation whole which would not fail to use it to oppress the trade of each house one after the other and consequently that of the whole city (I).

(1) What would it be now where ministries, police, judges, commissioners, junior agents, banks, newspapers, everything is theirs and where they get along like countless thieves, in a fair immense to strip the Christian?

234 JEWISH FRANCE

If the practice were dangerous everywhere, it would still be more fatal in this city of Paris. What a theater for cupidity! How easy it is for operations of their liking! The laws more vigorous than one could oppose to their admission, any the vigilance of police magistrates," the special care that the city body would take to support the views of the administration, nothing would be able to prevent the frequent and momentary acts-fed up with their greed. It would be impossible to get them drunk in their oblique and dark road.

a true masterpiece of reason where one can clearly feel the loyal soul and patriotic «g ûZZ âiccires:

An ancient philosopher was asked where he was from; he replied—said he was cosmopolitan, that is, a citizen of the universe. I prefer, said another, my family to me, my homeland to my family, and mankind to my homeland. May the defenders of the Jews not make no mistake! Jews are not cosmopolitan; they are not are citizens in no place in the universe; they prefer themselves to all mankind, they are its secret enemies since they propose to enslave him one day.

These indignant protests were successful. first stop, it is true, dated July 25, 1775, had granted the release of goods seized by the gar—draperies and haberdasheries of Paris at the Jew Perpi—gnan, and had allowed the Jews to continue their trade, but the Council reformed this decision and a judgment of the February 7, 1777 definitively dismissed the Jews.

The Jews had been defended by Lacretelle, but it is necessary admit that they had chosen a singular defender there.

This people, he wrote {!}, familiar with contempt, makes baseness the way of his fortune; incapable of all that requires

(1) Plea for Moy3e Gay, Godechaux and Abraham Lévy, Jews from Metz.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 235

energy, it is rarely found in crime, it is surprised constantly in roguery. Barbarian by defiance, he sacrifices—would have a reputation, an entire fortune to ensure the most chelive sum.

With no other resource than the razor, he makes this resource of the art of deception. Usury, this monster that opens the hands of avarice itself, to gratify itself further, which, in silence, in the shadows, disguises itself in a thousand forms, constantly calculating the hours, the minutes of a terrible gain, goes everywhere, spying on the unfortunate to bring them perfidious aid, this monster seems to have chosen the Jew as its agent. This is what the Inquisition more rigorous could be collected on the Jewish people; and it is admitted that there is reason to be afraid of the portrait if it is faithful. // is not that too much; it is a truth that we must lament.

This feeling of repulsion so energetically formulated is all the more interesting since no one, especially in France, attacked especially the Old Testament in hatred of the New, overwhelmed the Jews with his naughty mockery, but he spoke of them as he spoke of everything without knowing what he was talking about said.

The hatred of the author of The Maid against Israel was, it must be said, recognize it, inspired by the vilest motives and the philo- low. Voltaire was in the 18th century, with the talent, the style and wit in addition, the perfect type of today's opportunist- today. Hungry for money, he was constantly involved in all the shady negotiations of his time. When at the time of the centenary, Gambetta, in a conference chaired by the Baden Spuller, came to praise the friend of the King of Prussia e* declare that he was the father of our Republic, he accompa- truly fulfilled a duty of filial piety. Associated with the suppliers who were starving our soldiers and who left everything naked, afflicted with all the malt makers of his time, Voltaire, nowadays, would have had Ferrand as his sponsor-silent, he would have made a nice profit in the loan Morgan, he would have beaten Challemeil-Lacour and Léon Renault in financial negotiations.

1236 JEWISH FRANCE

It is not surprising in these conditions that Voltaire was mixed up early in Jewish affairs, This Frenchman, at Prussian heart, moreover resolved the difficult problem of being more greedy for gain than the children of Israel, more deceitful than those that he insulted.

A spy's spy for Dubois, such is the posture, to use a word from Ferry, in which first reveals to us the great man dear to democracy French. A curious fragment of his correspondence, to which, alone of our writers, Mr. Ferdinand Brunetière has makes a slight allusion (1), shows us the philosopher to the age when noble feelings flourish in natures the less gifted, denouncing an unfortunate person to Dubois Jew from Metz, Salomon Lévy, who honestly did his spy job.

The letter, addressed to Dubois on May 28, 1722, is interesting for the order of studies that we are pursuing; It sheds light on the figure of Voltaire and also shows us- ment in action the penetrating cosmopolitan Jewish informant everywhere thanks to its race (2). Gela could be called both agents and serve as a counterpart to the fight between the two police officers Balzac: Peyrade and Contenson. It is Voltaire, however, who seems the most skillful, perhaps because he is the

(1) Critical studies on the history of French literature.

(2) This vocation is so innate in them that we see fHeine himself, "this nightingale who, according to a pretty expression, had has its nest in Voltaire's wig, » to sign the founda se-nets, throughout the reign of Louis-Philione.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 237

"My Lord (I),

€ I am sending to Your Eminence a short memorandum of what I have was able to unearth anything concerning the Jew whom I had the honor of telling you talk.

"If Your Excellency considers this important, would I dare to represent that a Jew is not from any country other than the one where he earns money, may as well betray the king for the emperor, than the emperor for the king. •

Memoir touching Solomon Levi

Salomon Levi, a Jew born in Metz, was first employed by M. de Chamillard; he passed over to the enemy with the ease that the Jews to be admitted and to be driven out everywhere. He had the address of to become a munitioner of the imperial army in Italy; he gave from there all the necessary advice to Marshal Villeroi, which did not prevent him from being taken in Cremona.

"Since then, being in Vienna, he had correspondence with !Marshal de Villars. He received orders from M. deTorci, in 1713, to follow Lord Mariborough who had gone to Germany for pocket the peace and he gave an exact account of his demar-ches.

0 He was sent secretly by Mr. Leblanc to Pirtz, ten-eight months, for a supposed state affair which turned out to be a nonsense.

- Regarding his liaisons with Willar, cabinet secretary of the emperor, Solomon Levi claims that WiUar never discovered nothing but as a man attached to the interests of the Empire, as being the brother of another Levi employed in Lorraine known letters.

"However, it is not likely that Willar, who received money from Solomon Levi to learn his master's secret-tell the French as much.

0 Solomon Levi, it is said, thought he was hanged several times, this which is much more likely.

(1) Voltaire: Complete Works, Beucbot edition, volume LI, p. 73.

238 THE JEWISH FRINGE

"He corresponded with the company as secretary of Willar.

"He plans to make connections with Oppenheimer and Vertenbourg, the emperor's munitions workers because they are both Jews like him.

"Wilhar has just written a letter to Solomon demanding a prompt response, awaiting these words of the letter: "Give—I'll meet you while we're still free."

"Salomon Levi is currently hiding in Paris for a special affair with another rogue named Rambau de Saint-Maire. This matter is at the Ghàtelet and is of no interest to the Court. "

The multiple traffickings in which Voltaire engaged did not go not without some misadventures. Mixed up in the affairs of the Jew Medina, Voltaire lost in the bankruptcy of Jacob's son twenty thousand pounds which he regretted all his life, because he had not not the philosophy of good subscribers of the mines of Bingham (1).

When Mr. Medina, he wrote some time before his death, made me bankrupt in London for twenty thousand pounds, four-thirty-four years old, he told me that it was not his fault, that he did not—had never been a child of Belial, that he had always tried to live as a son of God, that is to say as an honest man, as a good Israelite. He moved me, I kissed him, we praised God together and I lost eighty percent...

Nearly a century passed without softening this stinging memory.

The affair of Abraham Hirsch or Hirschell affected the great man even more deeply. If he only lost one part of his honor, to which he had little regard, he lost Frederick's friendship, which he held dear.

title: Voltaire and the Jews, in the Archives Israélites (No. 16, March 7, 20, 27, 1882).

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 239

To understand the Hirsch affair, we only have to look at ourselves memory of the good Tunisians affair. It's the same operation with almost insignificant variables.

Under the government of the Polish kings, Saxony had issued notes which were called "Slaûer notes" and which had fallen to thirty-five percent below the rate of issue. Frederick II stipulated by the Treaty of Dresden that these notes would be reimbursed at the issue rate. More honest nevertheless than our rulers, he declared for—that no further speculation would take place on these tickets.

It is precisely the opposite, we understand it immediately, of what happened to our state railways or for the railway from Bône to Guelma, where the deputies, who were in the business, bought at a low price from the first subscribers, the only interesting ones, demonetized securities which suddenly regained all their value when France had given 6a guarantee.

This is also the opposite of Tunisian bonds. Fallen to nothing, thanks to the cîgatîpagae that the Jew Lévy-Cré—did better against them in the French Republic^ they were taken over by Gambetta's gang and became first-rate values now that France, to enrich some members of the Republican Union, takes on the debts of the Bey of Tunis who does not do not look more than the debts of the Emperor of China.

A Jewish jeweler saw the operation to be done and came to tell Vol—to be silent: a. You are in court, let's buy on account half of the Slaûer tickets at a discount, and let's do them pay back at par, I

What happened next? It is very difficult to know—

240. JEWISH FRANCE

see clearly. A second Jew, Ephraim Weitel, got involved 5 the case to get his share of the profit. Voltaire, in exchange of a note from him, had demanded from Hirsch a deposit of ten—eight thousand pounds worth of diamonds. He let his letter of protest further asked Hirsch to bring him a ring and a diamond mirror to examine them; then, not content to keep this pledge, he violently tore it from the unfortunate Jew a ring he had on his finger.

The trial that followed caused a terrible stir. Voltaire, who willingly denounced and who arranged to always be well with the authorities, had prayed Mr. de Bismarck, one of the ancestors of the terrible Chancellor, to arrest Hirsch who, detained for some time, was soon released.

Frederick II treated the man, to whom republican France-Caine now raises statues, with deserved contempt: "You ask me," he wrote to the Margrave on this subject, of Bayreuth, what is the trial of Voltaire with a Jew; it is the business of a rogue who wants to deceive a rogue. Soon we will learn from the sentence who it is the biggest rogue of the two."

Driven out of Potsdam, Voltaire humiliates himself under the outrage. "Sire," he wrote, "I beg Your Majesty to substitute the compassion to the feelings of kindness that enchanted me and have determined me to spend the rest of my life at your feet."

"I beg Your Majesty's pardon, your philosophy, to your kindness.

– "You had the dirtiest affair with the Jew in the world world," replies Frederick, and he orders Voltaire to leave his states.

These financial inconveniences explain the hostility that Voltaire testified all his life to the Jews, his mockeries on their rules of hygiene, its names of circumcised, of foreskinned, who come back every moment under his feather.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 141

Which is surprising, even when we know the ignorance of Voltaire, who is always wrong when he is not lying, This is, I repeat, the idea he has of numerical strength Jews.

We think, he writes in the pamphlet: A Christian against six Jews, that you are not more than four hundred thousand today-today, and far from it. Let's count: five hundred at home in front Metz, around thirty in Bordeaux, two hundred and five in Alsace, twelve a thousand in Holland and Flanders, four thousand hidden in Spain

ment in London, twenty thousand in Germany, Hungary, Holstein, Scandinavia, twenty-five thousand in Poland and surrounding countries, fifteen thousand in Türkiye, fifteen zero in Persia. That's all that I know of your population; it only amounts to a hundred haits one thousand seven hundred and thirty Jews. I agree to donate to you one hundred a thousand Jews in addition; that is all I can do for your service. The Parsis, your former masters, are not in greater number. You want to laugh with your four million...

Compare this figure given by a man, very super-official no doubt, but who was actively involved in the movement of his time, of the figure of eight million Jews openly declared today (1). You understand!

(1} Mirabeau, otherwise aware of the matter, was hardly closer to the truth. In his Essay on Moses Mendelssohn, i\iadl' that, according to Brendel's statistical tables, we count from 9Cî,09â Jews in all, noting that this very inaccurate statement is probably decreased by almost half. According to him, he has France (in 1781) 3,045 Jewish families at & per family, or 15.215, in Auace 4,200; this bill, Mirabeau points out, is too weak-ble of at least 6,000. (See Book I.)

14

242 JEWISH FRANCE

well the great silence that Israel had suddenly made around of him to devote himself to underground work against the society. The kind of recollection in which the Jew was entered had allowed Europe, during the whole of the 18th century, to live relatively peacefully and cultivate the Muses in peace with interludes of small war which, being neither neither racial conflicts nor religious struggles killed not many people. We greeted each other with our swords before the battle, we shook hands afterwards and went together to the comedy.

At the end of the 8th century, however, some Jews appeared-feels he has succeeded in establishing himself in Paris in good conditions precarious.

Apart from the nomads, more or less receivers, who slipped through the cracks of the law, we tolerated in the capittells of some Jewish families of the German rite who came from Lorraine and Alsace; they had as trustee in charge to represent them a man named Goldsmidjt, whose descendants-dants, I believe, have a sumptuous hotel on rue de Monceau, and even bear a noble title that they certainly do not have police officer named Brugères and had to report to him every month to renew their driving license stay; it remained up to him to refuse the visa and to demand the immediate departure from Paris. It was absolutely, as we see, the mapping that we apply to certain categories of women.

Besides these families, there still existed in Paris a small colony of Portuguese Jews who, originally from Bordeaux, for the most part, participated in the privileged situation which a certain amount had earned the Jews of this city outfit, real merit and relative respect, astonishing among of the Israelites, of the religion of those who had given them granted hospitality.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 24^

The trustee of these Portuguese was a man to whom the science had given a separate situation, Jacob Rodrigues Pereire, the inventor of a method for making people speak deaf and dumb. Louis XV, struck by the experiences to which he had assisted, had granted in 1750 a pension to Rodrigues Pereire; in 1753, the Academy of Sciences had awarded a prize for a dissertation on this question: What are the ways to compensate for Vaclion's wind on the large vessels; in 1765 finally, he had been appointed King's interpreter for oriental languages.

The personal consideration of the sJtidic was therefore added to the favorable prejudice that one had for the Jews Portugais.

The government, however, which knew; or rather who thought he knew the Jew, held his hand to what der-Behind these tolerable individualities the invasion does not occur did not produce.

A letter from Mr. Lenoir addressed to Pereire and that the community had it printed, because, ultimately, it was for her a guarantee of certain rights subject to a certain conduct, shows concern always a little worry with which old France watched over Israel (1).

(1) Copy (a letter including the original and the envelope containing it-were deposited with Mr. Giraudeau, notary in Paris, on November 18 bre 1777, written on the 15th of the same month, by Mr. Lenoir, councilor of State, lieutenant general of police of the city, provost and viscount of Paris to Mr. Pereire, pensioner of the king, secretary interpreter of

Portuguese of Paris, providing regulations for Portuguese Jews,

244 JEWISH FRANCE

All Jews, in general, who come to Paris, Sir, writes Mr. Lenoir, can only stay there by means of a pass-limited ports granted to them; because they are subject to a very special police. Spanish and Portuguese Jews, known under the name of new Christians or Portuguese merchants, have only been exempted from this rule until now; but I thought that, if they were not themselves subject to a particular regulation-bind, their privileges would result in disadvantages, notably-ment in that several foreign Jews could take falsely claiming to be Portuguese Jews and entering Paris to disturb the good order there; which would be all the more easy, that by means of this false quality, they would not be observed as they should naturally be.

To prevent this abuse, the king decided that all Spanish Jewsgnolls and Portuguese, from wherever they come, are required, when they want to stay in Paris, to provide certificates of the trustee in charge and six other notables of their community-duly legalized community which will contain their description and attest-will say that they are Portuguese Jews.

By presenting their certificates and other identity documents, notify, they must declare the reasons for their stay in Paris, their dedie and announce their departure three days in advance.

All these declarations must be entered in a register which will be presented at any request.

Speaking of Portuguese Jews in Paris, we must reserve a special place at the famous Peixotto. We find-We will see in the life of this millionaire many names which were worn by people we know, the name of Dacosta or Acosta which is that of the assassin of our priests, the name of Catullus Mendes who, to decide Sarah Bernarhdt to play the play of the Enemy Mothers in in which the Jew has such a beautiful role, parodied the Salutation Angélique and wrote to the actress: "I greet you Mary full of grace.

Peixotto himself is a true modern Jew, he has

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 245

t\pe that we rub shoulders every day with gross vices, the foolish boasting, arrogance, the perpetual need to be in

In 1775, he began to make all of Paris resound with his separation trial with his wife.

The Memoir for Lady Sara Mendez d'Acosta, wife of Mr. Samuel Peixotto against Mr. Samuel Peixotto on a request for annulment of marriage and on Jewish divorce teaches us the origin of the character and how he got married.

Mr. Peixotto, says the preamble to this Memoir, was born in Bordeaux, in January 1741, of Portuguese Jewish parents; in 1761, he was sent by his mother to Holland and London. His father had been one of the most accredited bankers in Europe, and it was appropriate for him to follow the same career, almost the only one in which a man of his nation can distinguish himself. It was addressed in the capital of England to Mr. Mendez d'Âcosta, a well-known banking house, and long-linked time to that of Peixotto by the commercial correspondences as well as by the relations of nation and religion.

He was well received; he had the opportunity to see young Sara Mendez and married her at the Portuguese Jewish Synagogue in London.

Nothing could be more regular than such a marriage. Peixotto nevertheless maintained that his innocence had been abused, he made declare this union null in December 1775, by a judge-default against which his wife appealed to him in intent as a trial which, Bachaumont tells us, began to be pleaded on March 30, 1778.

Peixotto, however, does not appear to have had much to say. complain about his partner, since he only blames her to be in a bad mood and start to be on the return; furthermore, to be cantankerous, meticulous and counter-saying.

14.

246 JEWISH FRANCE

This is more than is needed, it seems, in the Mosaic law. to legitimize the divorce that the Jew Naquet succeeded in Impose by all means on this France which has had to for so long his moral greatness to his respect for the indissolubility of the marriage.

Rabbi Hillel, whose authority Peixotto invokes, says well that a husband cannot divorce his wife without cause, but he claims that the slightest cause is sufficient. According to him, it is a her husband's dinner: etiam oh cihum ejus nimis ardore coctum (1).

With the shamelessness that characterizes these people, Peixotto cited the example of a prince allied to the royal family prove that one did not have the right to marry abroad to ger without the king's permission; he recalled the cancellation of the marriage of the Duke of Guise with Madame de Berghes. To what lawyers replied, that they would no longer allow themselves to say today that a banker, "who was not French although naturalized, but Jewish, » was perhaps not the Duke of Guise.

Peixotto's aversion to the bonds of marriage is explained- for reasons that the chroniclers of the time do not have not hidden from us. The banker's nasty tastes were well known in Paris. On October 18, 1780, Bachaumont writes:

Mr. Parizot, former director of students at the Opera, author and actor, has a starting order for the Haliens. When he presented himself to the assembly to be approved by the actors, Mr. Michu testified to the mood and exclaimed: "I believe that they want to infect us with all the jokers on the boulevard, » The

(t) See Book I.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 247

Siear Volange present, humiliated by the reflection, said to him: "My- Mr. Michu, if I didn't respect your sex, you would have to deal with me." And the whole troupe laughed, he indeed has the reputation of a bardache and to belong to the ugliest debauchee in France, to a Jew, named Peixotto, very rich and who maintains her as his mistress- braided.

We have another testimony of Peixotto's morals in the Deer Park or the Origin of the terrible deficit; but it is really difficult to talk about blindness with the Dervieux and the engraving with peacock feathers which accompanies loincloth the text.

I deliver everything to the Jewish publishers on Rue du Croissant, who will be able to attribute the story to some honest man of Christian and thus attract, once again, the esteem of Jewish Freemasonry.

The noise made by Peixotto was not likely to stop any time soon.

Following what circumstances did Peixotto go?

Dini de la Guerra, Bishop of Siguenza? I don't know, still-days is it that he offered to the church of the village of Talence, in the Bordeaux region, near which he owned a castle, a painting commemorative intended to be placed on the high altar and which was the height of comedy

This painting was about Peixotto's baptism.

Peixotto was in santo benito, sword at his side, presented by his godfather, the King of Spain, to the Blessed Virgin Mary, raised in a cloud, held the Child Jesus in her arms and opened his mouth from which came out a ribbon the color of fire on which one read these words: a Being of my family, he was just that he should be presented to me by the Catholic king (i).

(1) Curious and remarkable genealogy of Mr. Peixotto, Jew of origin, Christian by profession and banker from Bordeaux. "Work

218 JEWISH FRANCE

It must be recognized that the most famous grotesques of other-today, Hirsch having his weapons traced on the sand of his stable at Beauregard, Ephrussi bravely setting up in the glorious home of the de Luynes, Rothschild saying to the Duke of Aumale: "I share the passion that our ancestors for hunting, » do not yet approach this ridiculous.

The priest of Talence, one understands, was indignant at this charge; he consulted the archbishop and the painting was removed from the church.

Peixotto did not give up, he addressed the archbishop, he assured him that he was cohen, priest-king, and that he had to be placed on the altar, that it would be all the better there because it belonged to both faiths. The congregation, gathered by Monseigneur in his castle of Beauséjour, was not convinced and dismissed Peixotto without any consideration-ment.

Peixotto, who absolutely wanted to be recognized as Cohen, accumulated evidence that he possessed the cohennate from father to son. He quoted an extract from the register of the Jews of Bordeaux: "The zealous Jean Cohen Peixotto founded the 16th of the month of Nissam, year of the world 5465 (according to the (Israelite supposition), a synagogue in his own house intended to prove to the disbelievers that Mr. Peixolto is descending in line direct from Adam, Noah, Aaron and all the cohens of the universe.

Verum hæc tantum inter alias extulU urbes
Quantum lenta are inter viburna cupressi.

In Avignon, from the printing house of Aubanel, bookseller of Sa Stintetelé, 1789.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 219

and presented him with a Pentateuch with its ornaments.
gave the first place by his quality of cohen and the pre-eminence over all other Israelites."

The rabbis of Hamburg and London confirmed these certificates are useless; Cohen or not, Peixotto does not could appear in the church of Talence. In any case, the Revolution which sacrificed so many illustrious victims, by virtue of the principle of equality, was indulgent towards this friend of privileges
The Terror that Killed Malesherbes, André Chénier, Lavoisier, the old Abbot of Fénelon, a nonagenarian who had been the benefactor of the unfortunate, did not kill Peixotto.

Peixotto got off with a fine, like all the Jews from Bordeaux, by the way, except for one.

On December 16, 1793, the military commission rendered the following judgment: Convinced that the man who idolized the kings and had the pride, even under the old regime, of being above all nobles, can never be the friend of freedom; having regard, however, to his eagerness to buy national goods, although he may not have in view that his own interests, condemns him to a fine of 1,200,000 pounds, of which 1,000,000 for the Republic, and 200,000 pounds for the sans-culottes of Bordeaux.

Another important figure of Jewry in France, in the 18th century, was Liefraann Calmer. The Anyiitaire des Israeli Archives tell us that he was born in 1711, in Aurich, in Hanover. His Hebrew name was Moses-Eliezer Lipmann, son of Calonymos; this is undoubtedly the Hebrew transcription that made Liefmann from Lipmann and the name of Calonymos (in German Kallmann), which is became his last name, Calmer.

Calmer first settled in La Hâve and ennoured Rachel Moses

f50 JEWISH FRANCE

Isaac. Soon he left Holland to settle in France for him and for his children. Calmer did not stop in so beautiful path and it was in reality the first Jewish baron that he there was in France.

On April 27, 1774, a straw man, Pierre Briet, sei-Lord of Bernapr , bought off the creditors of the Duke of Chaulnes, for 1,500,000 pounds, the barony of Picquigny and emptied of Amiens. Soon after it was declared that the acquisition was made in the name of Liefmann Calmer, great bourgeois of the city of The Hague, naturalized French and become thus Baron of Picquigny and Vidame of Amiens.

From that moment on, Calmer spent his life on trial.
Far from seeking to appear conciliatory and humble, he had the claim to exercise its rights in all their rigor feudal lord. He was so impudent as to want to confer himself the prebends of the collegiate church of Saint-Martin of Picquigny. We were not used to seeing Jews then, as Cr mieux did, appoint bishops, and the bishop of Amiens rose up with rare energy against this incredulity-ble claim (1).

Despite all the noise made by Peixotto and Calmer, the
The situation of the Jews in Paris was still very precarious.
detail says it more than anything else; they didn't even know no place to be buried. They buried their dead in La Villette, in the garden of a wagoners' inn,

(1) Calmer died in 1784. He had four sons, two of whom were guillotined under the Terror; the last died without posterity
in 1823.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 25!

the sign of the Soleil d'Or. They paid the owner-to pay fifty francs for the body of a great person-rings.

The owner, Mr. Matard, ruthlessly exploited-Blentenl these Pariahs, he insulted them in their dearest beliefs, he had oxen and horses skinned in the earth intended for burials, he buried the flesh and the bones of these animals to the corpses, he disturbed
the Jews, in their funeral ceremonies and threatened them to no longer receive their dead.

Isn't this contrast between yesterday and today striking?
today? Look at these unfortunate people, who are leaving furtively in a lost suburb of Paris, not even having a widows and orphans, to recite the prayer: "O Lord, Rock of the worlds, God who lives and endures forever, you full of mercy, you who forgive offenses and erase them iniquities, I implore you for the soul of him who comes from die, » – Before a century has passed, they will be the masters of this brilliant Paris, through which they slip like shadows; they will have the palaces, the horses dashing, the boxes at the Opera, the authority^ they will have everything. In this very corner of Villette the factories of Halphen where three thousand Christian workers bending under the ceaseless labor, stifling in an atmosphere of cin- in a few degrees, led by the stick like the builders of the Pyramids, spit blood from the age of forty for that this man has a little more gold...

I wanted to see this cemetery again which still exists, and I found at 44, rue de Flandres, the Soleil d'Or as it is more or less that it once was. Although the hotel has disappeared, the im-furniture has kept its name and the owner's receipts,

2S2 JEWISH FRANCE

Mr. de Ribbes, bear as heading these words: House of the Golden Sun.

Even at first glance, one would always think one was in the other-18th century bank. In the immense courtyard, which has a little In the air of a farmyard, we see chickens, din-gifts, ducks bathing in a pond; it seems that we only wait for a call from travelers to put everything this on a spit; a goat completes this rural aspect.

The house is attached to the General Stores, and large hangars were built to store the excess full of goods. On the first floor is installed the office of the navigation inspector for the basin of the Villette.

People in the neighborhood don't know that there's a cemetery there. Jews, however, come to visit him sometimes, who knows? perhaps to collect oneself like Abdolonyme, who, from gardener having become king, would go and contemplate in a corner of his palace his humble clothes which reminded him of his condition first.

No place is more suitable for meditation. The wall, black of saltpeter, crumbles. The grass grows dry and thin in this arid enclosure, shaded by a few stunted trees. Humidity has eaten away the tombstones loaded with Hebrew characters and rendered most of the used as a place for storage. In the corners we put shards of bottles and old scrap metal. Under the moss greenery we discover some inscriptions which prove that the cemetery was still used for burials during the Republic and the early years of the Empire.

Here lies the beloved Judith Delvallée Silveyra, aged 36 years old, born in Boyonne, died in Pantin, near

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 253

Paris, the 0th of tri'ilnj of the year 5563 of the creation of the world, corresponding to the 13th Vendémiaire of the year II

Here rests the body of Abraliam Lopes Laguna, born in Bordeaux, died on July 19, 1807, aged 58. The time, silent about everything. Go withdraw from this world with all the family's regrets.

We still find the names of the Lxigonna, the Da-costa, from Suloinon Perpignan, one of the founders of the free drawing school.

The cemetery contains 28 graves in total.

The body of Jacob Pereire, who had been buried there, was exhumed by the family in 1878.

Or is filled with pity when thinking of this clannish funeral—the fates of yesteryear: I know well that they were implacable themselves for our dead as soon as they were masters, and I will tell later the painful story of a poor man 70 years old, whom Jewish Freemasonry killed in throwing her in the snow and to which she refused to sleep her eternal sleep in this Hermitage in which he had dreamed of praying to God quietly.

No matter! we are involuntarily moved and we are interested to the efforts tempted by the Jews to try to have naked falls in this land of France which owed them belong.

The Jews AUemauji, il-pic^L-ulcs by Guliismiilt, they The Portuguese soldiers, represented by Jacob Pereire, asked to acquire a common location for their services—these funerals; which gave rise, throughout the year 1778, to a long correspondence between Mr. Leuoir and Pereire.

It was about the acquisition of land between La Villette,

Pantin and Belleville. Or wanted to have half an acre, space, which can contain approximately 200 graves, or three-quarters of an acre, or even a whole acre, was blown away surround only two-thirds or half of the terrain. It was reported that 12 to 15 Jews were dying in Paris every year, which gives a population of around 400 individuals.

15

254 JEWISH FRANCE

Lenoir replied that the land could only be purchased by a naturalized Jew. The Jew Calmer was alone in these conditions, the others being only tolerated. Meanwhile, Matard made these poor people sing according to the word consecrated, he demanded an enormous compensation, 40,000 pounds, and again to only allow his land to be used for six years.

The project to establish a cemetery for the Jews of Paris, written by M. Pereire according to the orders of Mr. Lenoir, carries in the margin: "read at the meeting held on October 27, 1778, which was composed of Messrs. Cerfbeer, Liefmann Calmer and his three sons, J. Goldschmidt, Israel Salom, Silveyra and Pereire.

Here is the preamble to this project:

Gentlemen, the children of Israel, whom Providence has led and supported in France, cannot thank heaven enough for happiness which he makes them enjoy under a government which only breathes order, justice and humanity.

This last virtue that Jews most need to find everywhere, and which we can say that they have been since the dispersion a true touchstone among all peoples, they perceive the special effects brought to Paris by the kindness of Monseigneur Lenoir, police lieutenant, in the most likely way to excite any their recognition.

In 1780, Jacob Pereire appears to have come to an agreement with Matuid to definitively acquire land that could be used

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 2."»5

cemetery for Jews of the Portuguese rite (1), but Mr. Silveyra, satirist of the Portuguese Jews and agent of the community-Bayonne Community, requested, on May 24, 1781, that the Jews special.

They again approached Matard, but he refused. clearly to let them bury no one of their rite, and even wanted to exhume the previous dead, to which Mr. Lenoir opposed.

It was only five years after the Portuguese that the Jews Germans were able to have their cemetery. Mr. Cerfbecr, who enjoyed great consideration in the Israelite party, advanced the funds and he sent a new request to co subject to Mr. Lenoir, June 22, 1785, attaching the letters patents granted to him by Louis XVI, on April 15, 1775, under which he was permitted to acquire and pos- seder in the kingdom (2).

(1) Even today it is impossible to know who owns this land belongs. The Council, therefore, has no right to property Neither does Mr. de Ribbes. However, it is he who pays the tax which is minimal: on Tranc i0 per year.

(i) In 1778, a first oratre for the use of German Jews was opened, rue Brisemichp, a second in 1780, rue du Renard-Saint-Merry. A few hours later, a third one was installed in the former Carmelite convent, which received the name of Ctirmélilts schul, Carmelite synagogue A fourth, located on rue des Pelil»-Cbamps-Saint-Marlin, was long known under the name of Hutmaefur school because of a hat shop that was next door. This last synagogue could contain one hundred and sixty->ix ptr-sonnf3:she had for Bazan (singer' Mr. Léman Hirsch Pbilippi, and for free rabbi Mr. Ndi hau Poiak. The first official rabbi was Seligman Michel, arrived in Paris in 179*, and appointed chief rabbi in 1808.

The temples of rue Sjiii.t Avoye and rue du CLaume fa: eut

256 JEWISH FRANCE

A difficulty arose again at the last moment. Calmer had acquired a land at La Villette; seeing that his fellow soldiers were going to take this land, Calmer's wife wrote to Mr. de Vergennes, Minister of Foreign Affairs, for prevent this acquisition and force the Jews to take the Villette land.

Finally, all obstacles were removed and on May 31, 1785, Lenoir authorized Mr. Cerfbeer to dispose in favor of the Jews of the land he had bought in little Montrouge. This land

Père-Lachaise granted by the City and like this second land soon became insufficient, the City granted some another in Montmartre. When Christians bother the closed in 1821, at the time of the construction of the synagogue of the Victory Street.

The first Israelite restorer was called Bertoan, he gave hospilalié in 1784 to the chief rabbi of Amsterdam, Sriùì, who was passing by Paris to go to Jerusalem, alin to finish his days in the city holy. Mr. Albert Cohn, from whom we borrow some of These details tell us that recourse was had to Talmudic knowledge. traveler's records for the establishment of a religious bath which did not yet exist. At that time, we organized uu on a white-bissuses boat near the Poul-iNeuf, which remained at the same place for Irenleeight years.

Around the same time, two small schools were opened. boys, in which they learned to read the Bebrcu. One was directed by J. Cahen, the other by M. Aion, Polish, whose descent-dant, who had been my fellow student, became director of the Official Journal-heaven, because he was Jewish, and, under the pretext that I was Jewish, found a way to remove from me a small position that I occupied in this newspaper.

During the Terror these two masters led each decade their students x Noire- Dume, devc-nuf» the temple of Reason, for there vi'ir 1.1 opera fillo which daubail on the Mailii; altar.

THE JEW IN THE STORY OF FRANCE 207

Jews who have become more and more numerous, their bones in the wind or they will be burned, as they wish Naquet and Salomon.

The Montroujie cemetery was open not only to the Jews of Paris, but to those who prowled around the Court in the suburbs of Versailles, always watching for the oc-case of a usurious loan to be made to some gentleman pressed for money.

It was precisely through them that Louis XVI found himself a day in front of the Jew whom his ancestors had driven out and whom before him arose the eternal Semitic question.

As told by the Israelites the interview is striking (1).

One day in the army in 1787, Louis XM left for the hunting the master of the most beautiful kingdom in the world, happy, smiling, in a good mood.

Suddenly, in the vicinity of this Versailles which awakens still in the mind an idea of grandeur and majesty melancholic, like the impression of a setting sun in the purple, in the middle of the Roquencourt alley, the king sees four old men with foreign faces carrying a

(1) The place of the meeting itself is interesting. Fifty years later, the Jew Fould was mayor of Roquencourt, and by his tyranny became the terror of the inhabitants. The beautiful hunts of Roquencourt now belong to Hirsch, the inventor of good Ottomans, the fanciful character who claims that the nobility de France is very excited to go to his house. It is he, we know, who wanted to shoot the officers of a regiment with his gun artillery garrisoned at Versailles, because the dog of a sub-lieutenant had irreverently ventured onto his properties.
(See Book V.)

208 JEWISH FRANCE

coffin covered with a sheet. A small troop of individuals with an oriental type, with an elongated nose, with a complexion humble, followed. On the orders of the monarch, the captain of the guards inquire, he tells the king that these are someone of these Jews who come to Versailles to traffic in ma-gold and silver chariots, which carry the corpse of one of their coreligionists at the Montrouge cemetery.

The noble pity that we felt just now takes in the heart of this lioness, a king's man, so weak, so incapable of any manly act, but so good too. The memory of the infortunes that he met on the way follows him in this magnificent palace-where he still reigns in the splendor of his omnipotence.
He calls Malesherbes, he wins him over to his generous ideas.
In 1788, a commission was formed to research the ways to improve the lot of Jews. Chaired by Males-herbes, this commission called upon some Israelites considered in their world: Furtado and Gradis from Bordeaux, Cerfbeer from Nancy, Jacob Lazart and Jacob Trenel, from Paris.

Alas! the good-natured one, who took care of the miseries of the others, was already promised to the scaffold. On the day of the coronation he had, according to the ceremonial, lain down for a few moments in a black velvet shroud that had been carried over the tomb-beautiful of Charlemagne, in Aix-la-Chapelle, and less happy that the urchin whose poor beer had moved him, he did not

Christian who was interested in the Jews, the mutilated corpse had to go, without even being covered with a shred of sheet, from the bloody plank of the scaffold to the pit of quicklime from rue d'Anjou.

As of January 21, I have searched a few times in the Jewish newspapers, Mayer's Lantern, Drey's Nation-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 25'i

was, the journals of the Simond brothers, a word of praise or compassion for this very human man who was the first, in France, tried to improve the situation in Israel; I did not never encountered anything but the most brutal invectives sir this Capet was justly punished, perhaps, for having thought that one could treat Jews as anything other than dogs (1).

At that time, the Jew who was not admitted anywhere was actually everywhere and had been since the Regency. It was a Jewish, no doubt, but a Jew who carefully concealed-ment its origin, that this Law (Lewis, Levy), He truly founded-tablement in France, on ruins which did not instruct person, this financial exploitation of human stupidity which was later to take on such enormous proportions. He was the bold apostle of a new Creed, the Credit, the belief in imaginary values that was going to to be the faith of a society more naive than the old one and more easy to deceive, provided that you appeal, not to higher ideas, but to lusts, to the love of gain.

The Scot's success in France is a major event. ment, he announces that to the sincere and sensible Christian other - laws will be succeeded by a type completely unknown to the centuries past: the fool, the onlooker, the shareholder...

(1) There appeared on this date, in these newspapers, news such as this one from January 21, 1884:

"On the occasion of the anniversary of the death of Louis XVI, a large conference-concert, followed by a raffle, will be organized by the electoral committee of the eleventh arrondissement.

This festival will take place at 205 and 207 in the evening, in the suburb Saint-Antoine. »

The foreign Jew has more of a feeling for this situation than the French Jew; he pays with audacity and the authentic Jew, who timidly enters Mr. Lenoir's office, meets often an arrogant character than the police lieutenant carried away, exhausting himself in servile bows.

- – The people of Count Saint-Germain! shout the lackeys in the anteroom.

And sometimes perhaps the Jew says quietly to his brilliant coreligionist, leaning towards him as if for him ask for his protection: "All my compliments, my Brother Wolff, it is impossible to be more of a red heel, »

What they could not do in the Middle Ages with the Templars, the Jew did it with Freemasonry, in which he had founded all the particular secret societies—lières, who had walked in the shadows for so long.

After the countless volumes published on this subject, it seems to me pointless to repeat what all historians, Louis Blanc, in particular (1), wrote about the role played by the Freemasonry in the Revolution. It is no longer contested. per person as well as the management of all the lodges had not then passed into the hands of the Jews. The Portuguese Jew Paschales had founded, in 1754, a society of initiates, the Coliens, whose ideas were popularized by Saint-Martin. In 1776, the Jew Adam Weishaupt created the sect of the Illumined which had as its main goal the destruction of Catholicism.

The enigmatic Count of Saint-Germain went from town to town city, carrying the mysterious watchword, tightening the bundle of lodges between them, buying everywhere those (jui

(1) See in the History of the French Evolution the clapilrc JU from the second volume; The Mystical Revolutionaries.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FKANCB 261

were for sale, disturbing minds with prestige or nonsense spoken with imperturbable aplomb.

However, we must be careful not to get attached to these preparations of the Revolution, which are essential to study, strange and fantastic proportions that they have given playwrights and novelists. If the collapse is formidable, the means used to destroy the old France were actually quite simple.

The Freemasons had got rid of the only enemy that they had serious reason to fear in this society inattentive and frivolous: the Jesuit. Very clever, very perceptive, the Jesuit personified the French spirit in what it has of best, common sense, 1 love of letters, balance of the intelligence that made the 17th century so great in history; very informed, without being as well informed as Jul. he had and still has a certain gift of smelling the cosmopolitan adventurer, he guesses it instinctively, like U-P. Olivainl in Jack by Daudet, immediately guesses the contraband nobility of Ida Barency; he sees the point black in beings of this nature, not at all by default in ways that are sometimes correct, but at a certain lack of intellectual culture. The system Jesuit education, in addition, their logic exercises train men capable of thinking, of not let the words take hold (1).

(1) Josept) de Maislre has admirably explained this antagonism. "A body, an association of bodies which are iuvariable uieut towards Ufi cerlilin but, cannot (if there is no way to annihilate it), be comballu and rejiriiné only by a couiral association. However, the euuemi cepital, ualurcl, innate, irreconcilable of the enlightened, it is the Jesuit.

262 JEWISH FRANCE

A madman of these points of view, this adversary very mixed with the worldly affairs without feeling any of the passions beyond land was troublesome, and the supreme skill of the Freemasons; was to remove him from the theater in which they were going to act.

The Jesuits saw clearly the danger that threatened France, since, as early as 1774, Father de Beauregard had announced in the chair of Black Lady that a prostitute would be worshipped in this temple where he had just announced the word of God; but they did not suspect, at least one would believe, that It was the Jew who held the cards. The strength of the Jew then was his apparent weakness, as his weakness today is its cynically displayed strength, – colossal strength without doubt, but which is based on nothing, in the sense that it suffices– would require a few movements of the telegraph to confis– to spread this unduly acquired wealth throughout Europe.

The success achieved by men like the Count of Saint-Germain and Cagliostro is not surprising when, without undergoing the impression of what is distant, we judge these made by what is happening before our eyes. It is not necessary to understand to engage in great historical considerations, it is enough to bring the present closer

The kind of fascination exercised by the foreigner has always been the same. There are thousands of native French people, very considered and very honest, who will never enter into the large circles, which will open with two leaves in front

They feel, they discover each other like the dog and the wolf. Everywhere where we let them do it, one will have to devour the other.

Rabaud Saint-Etienne, Protestant and Protestant, summarized the question in one sentence: Without the preliminary abolition of the Jesuits, The French-speaking co-operation was impossible.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 263

Jewish speculators, slave traders, adventurers of all kinds countries. A Frenchman would come and ask one of our famous jewelers to sell him a twenty-pound ring on credit francs for his marriage, that the merchant would put it to the door, and the next day he will deliver three hundred thousand francs of jewels to a count of anyone, marquis of anything.

What is certain is that French society, which demanded formalities from a man of Jacob's worth Pereire welcomed with open arms the son of an Alsatian Jew named Wolff, who called himself the Count of Saint - Germain. He played a role in all the diplomatic intrigues - tics of his time, he was initiated into all the state secrets, and in these skeptical salons he did not find a contradic - tor, when this wandering Jew of Court affirmed that, gifted •one of eternal youth, he had been a contemporary of Jesus - Christ, and that he had rendered him good offices with Pontius Pilate. No one doubted that he was make diamonds at will. What's so surprising about that? Have we not seen Jules Ferry, this noble emancipated spirit of all vulgar prejudices, convinced that M™* Caiihava, armed with her magic ring, was going to reveal enough to him treasures in Saint-Denis to cover the deficit that the dilapidations and thefts of the Republic have dug into the budget of France.

Cagliostro's influence was even more considerable. This one traced his genealogy back to Charles-Martel, and Frédéric Bulau, in his Enigmatic Characters^el Mystical stories, shows us what to think of this fable.

The truth is probably less brilliant and less romantic,

2G4 JEWISH FRANCE

it is the inaction of Balsamo. Which allowed Balsamo to give himself for one of the descendants of Charles Maitel, is that his great-grandfather, on his mother's side, was called Mathieu Martello. Besides, he had his reasons for insisting on his maternal genealogy eternal much more than on his paternal genealogy, expected that he had probably met many Jews there. This Mathieu Martello had two daughters. The younger one married Vincenza a certain Joseph Cagliostro, born in Nuava and was the godmother of our adventurer. She gave him the baptismal name of her husband' but, subsequently, Joseph Balsamo took the family name of the godmother's husband, and added the title of count for him give something more important. This name change also served to confuse the curiosity of those who would have wanted to go back to its true origin.

Pietro Balsamo, the adventurer's father, had some in Italy, less serious in any case than those of Gambetta's uncle, who was unfortunately hanged; he got away with fraudulent bankruptcy, as the father of Chailemel-Lacour.

Long before the arrival of Cagliostro, at the very moment when Louis XVI ascended the throne, Queen Marie-Antoinette that Israel pursued with a special hatred, we will say everything at the time why, had already been attacked as queen and as a woman. The first of these pamphlets against the unfortunate sovereign who was to multiply Tnifini had been launched by a Jew. Here is what Mr. de says about it Lomenie, who had in his hands all the papers of Beaumarchais, and to whom the work entitled Beaumarchais and his time opened the doors of the French Academy.

Beaumarchais's zeal, not being able, because of his blame, to be used officially, it is always in the capacity of a secret agent that the government of Louis XVI sends him back to London in 1774. It was still a question of stopping the publication of a libel

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 265

which was considered dangerous. It was titled: Avis à la branche espagnole on his rights to the crown of France in the absence of her third. Under this guise of political dissertation, the pamphlet in question was especially directed against Queen Marie-Antoinette-clear; we did not know the author; we only knew that the publicity had been entrusted to an Italian Jew named Guillaume Angelucci, who in England bore the name of William Halkinincognito and who had enough money at his disposal to do print at the same time two considerable editions of his libel, one in London, the other in Paris. •

The complete liter of the work that recent controversies have made almost topical seems to have been: Dissertation extracted from a larger work or Notice import- both to the Spanish branch on its rights to the crown of France in the absence of landowners, and which may even be very useful to the whole Bourbon family, especially to the king Louis XVI. y. A. in Paris. MDCCLXXIV.

According to the story of Beaumarchais, the author of The Barber deSéville Aura'û succeeded for a sum of 500 pounds (75,000 francs), to buy back the Dutch edition and the edition English; then learning that the Jew, once paid, went fled with a copy that he intended to have reprinted, he would have pursued him across Germany, would have joined him in a wood near Nuremberg and, the gun on the throat, would have torn out this single copy. It was at this moment that Beaumaichais, surprised by thieves, would have was injured and would only have died on the arrival of his servants- ticks.

Even those who were willing to believe that Beaumar- chais had dramatized the situation and exaggerated the dangers that he had run had never questioned the reality redemption of the brochure and even of the i'Alle adventure"

266 JEWISH FRANCE

Magne that the innkeeper to whom we had trans- carried Beaumarchais wounded. But a certain school which has taken to the task of dishonoring all Christians, to make Jews are so many little saints, don't doubt anything.

Mr. d'Arnelh, who published some documents in Vienna on Marie-Antoinette of rather questionable authenticity, took it upon himself to claim, in a brochure entitled: Beau- tnarchais und Sonnenfels, which Beaumarchais had played an unworthy comedy, that he had fabricated the pamphlet himself- even that the Jew Angelucci had never existed.

Mr. Paul Huot translated this brochure in 1869, under this title: Beaumarchais in Germany, without anyone paid great attention to this paradox.

What surprises me is to see a scholar like Mr. Au- guste Vitu not to be afraid to adopt this singular ver- sion, in the excellent introduction that he put at the head of the

It is a serious matter, after all, to accuse of an action as low a writer who, however one judges the scope of his work, has nonetheless honored France by his talent. On what basis does Mr. Vitu accept—to accept Mr. d'Arnelh's words? I admit for a minute that Beaumarchais was the man that this last one paints for us—deny with a pen that I believe is slanderous. He had done to fabricate a libel, he had received 75,000 pounds for it buy back; the coup was successful, he just had to come back in France. Why run to Germany in search of Angelucci? Why, by imagining the story of an exempto please éciappô, to give such a poor idea of his skill at the time when he was aiming for diplomatic missions?

In my opinion, Mr. Vitu lacked critical sense in pro-speaking out against a compatriot, without investigating the motives which probably made Mr. d'Arnelh act Austria is for many years the prey of the Jews. The aristocracy, charming and generous, but a victim of her vices, is absolutely under the yoke of Israel; the true ambassador to Paris, as we have seen from the letters found—The one who is interested in this poor Count of Wimpfen is Baron Hirsch. Mr. d'Arnelh wanted to exonerate Israel from one of the unnamed—the misdeeds attributed to him in denigrating a writer French. It would have been worthy of Mr. Vitu to foil this ruse by engaging in a more in-depth study of the question which would have demonstrated to him that Mr. d'Arnelh accumulates the improbabilities on every line.

THE JL'IF IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 267

Had dishonored Marie-Antoinette, Israel, who holds a grudge tenacious and who pursues those who roll up to their fifth generation, took revenge on a sovereign who had persecuted him with a rigor worthy of the Middle Ages.

Maria Theresa had been the implacable enemy of the Jews; she had renewed against them all the human prescriptions — activists of the past, she had forced them to wear a long beard and to sew on the right arm of their garment a small piece of yellow cloth.

On December 22, 1744, it was published in Prague and throughout the kingdom of Bjhômc said following:

i" For various reasons, I decided to no longer tolerate in Tave—to banish the Jews into my hereditary kingdom of Bohemia. I want

Jew in the city of Prague, if we still find any there we will make them chased away by soldiers;

2* However, in order to arrange their affairs ^ dispose of their belongings that they could not take away before the last January, they were allowed to stay another month in Icreste of the kingdom,

268 JEWISH FRANCE

3 But at the end of six months all the Jews also shall come out of the whole kingdom of Bohemia;

4» Finally, this evacuation of the entire country will take place before the last-last day of June 1745.

Which shows how powerful the Jews already were everywhere, with what force was exercised this authority which, since the founding of the Universal Israelite Alliance^ manifest with more frankness and insolence, it is the liveliness with which certain European states intervened at the same time. The General States instructed the ambassa- The Dutch Prime Minister, Baron Van Barraenie, intervened. The English plenipotentiary, Knight Thomas Robinson, wrote a note as well. All they could get This was to push back until the end of March the time of the banishment; on this date, 28,000 Israelites had to leave Prague.

Thanks to new recommendations from Poland, from Denmark and Sweden, the Israelites obtained the autorisai ion (ie stay in Bohemia.

The aedile of May 26, 1745 stated: "His Majesty, by a effect of his natural clemency and in consideration of the powerful intercession of the King of Great Britain and the States General of the United Provinces, allows the nation Jewish to remain in the kingdom until further notice of Bohemia and to attend to the affairs of trade and others which are specific to this nation.

The Israelites of the Pas Pays had a medal placed on this occasion. The vexations, the onerous taxes, the humiliations did not multiply less against the Jews of Au-cheated.

The Jews acting through Freemasonry took revenge on Marie-Antoinette of what Marie-Thérèse had told them made to endure.

Never, since Christ, was Passion more painful than that of the sovereign that the people, who do not comprehend nothing of the horrors that he is encouraged to commit, had learned to hate under the popularized name of the Austrian by countless pamphlets. When we reread the details from this slow agony one wonders how a being human can suffer so much without dying; there is a refinement in the ignoble, an ingenuity in the torture morale, a skill in the art of dishonoring, of stirring up the iron in the wound, to make almost despair of God who bears the Jewish mark. It is at the Crucified One of Golgotha, I repeat, and I do not think that we see a sacrilege in my comparison is to the holy Victim drenched in gall, torn by thorns, overwhelmed by ignominies that one thinks when, without daring to dive to the bottom, we penetrate on the unspeakable suffering of this unfortunate woman, particular and special scars that neither Louis XVI, nor Ms. Elisabeth suffered to the same degree. The Necklace Affair is one of the most beautiful affairs that the Jewish Freemasonry has ever molded; it is a masterpiece-work of the genre; it has everything in it: satisfaction of revenge, the dishonor of the Church by the role that plays Cardinal de Rohan, and finally the money manipulation. What unanimity also throughout Europe to make the uproar around this scam of such a character. I mean in reality! As we see that the Jews drive the intrigue of the importance that the thing suddenly takes on! As later in the Salmon case (Affaire Noire), all starts moving at a signal and the most passionate are naturally those who are not in the secret.

270 JEWISH FRANCE

Jews appear everywhere in this speculation dirty. The first money given in black bills to M^{me} La Mothe, by the cardinal, had been provided by the Jew Cerfbeer, it was represented by three effects of ten thousand francs. The first ten thousand francs came, according to M^{me} La Mothe, from the old Poissy fund and had been given to the cardinal by Cerfbeer to whom he had given the entertainment company for the Count of Montbarrey. The other twenty thousand francs came, still according to her, from Cerfbeer that the cardinal had supported in his lease (1). »

Cagliostro, however, was not in these scandalous
Daleux a simple crook, nor even a vul-

It is a fact that I have noticed many laws, like to announce—to show by parables and figures the evil he is preparing. In the most secret of agents there is always the nabi.

Joseph Balsamo fulfills this role of warner and, in order that she was not unaware of it, came to declare to the queen that she belonged—was attached to Fate and that nothing could save her. Gambetta which, apart from a common origin, is close a lot of Balsamo, in conditions and environments different of course, readily used the same ones procedures than him; he willingly made the cowj; of the carafe, he confused people, disconcerted them by announcing in advance of majorities, by predicting the future. It is obvious that, if he had come across a real Frenchman of yesteryear, on a brave and loyal soldier with common sense and courage, we would have shot our nabi in a corner without anyone found fault with it. The strength of Jewish policy is precisely—It is important to rely on the fact that we can do anything we want. towards the French, given that the man of good sense and hair that would make the shot miss will no longer be encountered Never.

{I} Cam pardon: the Trial of the Necklace.

THE JEW IN HISTORY PE FRANCE 271

At the moment when, through the phenomenon of suggestion, Cagliostro showed the queen a severed head in a carafe, the fall of the Capetians was decided, in fact. In 1781, German Illuminism and French Illuminism had carried out their merger at the convent of Willemstad; the assembly of Freemasons in Frankfurt, in 1785, the death of the King of Sweden and that of the King and Queen of France had been decreed (1). The greatest lords

(1) These facts are aujourd'hui hors de doute. See on this subject the letter from Monsignor Cardinal Mathieu, dated April 7, 1873, and that of Monsignor the Bishop of Nîmes, dated January 17, 1878. published in the Univers. These two letters appear in the Œuvres of Monsignor Besson.

There is in my country, writes Cardinal Mathieu, a detail that I then give you as certain. There was in Frankfurt, in 1785, a—assemblies of Freemasons, where two men were summoned considerable figures from Besançon who were part of the company: Mr. de Reymond, postal inspector, and Mr. Mayor of Boulogne. Speaker of Parliament. In this meeting, the murder of the King of ligney returned dismayed, promising never to hand over the feet in a Lone, and to keep the secret. The last survivor "said it to Mr. Bourgon, who died at nearly ninety years of age, ■possessing all his faculties. You may have heard about it here, :ar he left a great reputation for probity, uprightness and firmness among us. I knew him well and for a long time long time, because I have been in Befançon for forty-two years. and it is died recently. He often told the story to me and others. You see which sect knows how to plan its moves in advance: this is where had two words his bi.-tory.

"PS – Mr. Bourgon was honorary chamber president at the Court.

272 L.\ JEWISH FRANCE

of France, the Duke of Larochevoucauld, the Duke of Biron, Lafayette, the Choiseuls, the Noailles were pushing from all sides their forces to the Revolution.

The work of Father Descliamps, Secret Societies and the society, contains the curious enumeration of the members of the Propaganda Lodge, almost exclusively recruited in the aristocracy. The composition of the Lodge of Versailles is perhaps even more interesting. The inspirers occult of Masonry, by a rather witty irony, had baptized this Lodge Saint-Jean de la Candeur, and it was indeed necessary to have a strong dose of candor great lords, to conspire against themselves in joining a Society that would "strip them and put them naked like little Saint Johns.

Mr. Abbot Davin discovered, at the castle of Elément, the minutes of this Lodge, from March 21, 1775 to March 20 1782. 0 It is, he tells us (1), a small folio of 340 pages, bound in red leather, decorated on the spine and corners with symbols' Masonic: compass, square, king's foot, plumb line, level, olive branch, it bears this title:

Register

deliberations and receptions

made in the St-Jean lodge of Candor

to the glory of the Great Architect of the Universe

ious the auspices of the Serenisima

Grand Master

5115

(1) Bossuet, Port-Royal and Freemasonry.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 273

This register is a d'Hozier. The most beautiful names are represented there. Women rub shoulders with men. There we find the sister of the Marquise de Choiseul-Gouffier, the sister Marquise de Courtebonne, the sister Marquise de Monfmaure, the sister Countess of Blache, the sister Viscountess of Faudoas. We find there, in the order of the inscriptions, the Marquis of Arcinbal, the Marquis of Lusignan, the Marquis of Hautoy, the Marquis of Gramont-Caderousse, the Viscount of La Rochefoucauld, the Marquis of Tavrin-court, the Count of Launay, the Viscount of Espinclié, the Marquis of Saint-Simon, the Count of Busançois, the Count of Goudon, the Count of Damascus, the Viscount of Grammont, the Count of Imécourt, the Knight of Escars, the Viscount of Bethune, the knight of La Châtre, the Marquis of Jumilhac, the Count of Clermont-Tonnerre, the Marquis of Clermont-Gallerande, the Marquis of Ferronnays, the Baron of Montesquieu, etc., etc.

The Most Serene Grand Master was the Duke of Orleans. Monfjoie described to us the ceremonies he had to undergo submit to be received as a knight Kadosch (1).

To be admitted to the rank of knight Kadosch, he said, Louis-Philippe Joseph was introduced by cini{ Freemasons called Brothers, in a dark room. At the back of this room was the representation of a cave containing illuminated bones by a sepulchral lamp. In one of the corners of the room, there was placed a mannequin covered with all the ornaments of royalty, and, in the middle of this room, a double ladder had been erected.

When Louis-Philippe-Joseph was introduced by the five Fières, he was made to lie on the ground, as if he were dead; in this

(1) History of the LPJ d'Orléans conspiracy.

to repeat all the oaths he had made. He was then made to an emphatic portrayal of the rank he was to receive, and, one exit that he should swear never to confer it on any Knight of Malta. These first ceremonies finished, he was allowed to get up; told him to climb to the top of the ladder, and when he was at the bottom—to lower the rung, they wanted him to let himself fall, he obeyed, and then they shouted to him that he had reached the nec plus ultra of the Masonnerie.

Immediately after this fall, he was armed with a dagger, and ordered it to be pushed into the crowned mannequin: which he executed—cuta. A blood-colored liquid spurted from the wound onto the candi-dat and flooded the pavement. He was also ordered to cut off the head of this figure, from there hold raised in the right hand, and keep the blood-stained dagger in his left hand; which he did 1

Then he was told that the bones he saw in the cave were those of Jacques de Molai, Grand Master of the Order of Templars and that the man whose blood he had just shed and whose bloody lot he held in his right hand, was Philippe the Fair, King of France. He was instructed in more than the sign of the rank to which he was promoted consisted of putting his right hand on the heart, then extend it horizontally, and let it fall—ber on the knee, to mark that the heart of a knight Kadosch was disposed to revenge. It was also revealed to him that the touching between the Kadosch knights was given by taking hands as if to protect himself.

Can one imagine a more singular spectacle than that of this prince of the blood striking a king of France and holding his bloody head in his right hand?

These simpletons of so much wit, these ambitious and these impostors, dupes of stronger people who led them, do not had little doubt that by inviting them to rebuild the temple of Solomon, who was of no interest to them, they were invited to serve as instruments for the demolition of this noble edifice of old France, which for so many centuries had sheltered them

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 275

all: nobility, third estate and people. They would have been very surprised if they had been told that before less than a hundred years the most beautiful castles in the country would belong to Jews

When the catastrophes that are plaguing us have occurred, nacent it will be very instructive to compare this list of great lords who made the Revolution the list toe^ members of the center right and the center left who made the

no doubt, but there are many honest people there in the sense worldly of the word, of the owners, of the manufacturers, some ordinary Casimir Périers, much more guilty certainly the Jew who spits on Christ and the expelled from school out of racial hatred.

What thoughts will these men have when they are not only condemned themselves, but that they will see, like the victims of the Terror, their wives, their they, doomed to a sad death, and they will say to themselves: If it is our work! " This is what would be interesting to know, this is a spicy spectacle for an artist and a thinker. I have two or three friends in the advanced parties to which I have been literary pleasant, which have always pleased me promised to let me see this before shooting me, but Will they keep their word? Will they be able to keep it?

The Duke of Orleans, the head of French Freemasonry, who openly conspired against his cousin, had not the excuse of ignorance; it was intimately linked with the luifset knew that they were the ones who ran the Masonry-Count de Gleicher, in his book entitled: Facts remarkable, tells that, during his trip to England-land, the Duke of Orleans had received from Rabbi Falk-Scheck "a talisman ring, a Kaiuaoih which was to ensure him the throne; this ring (1), although the prophecy did not made for Philippe-Egalité, appears to have been known on pledge of the incomprehensible craze that all the Or-Léans, apart from the eldest son of Louis-Philippe, have always had for the Jews.

*76 THE JWIVli FHANGE:

A few wise ones, among those who are never listened to, did they have at that moment a vague notion of what was really in question: the empire of Israel? One would suppose so; because, at this time, we see some publications appearing where the name of the Jew comes up quite often associated, one cannot not to say to the martyrdom of the monarch, Louis XVI is not a martyr, whatever has been said, since he did not accomplish his duty and that he did not defend the people whose guard was entrusted to him, but to the sufferings of this poor honest man man. In particular, in 1790, people shouted in the streets a duck of some leaves: The Passion, and the death of Louis XVI, King of the Jews and Christians. – In Jerusalem-lem. The epigraph read: Popidus meus, quid feci tibi 9

At the head was a curious engraving; it represented the king crowned and wearing the fleur-de-lis mantle put in

In the background the Assembly deliberates while in the front guns are pointed at her.

(1) If we are to believe the author of Judaism in France, this ring, that Philippe-Egalile was still wearing at the time of going up to the escalator—must have been given by him to a Jewess, Julielle GomicIiau.T, who wire passed to the Duke of Cliartres. Louii-I'liilippe kept this liijou until his death, and transmitted it at the moment of expiring to the Paris committee. The ring being too big for him, it was sent to Paris II Jewish jeweler named Jacques, in whose window he would have been some—that Leuips e.xpodé.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 277

In the text, Philippe d'Orléans is Judas Iscariote, Bailly Pilate, Lafayette Caiphe.

“Eli, Eli lamraasabbacthani, my people, my people Darling, why did you abandon me?

It is in vain that the poor king addresses this desperate appeal—perished to the French. The plebs led by the leaders foreigners respond; “He is not our king, we do not want him—
We do not know any other kings for our king.
than the Caesars of the suburbs and our twelve hundred sovereigns...
To the lantern! To the lantern! >

The New Calvary, an engraving published a little earlier late and which was sold at Webert, at the Palais-Royal, Ga-woodwork, No. 203, formed a complete picture. No. i, Louis XVI tied by the rebels to a cross that sur-rises the Phrygian cap; at the bottom we read, on a table of proscription, the name of the three Rohans, of Condé, of Bouille, of Mii'abeau, of Lambesc. Nos. 2 and 3: Monsieur and Monsei-Lord the Count of Artois bound by the decrees of the factious.
No. 4: Robespierre straddles the Constitution, followed by the Gentleman Jacoquine, presents the sponge on the end of a pike soaked in the bile of her regicidal motions. No. 5: The Queen Overwhelmed with grief, she shows her husband to her brothers and solicits—cites prompt revenge. No. 6: The Duchess of Polignac at the foot of the cross. No. 7: Monseigneur the Prince of Condé draws his sword and prepares to avenge his king (1).

The vast majority of the nation had no idea what he was made to do. The Jews, who ruled France—

(1) See also: The Possession of Jesus of the true Catholics by the Jewish schiiiiuittque^ of the department and of your municipality: of

278 JEWISH FRANCE

Masonry, took care, as one can imagine, not to show what it was about and remained behind the curtain.

The Jewish question, strictly speaking, hardly inspired any sympathy in France. The Royal Society of Sciences and Arts de Metz had however established a prize for the best thesis on how to improve the lot of Jews. The prize that was to be awarded in 1787 was only awarded August 23, 1788. It was Abbé Grégoire who obtained this prize with his essay on physical, moral and regeneration Jewish policy.

The work of Abbot Gregory, said Ræderer in a first report, resolves almost all the difficulties. It is illuminated by the politics, history and morality. A healthy philosophy and sometimes sublime is shown there with dignity, with brilliance... but the work is shapeless and indigestible, the materials are poorly arranged. seen.

The alterations made by the author made disappear some of these disadvantages without removing—to see at work its character of mediocrity.

While not hiding his sympathies for the Jews, Abbot Gregory defended them somewhat in the manner of Lacre—such, he painted a heartbreaking picture of how they squeezed the unfortunate people who had dealings with them.

Unfortunate inhabitants of Sundgau! Reply if you have any—core force. Isn't this frightening picture that of the state to which many Jews have reduced you?

Your land, once fertile and which enriched your fathers, produces barely a coarse loaf to a crowd of their nephews, and creditors, as merciless as they are rogues, are still fighting with you the price of your sweat? With what would you cultivate them from now on? these fields of which you have only a precarious enjoyment? Your livestock, your farming tools have been sold for

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 279

to satisfy vipers, to pay only part of the usurious rents accumulated on your heads. No longer able.*here—to destroy the fertility of the earth, you are all reduced to cursing the ceïlo of your wives who gave birth to unfortunate people. We do not left only arms withered by pain and hunger and if he you still have rags to attest to your misery and the"

tear them off (1).

I don't know why the Jews didn't have this passive on the pedestal of the statue that they raised with our money to Abbot Gregory (2). As for the idea of a man

(1) To know well all that this paper can bring which» it has been said, bear everything, we must bring closer this picture drawn by an ardent friend (the affirmations of Renan in a conference given at ■ Saint-Simon circle, and which had been begged by the Jew Mayrargues. Treasurer of the circle:

"When the National Assembly, in 1791, decreed emancipation of the infidel, she paid extremely little attention to the race. She felt that men were to be judged not by the sanctuary that flows in their veins, but by their moral and intellectual value.

(2) We know the sad role played later by this apostate, who betrayed consequently all the causes, and of which Mr. Jules Simon has not fears to praise. On a mission in Savoy, he stole in writing to the condemnation of Louis Capet by the Convention, without appeal or sur-". Later he declared, with the cunning that characterized him, that he had understood by these words that Louis XVI "was condemned to live." Appointed Commander of the Legion of Honor, Senator, Count of the Empire by Napoleon, whom he overwhelmed with the basest flatteries, The former Jacobin was one of the first to demand the forfeiture of his benefactor, and he dared to go to meet Louis XVIII in his handsome costume as a senator of the Empire. Excluded from the Chamber of peers, expelled from the House of Representatives, • as indigne, » struck off the list of members of the Legion of Honor, he was rejected even by Louis-Philippe. Greedy, as much as scheming, the Count Gregory proBla however of the revolution of 1830 for to have Crémieux claim the arrears of his former salary Senator. These are the men to whom statues are erected!

280 JEWISH FRANCE

who says: "Here is the plague, I ask that it be inoculated with whole country," it fits into these conceptions that he I can't understand.

In any case, Gregory's efforts will have had a result. The picture he paints of a corner of France in 1788 could apply to the whole of France in 1888. With some new loans, two or three financial companies—and some roundups like that of the General Union, The Jews will have quickly taken away from us the little they have agreed to leave us until now.

had inspired a number of memoirs and brochures. Under this title: The Cry of a Citizen Against the Jews, Mr. de Foissac published a violent protest against the conduct of the Israelites in Alsace and Lorraine.

Dom Chais, Benedictine in Saint-Avold and former parish priest of Gharleville, proposed to use the speed of the Jews to race to carry administrative messages; he re-also said that they were employed in the harvest of honey from which they are very fond of it. He added in a second memoir that Jews are birds of prey that must be cut off the beak and the talons.

Mr. Haillecourt believed that, to ensure the happiness of Jews and the tranquility of Christians, it was necessary to transport all the Israelites in the deserts of Guyana.

We see that no major current of opinion existed in in favor of the emancipation of the Jews.

When the Constituent Assembly met, some Israelites from Paris, MM. Mordecai, Polack, Jacob Trenel, Goldsmidt rentiers, and J. Lazard, jeweler, joined forces to solicit of the Assembly the emancipation of the Israelites of France.

By a singular chance, the Constituent Assembly had to deal with the same day of the two beings so despised in the past, who hold the top of the pile in our society of hams and gamblers-tors. The question was whether the members of these two interesting corporations would be admitted to the functions public. For the actors the thing suffered little from difficulties, but the discussion was lively when we approached the question of the Jews.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 281

The debate that began on September 21, 1789, continued the following days. A far-sighted gentleman, Mr. de Cler-Mount Thunder, did not fail to take up the defense of the Jews; one of his descendants, moreover, was, I believe, forment scalded in the General Union affair (i).

M. de la Fare, Bishop of Nancy, came to tell a pretty anecdote that has been often recalled about others Jews (2). "One day," he said, "when I had gone to the in the middle of a riot to try to restore calm, a seditious people approached me and said: Ah, sir, If we were to lose you, we would see a Jew become our bishop, so skillful are they in seizing everything,

Abbot Maury spoke a few words of reason and showed by the example of Poland, what was going to become of the France put to the soil by the Jew.

(1) This friend of the Jews himself was taken away from this bad speech who was our bad aclioo. n 11 had seen, from the morning of August 10 1792, says Count de Reiset, in his work Modes et Usages in the time of Marie-Antoinette, investing in her hotel in which one claimed there were weapons. Torn from the arms of his [•'mme and "induced to his seclusion, he was found innocent and sent back to him. When he was returning there, a cook, whom he had chased away, roused the people against him. After having harangued him, he received a blow on the leg of threads and runs away to Madame de Brassac's, rue de Vaugirard. Or He continued to the fourth floor where he was killed.

(2) Who does not know the words of Monseigneur Dupanloup, about Jules Simon: "He will be cardinal before me."

16.

282 JEWISH FRANCE

The Jews, he said, have lived through 17 centuries without mixing with others. nations; they have never traded anything but money, they have were the scourges of the agricultural provinces. None of them ennobled still his hands while steering the plowshare and the plow. In Poland, they own a large province: well! the sweats of the es-Christian claves water the furrows where the opulence of the Jews germinates who, while their fields are thus cultivated, weigh ducats and calculate what they can take from the currencies without ex-to impose the penalties imposed by law.

They own 12 million mortgages on land in Alsace, in a month they will own half of this province; in ten years they will have completely conquered it and it will not will be more than a Jewish colony.

A representative of Alsace, hardly suspected of retro-ranks, but who knew the Jews since he had them seen at work, Rewbell, confirmed the accuracy of these facts.

Camille Desmoulins, who spoke about the questions without to know, did not fail, like all republicans today, to take sides with the foreigner against his compatriots. Rewbell replied to this supporter of the Semites, who were then called Africans, a few lines which deserve to be mentioned. After having engaged the panegyrist Jews to go for a little trip to Alsace, PæwbeU added: "Even humanity, after a few hours of

from the numerous, hardworking and brave class of my informed compatriots oppressed and pressured in the manner the most atrocious by the greedy band of these crowded Africans in my country.

Robespierre, very advanced in Freemasonry, whose father, Venerable of the lodge of Arras, had been one of the zealous propagators in France – which explains the popularity of the son – declared himself for the Jews.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 283

Talleyrand, who, like Voltaire, had a Jewish soul, likewise; he too guessed well that the eternal enemies– Christ's place was behind everything that was happening, he negotiated with them to have his share in the immense traffic which was going to be done on the property of the Clergy (1).

The Assembly, very embarrassed, postponed the solution. decree of July 28, 1790 only states that • all Jews known as Portuguese, Spanish and Avignon residents, would continue to enjoy the rights they had enjoyed until then and which had been granted to them by letters patent. •

On April 30, 1791, the deputies, who supported the Jews, returned to the charge, but the Assembly declares that it does not intend to prejudge anything on the question of the Jews, which has been and which is adjourned.

On September 27, 1791, the Assembly had again to deal with this serious subject. Dupont skillfully made a social question a religious question and tried to place on the ground of freedom of worship.

(ly The clergy of the diocese of Aulnoy clearly live to the Jews. Honestly, he obeyed the bishop, and he did not hide from him what he]>was of his conduct. When the apostate engaged the priests and the vicars of Saône-et-Loire to submit to the decrees, or knows the response he received.

"My Lord,
"Your apostasy surprised no one. Stopped at this point of opprobrium where nothing can debase or degrade in reputation, you must aspire to "oneself" even iniquity and receive the stormy fruit. But if you had been afraid to find accomplices in the disrespectful ministers to whom you address your letter, all of you strangely abused sermons. We only willingly imitate those we esteem. The sacrilegious sycophant of the churches! The lawyer of the Jews! What

Mr. deBrogliti tried to have it put into the law: "That the taking of the civic oath by Jews would be regarded as a formal renunciation of civil laws and policies to which Jewish individuals were everywhere submitted.

A representative, named Prugnon, whom the Jews had won, opposed this motion, on the pretext that the laws The civil laws of the Jews were identified with their religious laws. According to Prugnon, it was France that had to submit to the Jews and not the Jews to France.

The Assembly, visibly tired of these debates, decreed in these terms Dupont's motion:

The National Assembly, considering that the necessary conditions to be a French citizen are set by the Constitution and that any man who, meeting the said conditions, takes the oath civic and undertakes to fulfill the duties that the Constitution imposes, is entitled to all the advantages it provides,

Revokes all adjournments, reservations, exceptions inserted in the previous decrees relating to Jews who will serve—civic responsibility which will be regarded as a renunciation of all privileges and exemptions previously introduced in their favor.

Revvbell returned to the charge and demanded that

(t) The good and pious Madame Elisabeth clearly perceived the misfortunes that this measure would attract on the branch. "The Assembly," wrote to Madauie de Bombelles, put the finishing touch to all his nonsense and irre-religious by giving Jews the right to be admitted to all jobs. I can only tell you how angry I am about this decree. But God has his days of vengeance, and, if he suffers evil for a long time, he will not punishes him with no less force.

In a speech delivered in May 1872, Crémieux mocked gently the innocent victim who was more foresighted than the policies.

THE JEW IN HISTORY DS FriANCE :.S3

the Assembly. If it were held for the Jews, it would have some pity for the Christians of Alsace.

to 4.5 million in both capital and interest. If we consider that the debtors' meeting does not amount to 3 million and that the Jews are not people to lend millions on 3 million of valiant, one ^era convinced that there are at least, on these claims? millions ij" wear.

The Assembly decreed that the Jews would be obliged to provide within one month a justification of their receivables, so that an equitable liquidation could be carried out. of these claims.

Naturally, no follow-up was given to this. measure. When you make a Jew pay for his food, you you are singularly clever.

The Jew was in France!

The news circulated from town to town, awakening hope-rancid in the most distant ghettos, bursting the thanksgiving to the Holy Blessed One in all the temples, in all the synagogues, in all the schools. The October 21, 793, a Hebrew canticle, by Moyse Enshaim, sung in the synagogue of Metz to the tune of the Marseil-ease, proclaimed the triumph of Israel.

The mysterious word, the decisive incantation of Hermes Trismegistus, whom they had so long sought at the bottom of their laboratories the old alchemists of the Middle Ages leaning over their hieroglyphs, was finally found! For to decompose, to dissolve this France of which all the plots were holding up so well, a few calls to the Frater-unity, to the love of men, to the ideal had been more powerful than all the spellbook formulas.

has

28G THE JEWISH FRANCK

The old Kal)l)ale was over, the new one was beginning. The Jew was no longer going to be the cursed sorcerer, which Michelet shows us performing his evil deeds in the darkness from the night, it transforms, it operates in broad daylight; the pen of the journalist replaces the ancient baguette. We can break !>' magic mirror; to the fantastic apparitions of yesteryear will be succeeded by prestige of a completely intellectual order, which AM will show the poor dupes the disappointing image of a happiness that always flees.

What were we told about this naive Schylock demanding a not a scrap of the body of the Christian that the Jew asks for, \, it is the whole body, it is the body of hundreds of thousands of Christians who will rot on the fields of battle of the world in all the wars that will be appropriate to Israel's interests to undertake (1).

What's the matter of a few ducats to be cut? billions that the goy will now sweat. We will stir gold by the shovelful in banks, credit institutions, loans of all kinds, national loans, foreign loans, war loans, loans of peace, loans from Europe, Asia, America, loans from Türkiye, loans from Mexico, loans from Honduras, loans from Colombia... These brave people of kings of the past did not know how to "work," as they say in

(1) Mr. Le Play saw this transformation well. "An influence The news, he said, also tends to ease the scourge of war; it is that of certain money handlers who, supported by the "European Stock Exchanges" rumour mill, which cuts scandalous fortunes leuses on the eni{,ruuts, contracted for the costs of the war and for the excessive ransoms imposed today on the vanquished. {The Cons-institution enseriiwUe.)

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 257

Scholarship; they had a paternal heart at heart; after having made France the world's leading nation, dazzled the universe of their grandeur, built from Versailles and Fontainebleau, they stopped in despair in the face of a deficit of fifty-two million. Let it be, the Jew will show what the French can do; they are big to feed the Israelites of both hemispheres, for Jacob is good brother, and wants everyone in the family to have a share in the party.

Bewitchment, moreover, is both spell and charm. fully successful this time. By a singular hallucination-lière, this serf of the Jew, more enslaved than ever was beast of burden of the Pharaohs, believes himself to be the freest, the most proud, the smartest of men.

Look at it, however, you who have preserved voli'e reason, as this abominable old regime had left it.

Field or city worker, he is at peace a land where there are only French people like him. Peasant, he dances in the evening to the musettes, he sings these beautiful rounds ancestors whose distant echo sometimes delights us in a its brotherhoods, where people gather to pray for the com-dead companions or to hear mass before going have dinner together on the day we receive a master. We like this work that we have the leisure to do well and that we take up by this pretty preoccupation with art which enchants us in the the smallest remnants of the past. The militia, which takes ten thousand men per year and only those who have a taste for the regime-ment, does not weigh very heavily on the country, and it is cheerfully that the village leads to the next town soldier of the king's armies.

Now look at this Pariah of our great cities

288 THE JEWISH FUANCE

industrial, bent under devouring labor, worn out before the age to enrich his masters, stupefied by drunkenness, healthy, he has become again what the ancient slave was, according to Aristotle, a living instrument, ernpliukon organon.

We must warm up this human machine, we must damned of life, to which the Jewish newspapers taught that there is no more sky, tears himself away for a moment from the awful reality that weighs on him. We invented alcohol. More of these, good fresh wines which sometimes went to the head, but whose slight intoxication flew away in a song; in their place horrible mixtures of vitriol and acetic acid which give delirium iremens after a few years, but which at the time galvanize the body a little asleep.

No matter! The spell still holds. Listen to this unfortunate, lying drunk in the street, who gets up with difficulty-ably so as not to be crushed by someone's car Rothschild, of an Ephrussi, of a Gamondo; he remembers in his delirium of biblical jargon that his exploiters learned to speak and he whispers: c(It's true, all of even, that the French Revolution was a new '^•aaï i»

m

LA RÉVOLimOS El LE .T>KMIK.i; Eml'JUS

The Jew during the Revolution. – David and Marat. – The flight of the Furniture Repository. – Jewish Fiddling and the Directory. – N«{m>- Was iéoQ 1" a Semite? – The Empire and Frauc-MaçoDneiiu.

– The {;raad Sauhedrin. – The noble homage paid by the Jews:» of the Papacy and the Christian Clergy. – In^iratilude of the Jew from that he was the master. – The insults to Pius IX. – What one would have to be done in 1806. – The opinion of Portails. – The Jewish invasion.

– Repressive measures. – The decree of 1808. – Obligation forced Jews to take a name. – Jewish names. – Mayer, Jkleyer and Maier. – The census of the Jews under Napoleon ^^

– Marshal Ney and the Jews. – Kujiture of the Jews with Napoleon. – Rothschild at Waterloo. – A mistake by Mi-«•hellet.

17

THE EETOLUNOS AND THE PREILIEU ENPIEE

Where is the Jew during the Ptevolution? – on the roads.
He looks for a corner that suits him, he enters by h» breach opened, it takes root in that society of which or has just broken the frames. The opportunity is good, indeed.
In the almost deserted towns where the scaffold has been to knock off the heads of the most honest and intelligent, 'i\ no longer has to fear this vigilant attention which he would have been the object in this old world where, old and young, chaeach knew each other from having prayed together in church, held together by a thousand traditional bonds, supported each other, loved each other May.

From the beginning, the Revolution had, like the Republic
Jewish today, the character of an invasion. The element French disappeared, as today, in front of a gathering of strangers who took over all the im-carrying and terrorized the country. "All the scum boiled, said Mr. ForueroD(l). Switzerland gave us Marat, Hulin, Clavière, Pache, Saladin; the Walloon countries sent Theroigne, Prolys, Clools/Pereyra. Fleuriot, all leaders of murderers; the downtrodden of all languages were welcomed as brothers by those of Paris who claimed to fix the destinies of France and perhaps those of the human race.

To this list we must add Poles like Lazowski, Germans commo " ^ " ^ ' < ^ t Clinrles ce

292 JEWISH FRANCE

Hesse; Italians like Gorani, Pufourni, Manini, Pio

Maichena. In this invasive flood, the Jew passes imperceived.

Pereyra, Marat's inseparable friend, Gobel's friend, who pushes this unfortunate man to the sacrilegious comedies that one knows, is authentically Jewish; according to a tradition cons-aunt, Simon, the executioner of Louis XVII, was Jewish (4).

It has also been claimed that David was of Jewish origin, as the name tends to suggest, and one can explain—would thus, through racial hatred, justify the outrages inflicted on the king and queen by a man whom the old regime had filled with blessings.

What do you say about Marat? Mara is the real name. family was expelled from Spain, she took refuge in Sardinia, then in Switzerland and, unable to admit to being open-Jewish, she became a Protestant. With the leprosy that eats away at him, the filth in which he lives, the hatred he testifies for the Christian society, it is indeed there a son of Judaizers, a Maranian responding to the stakes from Spain by the guillotine of France.

Mr. Taine certainly foresaw this when he spoke mixed races that produced this monstrous being, but, He, too, has been circling around the issue. What he has done well highlighted in his lysychology of the Jacobin leaders (2),

(I) This Siuioa was one of the first and one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the secularization of hospitals. "One day," Goret said daus Hon Térnoiymicjc, madauie Elisabelli bereaved him as if his sick wife was going to the Ilôiel-Dieu.

— Ali! It's a pleasure, he said, to see the ladies today. of the ilôiel-Dieii, f.cssout dressed comuie luareiuoie, like you, ui pla^, no less.

(i) Ori(jimi Ut' lu Contemporary Fiance. The Revolution, volume III

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 293

It is the efat menfal island Marat, which begins with the mania from persecution to homicidal mania.

Marat's madness is, however, special: it is neurosis. Jewish. Among the boldest in their doctrines, none no Christian foreigner would think of going to London, to Berlin, in St. Petersburg, calmly say: "We must do 270,000 heads fall in this country. :» We wouldn't dare; the

This intellectual audacity, this enormous impudence which we have spoken about often, because we meet her at every step, in financial companies as in political enterprises, have as their basis an idea imprinted-been in the brain for centuries. Religion, which teaches the Jew that he is superior to other men, that he must destroy everything that is not him, that everything which is on earth belongs to him, is the powerful vehicle of these delusional conceptions of a particular form, it is the first principle of these theories, it constitutes the secret and invisible logic of these incomprehensible aberrations-possible for the superficial.

The classic phrase "the hideous Marat" is not correct only half. No doubt, the lipless mouth, contracted by a kind of trismus, is fierce, but the eyes are beautiful; if they sparkled with fury in the Varat at the tribune of Simon Petit, they are almost soft in the portrait of Boze and in that of M^{lle} Alais. The Marat at the Bajazet, the Marat wearing a turban like a scarf whose knot forms an aigrette, resembles an old Jew from the Orient.

Take a close look at the Canuivah Museum^t the i>or(rail which was part of the Saint ALL'in and sinlout collection the biscuit bust, you will see rhailuciné, the neuro-

294 JEWISH FRANCE

pathe; you will discover there, as in Robespierre, moreover, as in many actors of these scenes tragic, this asymmetry in the two sides of the face which reveals an unbalanced being.

The wax modeled almost immediately after the shot of the heroine's knife, by M^{lle} Tussaud. very skillful, one knows, in this kind of work, and that we were in charge of it usually gives the same impression. This time we we have a hand, a hand with slender fingers, which is not the grip of a murderer, of a violent person, of a bloodthirsty person who strikes himself, but of a completely theoretical villain. The suddenly deadened on this face calmed the dominant, the deep within the Jew, a great sadness, almost touching.

No doubt there was more than one Jew among these organiza-Jacobin societies which fell from who knows where to denounce, proscribe, send good people to the guillotine. I don't think much thought was given to it then to ask them for their papers.

When the taste for these studies on the Jewish movement in France, which we hardly mention in this work draw the general plan, will be spread, of patients looking-chors will have the idea of searching the departmental archives- tales from this point of view, to inquire about the time at which some inhabitants arrived in the country and; in the In most cases, I am convinced, they will find a Semitic origin to families in which hatred of priest is hereditary.

In Paris, the first concern of the Jews is to show themselves worthy of their emancipation, was to rush to the Crown diamonds; they played the main role in the robbery of the Garde-Meuble. I have recounted this pillage (read Garde Meuble, still so obscure, buried <the so much of mypleas (1). One would think one saw a symbol there. The spec- tackle of these treasures, patiently accumulated during in- countless generations, royal crowns, chalices offered by Suger, jewels given by Richelieu, magnificent souvenirs- fiques and glorious, sown in the streams by the fugitives, shared in haste on the banks of the Seine, buried there some pond, lying around in all the taverns, hidden under rags, is he not like the very image of everything the brilliant past of this France, delivered ^\^x hordes of the cosmopolitan revolution?

THE JUIR IN the history of fp.axce 295

Like the affair of the Necklace set up by Cagliostro, the toI of the Garde-Meuble had the character proper to all the entre- Jewish catches; he attached himself from above to the superior poli- superior of Freemasonry, he served below to make earn some money for Israel.

The long-standing negotiations between the German Freemasons and French Freemasons, to obtain the retreat of the Prussian army, remained in suspended? due to lack of financial resources; the diamonds of the Garde-Meuble provided the necessary funds to purchase Brunswick.

D'Allonville, in his black fictions, is very explicit on this point t 2;.

The Commune of Pans, he wrote, as Damouriez had not did not delay in plotting to try to save his san- glante domination. Dohm, whose name is found in all the occult neo-sociaJions of the Prase, which, during the insurrections

(1) neviie of In Re'i'olution (March 5, April 3 and May 3, 1885).

(2) Secret Memoirs, volume III.

296 Jewish France

I Belgium, had become friends with Abbé Tondou, a journalist then at Horve, and since Minister of Foreign Relations under the name of 'obrun; Dohm in correspondence with the French Jacobins by a man named Benoît had, from the beginning of the campaign, made com-[I melted to Madame de Rilz, drew Lucchesini and to Lombard very credit near PVédéric-Guillaume, the advantages that he could personally draw from a secret agreement with France and those that (This power would provide the natural enemy of the Aulrith^: but the loyalty of the Prussian monarch and his desire to save the family royal prisoner put an obstacle to the very pronounced wish of his entourage to whom, moreover, gold and lots of gold were needed in order will determine them to satisfy the desires of those that the monarchs-ques had a horror.

To overcome this double obstacle it was necessary to ruin the Prussian army and the slowness of the Duke of Brunswick there-want to collect these things; I am sure to corrupt the ministers Prussians, and the diamonds of the Furniture Market supplied it.

Billaud-Varennes, who left Paiis after the massacres of the 2nd and 3rd September, had, from the H, surrendered to the army and had begun the negotiations in which the amounts promised and not yet paid are delayed only the conclusion, 2 to 3 million, fruits of the plunder of the \0 August, were all that the Paris Commune possessed and this was not-was not enough. Why don't you have the Furniture Repository robbed? cried Panis, and the thing took place on September 16, by the care of Tal-link and Danton, which provided, in various values, a sum thirty million.

Initial openings had facilitated Dumouriez's escape from a position in which he would have been lost without resources; from other-very prevented him from being deposed during the cannonade of Valmy; and from the 22nd to the 28th the negotiations were, as we have-already said, followed actively.

Crown diamonds long fueled the trade of the Jews of Germany. Danton and Fabre d'Eglandine, whom M""^ Roland accuses so formally of theft, euient their share of the plunder. Some subordinate Jews who had left to take were brought to trial alone.

said the Bulletin of the Criminal Court, which had to undergo the sanction of the law, was a Jew named Louis Lyre, born in London and aged 28, working as a merchant in the district tier Beaubourg. He had been accused of having participated in the looting committed on the nights of 2, 13 and 15 September and to have sold, during this month, to a certain Moyse Trenel, pearls and diamonds, his share in the proceeds of the theft. He left a dying will, and on October 43, 1792, at ten o'clock and a half in the evening, he suffered his punishment, showing courage and composure worthy of a better cause.

Another Jew, living on Rue des Vieux-Augustins, Delcampo, who called himself Deschamps, was also executed.

All the Jews of Paris were involved in the affair. We found— We go to the Dacosta debars, always willing to do good to do, Lyon Rouef, fairground merchant and innkeeper, rue Beaubourg, as well as his wife Leyden, Israel, Aaron Hombergue, the Angles father etfids who sell to the Jew Benedict Salmon a large quantity of diamonds. This S;dmon had already profited the opportunity to buy 150,000 francs of fine pearls.

Some appear to have been more fearful or more scrupulous than Trenel and Salmon. We read in the Thermomix of the day, written by Dulaure and B. Chapet, at the date of Monday, September 24, 1792:

"A trenloine of diamonds from the Garde-Meuble were submitted in a letter to the Deputy Clerk of the Communed by Messrs. Anselme and You, Jews, to whom we had offered to buy them.

The Crown Diamonds, in any case, have no luck with the Republicans and with the Jews. The first Republic lets them or makes them fly; the Emnirc and .a

i7

298 THE JEWISH rv.\ycE

Monarchy roconsilnent this marvelous Treasure; sons la Current republic, the Jew Lockroy connects with the hook-nosed merchants who gather in the sounds— Swedish coffee soil and, to facilitate an operation for Israel— lucrative ration, proposes and has accepted a law authorizing the sale of all these memories of the past.

It was the Jews who organized the pillage of the faith in the genius of our medieval image-makers. What is the most wonderful opportunity to satisfy at the same time his hatreds and greed, to insult Christ and to enrich himself-chir! All the silverware of the churches, acquired at a low price, passed into these rapacious hands. The Public Treasury, Cambon he himself notes, had almost no part in these spoliations.

Often the Jews bought entire churches with "a handful of assignats and, when calm was restored, the praised very dearly to the faithful. I have already told how they had bought and demolished the church of Nicolas Flamel, Saint-Jacques de la Boucherie. Two Jews?, Oltevuere and Stevens, were awarded the church of Saint-Leu-Saint-Gilles, in the rue Saint-Denis, and, in 1802, sold it to rental to the abbots Morel and Girarcî who served it. From year to year the rent rose from 3,000 to 10,000 francs. Finally the church was bought by the City for 209,312 francs in accordance with the decree of July 20, 1810.

(1) The true people were deeply attached to the religion of their fathers. In 1793 the women of the Halle orgauir-èreul still re-stands for the Corpus Christi procession. These lords, from remains, there were still those of the workers of French origin under the Commune.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 29>

The "remîrrés" furniture was another occasion (ropt*-fruitful rations. The members of the Convention and even some of them cooperate with Jews to appropriate the remains of the outlaws.

In the Crimes of the Seven Members of the Former Committees of Public Safety and General Security^ Lecointre, de Versailles, tells that at the sale of the castle of Monlbélianl, Bernard got along with a Jew, named-Trefoux. to be awarded, irregularly and almost- ' for nothing, objects of great value. He would also have distracted from inventory and fiiiit 'packing for his own has a blue marble table, precious books, etc. He would have been automatically allocated a car, without any auctions, 8 chandeliers, 12 metal torches, 4 column feet.

The corrupt and cheating France of the Directory offered to the Jews a prey almost as beautiful as France Third Republic.

The Jews, writes Capellgu^, in his History of the Great Operas came from all sides and took from all sides; they began-rent, at first timid, through small businesses, the supply of che-value and small usury, limited stock trading on assignats; l's did not yet have their feet firmly enough on the ground to dare 'i bank that they left to the Genevans; they were content to a-buy old furniture from castles, relics from churches, confiscated jewels, to lend a few louis to the emigrants f0 exchange of good values. In some departments, they are were established on the soil of the cultivators, like crows on their prey; in upper and lower Alsace and in Lorraine, i!^ became masters of landed property through loans on mortgage and redemption deeds. In Paris, they flooded ie-; neighborhoods around the Temple, which had become, in a way, their ghetto.

They were allowed to walk freely and, in a period of

300 JEWISH FRANCE

Uunps, they would be the masters of the industrial market and of arf^ent.

The Jew, then less refined than today, is nililiated lr)rigand, half l)anquier or rather comnieuce by being briigand before establishing himself as a banker.

It's the time of the famous Michel, Michol Vassassin, donf little girls ended up marrying dukes and princes, without the sinister legend that attaches to it having yet disappeared to this name. Michel had attracted to a nearby castle from Paris a family of emigrants whom he had slaughtered for seize the money and jewelry she brought back with her she. Acquitted by a winning jury, despite overwhelming evidenceblantes which disappeared with the complete file of this affair, he was nonetheless condemned by public opinionblique.

Simon, who maintains M'^® Lange, the fashionable hetaera, scandalizes the city with its splendor and all of Paris claps its hands when, at the Salon of the year 711, Girodet, in a corner of his painting by Danae, represents the millionaire as a turkey giggling and tail fanned out.

The Jews, however, inaugurated this policy which will now be theirs: to succeed a revolution where we fish in troubled waters for the momentary reign of a sauvany servant who ratifies by possession, under a regular government, ownership of what has been stolen.
The legitimate king would have hindered them then, they prevented by by all means his return, they needed a Shiloh, as Cromwell had been, a temporal Messiah; the man was all ready.

Was Napoleon of Semitic origin? Disraeli said so, the author of Judaism in France supports it. It is certain that the Balearic Islands and Corsica served as a refuge for many Jews expelled from Spain and Italy who died. by converting to Christianity and, as it happened in Spain, took the name of the great lords who had godfathers, Orsini, Dona, Colonne, Bonaparte. Michelet, who, with his clairvoyant organization, had the intuition of certain deep things on which he did not dare insist too much because of his party, touched this point twice had three times. € I said, he wrote in particular in his Nineteenth century, that a witty Englishman would like to make King Bonaparte of Jewish origin. And as Corsica was formerly populated by African Semites, Arabs, Carthaginois or Moors, Maranes, say the Spaniards, it seems : to belong to them more than to the Italians. >

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 301

Freemason certainly and very deep in secrets of Freemasonry, fierce Jacobin, friend of Robespierre young. Napoleon had everything it took to play the role that was expected of him. The finance adopted him; the Michels, the Cerfbeer, the Bedarride sponsored it during its first shipment to Italy at the time when the crates of the State were empty. He only had to appear for everything to be succeeded: he took impregnable Malta in one day (4); for

(1) "He worked prepared by hand by the Iramcà aeorètes, said Mr. Thiers, the tradition of the Isle of Malle. Freemasons like .,)e knight Dotomière and Bosredou were locked up there, and the coward Grand Master Houispech did him the honors, as well as the tlea adjacent, in the middle of a principality in Germany or, at its det, 300,000 Fr. life pension, 600,000 Fr. compensation. 700 Tr. of Dsion for the knights of the language of France. Cafarelli Dufalga, senior officers following Bonaparte, traveling the which he admired the fortifications, from this word: We are •We're glad there was someone there to help us laugh at the doors. The support given by Masonry to Napoleon was indicated by Maisire, and very well highlighted by Father Deschamps. Cdmtyaceres, the vice-emperor of the time, was at the same time: the great

302 JEWISH FRANCE

return to France to do the 18th Brumaire, he crossed tran- the Mediterranean, crisscrossed by cruise ships, clay. Freemasonry had organized around him the air, communicates from near to far and ends up win over an entire country. We had a rehearsal of this kind of forced card with Gambetta, this big bloated man of words that had been inept and dishonest during the war and that France believed for a moment to be the man necessary.

Napoleon fulfilled his obligations to the Jews, and took care to bring them definitively into the laws the equality so thoughtlessly granted to the Israelites by the Constituent Assembly.

On July 26, 1806, a first assembly of deputies Jews gathered at the City Hall; it was composed of main notables and fifteen rabbis under the presidency of Mr. Furtado, of Bordeaux. A decree of July 22 had instructed Messrs. Pasquier, Portalis and Mole to follow, as commissioners, all matters concerning the Jews. The meeting was to resolve a number of issues religious which were summed up in this: the Jews, by accepting the benefits of equality, that is, by entering into a company fully incorporated at the time of its incorporation, had had no part, would they deign to modify what their religion had anything contrary to this society?

Deputy Master of the Grand Orient; 2nd Sovereign Grand Master
Commander of the Supreme Council; 3rd Grand Councilor of the Rite of Heredoiu de Kilwinning; 4th supreme chief of the French rite; 5th great national master of the benevolent knights of the holy city – Strasbourg, Lyon, Montpellier.

THE JEW IN THE EAST OF FRANCE 3C3

The program included the questions following:

1* Submission to the laws of the State in civil and political matters
Is ticking a religious duty?

20 Are polygamy and divorce generally consecrated?
and lawful among the Ilibroux?

3» Are they allowed to answer the calls of the serrico?
military, to cultivate the land, to take care of mechanical work– ■"[ues ?

4° Do the Jews regard Christians as /r^'re* or as ^1 ranger a ?

The clioses did not go as easily as one would have believed. The Jewish* deposed, without religious character, esteemed •=ans doTite that he was going to promise everything, keel to keep nothing ![! -. ! The rabbis seem to have been animated by cer- some scrupulous and wanted to fully defend the old Mosaic law which never assimilates the Christian, the goy^ the '.T'rt to a Jew (1).

\In document from the Archives: yole on the Council of yfinislres, sennce chi 5 seplrmbre 180G, indicates certain internal difficulties (2).

There are fifteen rabbis in the assembly, if this number is not sufficient no, we can have thirty more come. We would add to these four-

(1) A rabbi who had met Gregory, Ziikiul Hnurwifz expressly says: "the T.ilmud only forbids stealing iVnr.ing.>r 'the nacri), but it allows to profile its error » However, it would be fa- It is difficult to understand that between taking advantage of a mistake and inducing a fa- In this error the client is not Jong. BiscIio(T>liein> does not have, at strictly speaking, stolen the nacri in the loan of the Hindus, he has profile of his mistake, only he had written leaflets for make him understand this error.

(2^ National Archives: AF iv.

304 JEWISH FRANCE

thirty-five rabbis, thirty of the principal members of the assembly, and these sixty-fifteen individuals would form the Sanhedrin; but the assembly as it is would remain in its entirety, it would be alone-increased by thirty newly called rabbis... large number would encourage the timid rabbis and act on the fanatic rabbis, in case of extraordinary resistance, by placing between the necessity of adopting explanations or the danger of a refusal which would result in the expulsion of the Jewish people. These que-family realities would likely lead to the goal that one is seeking propose.

But before bringing, to put the assembly in the case to form within its ranks the great Sanhedrin, a number as con-huge number of rabbis, it is necessary to ensure that the fifteen rabbis, deput-current affairs, will be of the opinion of the answers given to the questions and how much they hold to theological views. It would be, in indeed, very ridiculous to bring in thirty new ones at great expense rabbis to declare that the Jews are not the brothers of the French.

reach an agreement. The letter addressed to the Emperor, to the date of April 1, 1806, by Mole charged with this thorny affair, in fact, proves it.

Having received delicate and confidential, which I believe are of a nature to be directly subject to Your Majesty, I request a special audience. I beg her to see in my request only proof of my ardent zeal for his service and my deep desire to assist her designs in the mission she entrusted to me.

Sire, of your imperial and royal Majesty, the most humble, very devoted and very loyal subject, Math. Mole.

Following these talks, the assembly's responses of Jewish deputies, in accordance with those that the Emperor The driver was waiting, having been aired in the sessions of 4, 7

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 303

On August 12, Mr. Mole spoke on September 18, for announce the convening of the Grand Sanhedrin. The mission of this Sanhedrin, composed of seventy members without counting the president, had to be converted into a decision doctrinal the answers already given by gathered.

"His Majesty," Mole had said, "wanted that he should not remain no excuse for those who do not become citizens, She assured you the free exercise of your religion and the full enjoyment of your political rights, but, in exchange of the august protection that she grants you, she demands a religious guarantee of the principles set out in your answers. »

Two-thirds of the members of the Sanhedrin were to be rabbis among whom would take place first those who had been part of the previous assembly, the others members were to be appointed by this assembly at secret ballot.

The great Sanhedrin met on February 4, 1807 and its sessions lasted until March 4 of the same year (1).

It was made to strike the imagination, the meeting, after so many centuries, descendants of this race so long banned. For the first time since the destruction of the Temple, a Sanhedrin gathered the members of this wandering family in an old chapel which.

[i) Chateaubriand seems to believe in some ulterior motive of Napoleon to occupy Jerusalem one day. He writes in the Memoirs (beyond the grave: the Rumor of foul, Napoleon imagined towards the time the great Sanhedrin. That assembly which did not give him Jerusalem^ but, from consequence to consequence, it brought down the world's finances at the stalls of the Jews. The product there in political economy without fatal subversion.

306 LA FINANCIAL JEW

before becoming an annex of the City Hall, had been long dedicated to Saint John, the beloved disciple of the Christ.

Israel's representatives appear to have been moved by the solemnity of this spectacle. One of their first acts had a character of grandeur which is not usual to what comes out of them.

They remembered the long persecutions, the years countless ones that had followed one another, always filled with such vivid anguish, always threatened by such dreadful dangers – tables. They remembered that, for more than twelve hundred years, a single man had constantly spoken for them, had constantly declared that freedom of their conscience, had intervened with the kings to protect the persecuted, had given the example of tolerance by granting better treatment to the Jews in its states theirs than anywhere else. This man, always the same in his doctrine, always similar in his goodness, this man who never dies, was the Vicar of Jesus-Christ (1).

(1) We find, in every part of history, traces of this protection granted to the Jews by the Papacy. In the 7th century, Saint Gregory defended and protected them throughout the Christian world. Alexander II congratulated the bishops of Spain; who had taken under their protection the persecuted Israelites. Innocent III and Alexander IV take steps in their favor. Gregory IX intervenes for them in France, in England, in Germany, it prohibits, under penalty of excommunication, that their festivals be cut short. Clement VI leniently granted asylum in Avignon. Nicholas III wrote to the Inquisition to order him not to force them to embrace Christianity. Judaism by force. Clement XIII had this freedom respected for them to raise their children as they wish that Jewish Freemasonry has taken away from the French as soon as she took power.

The fact is easily understood. From the heights where he hovered, the Vicar

After so many years, the Jews, at last at peace, wanted thank the representative of Heaven who had made himself so often the lawyer of the outlaws with the powerful of the earth. These thanks, the members of the Sanhedrin expressed them in an address which is certainly one of the honorable pages of the history of Israel.

In the session of February 5, 1807, on the proposal of Mr. Avigdor, the following draft address was adopted:

The Israeli deputies of the empire of France and the kingdom from Italy to the LiebraT Svnod decreed on May 30th, penetrated of gratitude for the successive benefits that the Christian clergy has given in past centuries to the Israelites of various States of Europe;

Full of gratitude for the welcome that various Pontiffs and several ecclesiastics have done in different times to Israel-elites of various countries, while barbarism, prejudice and igno-united rance persecuted and expelled the Jews from the midst of the >companies,

Stop:

That the expression of these feelings will be recorded in the pro-minutes of this day so that it remains forever as nn authentic testimony of the gratitude of the Israelites for this Assembly, peoples benefits that the generations who pre-ceded received ecclesiastics from various countries of Europe (I].

of Jésns-Cbrist saw only ogirés for Icsqnelii he prayed by extending his protective hand over them, as well as the heads of state, placing themselves at the point of "economic and social view, were obliged to to ensure that order in the country they had not been disturbed for duty to defend.

(1) Collection of acts of the CAsiemhléf of the I^oëHles rf» French and of the kingdom of Iltdie, by Mr. Dio-rene Tama. Salvador who, in his book Pniiii, Rtme and Jerusalem, speaks at length about the Sanhedrin of 1807, do not say no to me of that one.

Mr. Théodore Reinach also passes over in silence this fact charac-teristics.

persecuted in turn, the Jews overwhelmed him with insults in their newspapers, they plundered the soldiers' belongings in Rome who had come to defend him; they organized, which paints race, a vile riot against the coffin of Pius IX.

The declaration of February 5, 1807 should be compared of the story of the infamies committed by the Jews of Piome, story made precisely by two converted Israelites who became priests, the Léman abbots, who published a brochure under this title: Letter to the Dispersed Israelites on the conduct of their coreligionists in Rome during the captivity of Pius IX at the Vatican.

On September 20, 1870, the Léman brothers recounted the Zouaves pontificals, defenders of Rome, received the order from Pius IX not to continue their heroic defense, and they left the remnants to meet, sad, isolated, one by one, in the Vatican Square—can passing by the Ponte Sant'Angelo, Their friends hurried to bring them civilian clothes. Now, at the head of the bridge and throughout its course there were troops of Jews who, at amidst the clamour and insults of the revolutionaries against the Zouaves, tore them away from themselves or from the people who followed, the travel packages, the clothes, everything they could seize, and, as if it were not a question of plunder but of political, threw them over the bridge into the Tiber. But in down there were their sailors who, with their boats, collected everything that was thrown there.

The Jews then looted the barracks and kidnapped everything from weapons and uniforms to bedding and furnishings.

Last year (1872), the young authors add, there had, at the gate of the Gesu, scenes of abomination and ferocity! People were shouting at the Christians who, peaceful and inoffensive, had gathered to pray together. At the nettle, they were struck. Eh Well! Behind these people who were screaming and hitting we recognized—the Jews of the ghetto were born. We recognized them! We have caused us—monies with people who knew them by their names and who saw them from the top of the windows which dominate Gesu Square. They saw them throwing lead bullets "large comms of nuts, so as to provoke the effusion of the »ang and stir up hatred. ■

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 309

When we asked about the scenes ignoble things that happened in front of the Quirinal and elsewhere, where holy things have been ridiculed, the priests insulted, the Madonnas defiled, the holy images torn, we are

Last year did we not see the Jew Levy, at-author of an odious pamphlet against the Pope, to have it declared, by the anclerical Congress which he had organized, that the
The next meeting of the congress would take place in Rome for better to brave the august captive of the Vatican?

Inexorable in demanding what is owed to it, Israel has a strange way to pay off one's debts!

In 1807, in any case, the hearts of the Israelites of Loidail were gratitude. The Hebrew thanksgiving voted on Napoleon seems to be crossed by a breath of poetry biblical. One would think one hears a prophet of Zion thank-citing one of these Sin-Akké-Irib or these Schal-Manou-Asir which we see in the Ninevite bas-reliefs preceded by large Argyraspides and sinking into the chest of the defeated

The wheel with itsXi of steel of the chariot scaled with gold.

Napoleon, all kings have been dissipated before you, their wisdom fainted and they staggered like a drunken man.
On the day of Austerlitz you broke the entire strength of two Emperors, Death walked before you and you traced the path for his fury that she had to follow, without deviating from it. Past generations that death has devoured, that hell has swallowed up, they said to the noise

310 THE JEWISH FRINGE

of your exploits: among the warriors, among the Jjgrave». never any did not resemble him. God chose him to govern the peoples; he alone has done as many great things as all the heroes of the centuries past.

By calling on the Israelites to comply with the laws of the countries, asking them "to do whatever depends of them to acquire the esteem and goodwill of their fellow citizens, "the Sanhedrin had not been able to modify this tempo-, Jewish tradition on which nothing has influence, nor the bad pro-transferred, nor the good ones.

The fight against Semitism, which passed almost in-perceived in the middle of such a large number of events prodigious accumulated in a few years, does not hold less a considerable place in the reign of Napoleon

By a phenomenon, which will cause perpetual astonishment of history, the little artillery second lieutenant had made way suddenly to a head of empire having, not only the monarchs of ancient dynasty. This upstart, we are forced to admit it, is the last sovereign who has really-governed France.

This one certainly, no more than Bismarck, does not resemble these mystical kings that the fanciful historians of the school Jewish people show us driven to persecution by zeal monks. He was exclusively struck by the danger that made the country run this incessant infiltration in the social organism of an element of decomposition and disorder.

All the eminent men of the time recognized, moreover, that the Constituent Assembly had acted on this issue as in many others, with the haste and the lightness that she brought to everything.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 3H

Something could have been done for the Jew, no doubt, to be inspired, for example, by this Roman wisdom which distinguished between the Roman Citizen and the Lathijimior to which we left the disposal of his goods, to whom we permitted even to display insolent luxury, but whose riches after death returned to the State half. Applied to families like the Rothschilds, this system would have given excellent results and would have entered the field public the excess profits received, without preventing these mercantile races par excellence to obey their vocation for money trafficking. Rome still had the Peregrinius which was forbidden to approach Rome; but, at the worst days in its history, the Aitranchi was not admitted to enter the curia of a provincial city. Never the People-King would not have understood that a eliangier, even naturalized like Spuller or Gambetta, was the equal of the son of the old citizens who had founded Roman greatness

At the time of the meeting of Jewish deputies in 1806, a illustrious jurist, whose high and serene intelligence was foreign to any fanatical influence, Portalis, proposed very clearly on this point in a memorandum which has no less than 39 pages and is a masterpiece of Uupailialilé and common sense.

The Constituent Assembly had believed that, in order to make the Jews 1806 citizens, it was necessary to make them participate individually. and without prejudice to all the rights enjoyed by citizens French; but experience has fortunately proven that if we had not lacked philosophy or had lacked foresight to fight usefully with new ones only as much as one has worked above all to prepare and train new men.

The error comes from the fact that we only wanted to see a quota of religious tolerance in the [)rol)lerne to be resolved on civil status Jews in France (I).

;n2

THE JEWISH FUANCE

The Jews are not just a sect, but a people. This people once had their territory and their government; they have been dispersed without being dissolved, it wanders all over the globe to seeking a retreat and not a homeland, it exists in all nations without merging with them, he believes he lives only on a foreign land.

This order of things is due to the nature and strength of the institutions—Jewish tions. Although all states generally have the same object that of preserving and maintaining itself, each State has yet one that is particular to him. The enlargement was the object of Rome; the war of Lacedaemon, the culture of letters that of Athens, commerce that of Carthage and religion that of the Hebrews.

It is in the nature of such legislation that philosophers and scientists have sought the explanation of its duration. We understand in fact, when among a people religion, laws, and and the uses of life are the same thing, it would be necessary, to oper—to bring about some revolution in the opinions and customs of this people, to be able to change at the same time all the institutions and all the preconceived ideas that make up his existence. This does not perhaps, we have, in a way, proof of it in eternity even of the people we are talking about.

Religion is usually only relative to things which inte—feels conscience; among the Jews religion embraces everything which founds and governs the Society. From then on the Jews form everywhere a nation within the nation, they are neither French, nor German, nor English, nor Prussians, they are Jews.

From the fact that the Jews are less a sect than a people, it follows that it was not prudent to declare them citizens without examining if they could, if they even frankly wanted to become one;

folding another shape. This is the point of view at which they are placed the auli-Seinitz of Germany, of Austria-Hungary, of Kuinania, who leave the common question completely aside.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 313

it also follows that it cannot be unreasonable or unjust to suto impose exceptional laws on a sort of corporation which, by its institutions, its principles and its customs, remains constantly-ment separated from the general company.

By assimilating, without precaution, the Jews to all the other French-French, a crowd of foreign Jews was called who infested our border departments and we did not operate on the mass of Jews older established in France the happy changes that we were promised by the naturalization system that had been adopted. In this respect, the present circumstances speak sufficiently-ment of themselves.

The Jews, at that time, had not yet inaugurated their new way, the great financial movement which will be, as they say* the glory of the 19th century, and which consists to make money go, come, return, gold dance and shimmer, to crumple and rustle the blue tickets so that that the gaze flickering and troubled by these sleights of hand pass does not notice that this movement is very simple and that it consists of introducing into the pockets of the Israelite what is in the pockets of the Christian; they did not operate still without pain; they stuck to the old game, to the classic wear and, freed from all monarchical constraints-chic, armed with their rights as citizens, they give themselves to it were having fun.

Unhappy Alsace groaned under the Vampire, prayed, begged, shouted, agitated, threatened. The brave Kellermann, who had led so many heroic charges, felt his courage to abandon it in front of this flood of German Jews which fell upon the unfortunate province which he governed.

Distraught, he poured out his sorrows into the bosom of the Empe-
and he wrote from Colmar, on July 23, 1806:

The mass of claims for which they obtained ins-descriptions is elTrayant'j.

an offense that had not yet been presented in the criminal courts-of Alsace. These courts have had to judge, for some time time, causes for false receipts which were opposed to the Jews whose bad faith alone inspired the idea.

The administrative and judicial bodies had to transmit to the Minister of Your Majesty of the more extensive details on the evils which result from usury and the bad faith of the Jews.

The Emperor, with that attention which he paid to the least-dressed things this powerful brain which embraced the government of the world, not as a whole only, but in the most minute details, was done to provide constant reports on this issue (1).

The report sent to him at Firckenstein on August 25
1807, by Champa^{ny} (2), and on which we read: Object urgent, referred to the Council of State, Interior section, is undoubtedly the basis of the famous decree of March 17, 1808.

The first way to prevent these disorders, said the minister, is to put the authority in a position to prohibit any kind of trafic to the man who would have also abused the facility left by the lo:s for civil transactions. Thus the Jews outside, on the

(1) On the date of May 30, 1807, a first decree had already been issued suspending the execution of the judgments issued in favor of the Jews against the farmers.

The ex|iose of the reasons said:

Napoleon... On the matter which has been reported to us, that in several sepleiitrioiiiaux departments of black Eii)|iire, rctaiiiiis Jews, nVxer-there are no other professions than those (leTu-siire, have, by the accum-laliou of the inlerances the immoderate pines, nor many cultivators of this country in a state of delirium, we have suffered that we should come to the aid of those of our subjects who unjust greed would have resulted in these unfortunate extremes.

(2) National Archives, \. F. iv.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 3 15

morality? of which one could not have positive guarantees?, not will be allowed to come and traffic in France only after having duly justified in their faculties to do so honestly, because a pre-well-founded assumption leads one to believe that a Jew incapable of fulfilling this condition would only seek in France to exercise a

Your Majesty's intentions to see foreign Jews thus abuse, for their own benefit, the protection that it deigns to grant to the Jews of his States. Thus still no Jew, other than those engaged in wholesale, manufacturing or operating trade by themselves a rural property, will not be able to make commerce without express authorization, which will be given born by the local administration, which may be revoked, and which will always depend on the acquired certainty that he does not abuse this so-called trade, for shameful speculations. These authorizations will have to be aimed at when the Jew traffics outside his home, peddlers will be subject to surveillance particular and the Jews will be prevented from misleading the good faith outside places where they are particularly well known.

The decree of March 47, 1808 was in accordance with these indications.

Article 7 read:

From now on and as of next July 4th, no Jew will be able engage in any trade, commerce, or traffic whatsoever, without having received, for this purpose, a patent from the prefect of the department, which will only be granted on specific information and on an – certificate: from the municipal council stating that the said Jew – is delivered to usury, nor to any illicit traffic; 2° of the 'Ajnsisioirô of the synagogue, in whose district he served. a\es– his good order and his probity. This patent will be renewed every year (i).

(i) The authority made sure that the decree was rigorously executed. Just for a trip from Nancy to Saverne, a decree was necessary. We quote at random the authorization granted

316 JEWISH FRANCE

Article 16, in the Him to stop the swarming, di-knows:

No Jew not currently domiciled in our departments from the Upper and Lower Rhine will no longer be allowed to take domicile. No Jew not currently domiciled shall be admitted to take up residence in the other departments of our Empire, that in the event that he had acquired a rural property and would engage in agriculture, without getting involved in any trade, trade or traffic.

Article 17 further stipulated that the Jewish population would not would not be allowed to provide replacements for the cons– According to the description, every conscripted Jew had to perform personal service.

Napoleon seems to have been guided in these measures by a single thought, the desire to see his Jews. In this, the sure instinct of his marvelous genius did not deceive him: every Jew we see, every proven Jew is relatively little dangerous, he is sometimes even estimable; he adores God of Abraham, it is a right that no one dreams of contesting and, as we know what to expect from him, he is possible to monitor it.

The dangerous Jew is the vague, socialist Jew in words, agent provocateur, spy from abroad, he deceives both the workers who trust him, the police (who pay him to Gondclianx, whose son or nephew was Minister of Finance in 1848, and saved Holhscliild by the kindness he showed him at the expense of the Treasury.

"Napoleon... On the report of our Minister of the Interior, our Council of the Enleudu, we have decreed and decree what follows:

Article 1

Mr. Isaac Goudchaux, eldest son of Jacob Gondcliaux, Israelite and merchant in Nancy, is authorized to preude doiuielde in Saverue, de- mainly from the Bas-Rhin.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 317

and the government that employs him; he pushes the naive dars the Commune then denounces them to the Versailles troops and disappears when we want to clear things up and reappears when the calm was made to declare that he suffered for the good cause; it is the harmful animal par excellence and at the same time the elusive animal; it is stuffed, in fact, in so many things, that we don't know where to start. If you stop him in a riot, he claims his pa- sort, the victorious Germany, which knows how to enforce its children; if you try to expel him, he proves to you that he was naturalized at some point. Soldier of emancipa- tion of the people when democracy is at the top, defender •the order when reaction triumphs, it is the most powerful- the most troublesome agent that the earth has ever produced, and he thus goes through life with the joy that the Jews get from awareness of having, in various forms, done loujouis harm to Christians.

To see his Jews, Napoleon first demanded that they take- smells names.

On July 20, 1808, a decree was published concerning the Jews who do not have fixed surnames and first names. Here are the main points:

Article 1": – Those subjects of our Empire who follow the Tiébralque cult and who, until now, have not had a nona of family" and fixed first names will be required to adopt them, in the three months from the publication of our present decree, and to make it the declaration before the civil status officer of the municipality where they are domiciled.

Article 2*: – Foreign Jews who come to live in the Empire and who would be in the case provided for by article 1*^' will be required to complete the same formalities within three months following will see their entry into France.

Art ■ !'. :> : – No surnames will be accepted

18.

318 Jewish rriance

not taken from the Old Testament, nor any city name. May be taken as first names those authorized by the law of 1 1 germi-nuIanXI (I).

Article 4": – The Consistories in making a census of the Jews of their community will be required to justify and make known to the authority if they have individually fulfilled the prescribed conditions-tes by the preceding article. They will also be required to monitor and to make known to the authority those Jews of their community-community who have changed their name without complying with the dis-positions of the aforementioned law.

The following will be exempted from the provisions of our present decree: Jews of our States or foreign Jews who will come to settle there when they have known names and first names, and they have cons-particularly worn; although the said names and nicknames are taken of the Old Testament or the cities they inhabited.

A circular to the prefects, signed by the minister of Tinlé-laughing Crettet and dated September 8, 1808, further specified-the formalities to be completed.

The decree of July 20, said this circular, imposes to Jews who do not have fixed surnames or first names Obligation to adopt them.

It is important that the Jews be informed of what they have to do. and that the execution of the decree takes place in a uniform manner in

I invite you to take a decision in which the decree and which will prescribe the following provisions:

A double register, stamped and initialed by the president of the tri-first instance court, will be open at the town hall of each

(1) The article!" of the law of Germanic law XI reads: publication of this law, the names in use and the different calendars, and those of the people known in ancient history, may only be received as first names in the Télet registers civil, 068111105 to note the birth of children and it is prohibited
THEY public officers to admit any other into the Cursacles.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 319

commnnnc WHERE there are Jews, to receive the declaration of all those who are French and who are designated in the articles <•' and 5 of the decree.

Every adult must make the declaration himself; the fathers, failing which, mothers will do it for their minor children, guardians for their wards.

The adult son will be required to take his family name existing father, the adult brothers and sisters no longer having either father or mother will all adopt the same last name.

The declaration shall be made in these terms: Before us, mayor of the commune of, canton of district of department of...., Aaron introduced himself and said he was taking the •iom of, for family name, for first name that of...., and ] who signed with us on 4808.

This formula will be the same for Jews who are in the case of article o of the decree by substituting the word conserve for the word take.

It will be followed by the fathers or, failing that, by the mothers of the children.
minor children and by guardians with the following modification:
who declared to give to Baruch or to Sarah, his son or his daughter minor or his ward, born in the surname of...

A declaration will be made and received on both registers particular for each individual; each will be signed by the mayor

Please open a double register for this purpose without delay.
in the municipalities where it must be established and inform me of the measures you have taken.

These registers, some of which still exist, will be interesting for reconstructing the civil status of the Jews who tend-increasingly losing themselves in the community while preserving, from the point of view of their interests, their organi-separate station.

It must be recognized, however, that, this time again, the
The name change measure was not executed as she should have been.

When the Jews of Austria were given names, under

320 JEWISH FRANCE

Joseph II, this care was left to the subordinate employees-who found there an opportunity for profit. By paying for a few florins we had a pretty name of a bird or a flower, a poetic or auspicious name, we were called breeze of the evening or morning scent, Strauss, bouquet; Wohlgeinich, good smell; Edelstein, precious stone; Goldader, veined with gold. Those who paid nothing, on the other hand, received ridiculous or unpleasant names, like Gcdgenvogel, gallows game; Saenfer, drunkard; Weinglas, glass wine. In France, the Jews were left absolutely free to choose their names. Most, taking advantage of the tolerance of the law for names consecrated by use, adopted place names, Lisbon, Paris, Lyon, Marseille; other-three took ordinary names. Picard, Flemish, Bourgeois, Clément, Laurent; many drew on the calenrevolutionary drier and called themselves Oats, Rye, Fro-ment, Laurier.

The most common name is Mayer (1). It is of very ancient origin and appears in the Old Testament and in the Talmud; it pleases the Jews by evoking for them the image of something shining. The real word, indeed.
is Me'ir (bright, radiant), and derives both from the word gold and the word light.

(1) The philosopher of Vlllustrulion once told us about this subject:
auujiaile anecdote which, alas! has as much actcalilé niaintenaül a Paris as in Germany, there are so many Mayers, tell us.

•t On the other side of the Uliin, the Meyers with an e, an a, an i, a y, Meier, and the ands are amused by it.

"By chance, a bourgeois from Berlin, Sciiilize on Millier, arrives to the late Ihall. The hall is full. Not a single empty seat,

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 321

Cohn, Kahn, Kohn, Cahen are all variations of the D3ot Hebrew cohen (priest of the family of Aaron).

The most common first names among Jews are traduction of a Hebrew word: Maurice corresponds to Moses, Isidore to Isaac, Edward to Araon, James to Jacob, Alphonse to Adam.

The tolerance of the Restoration actually abolished all formalities that might have bothered the Jews. The paintings drawn up by order of the Emperor, to the contrary, are masterpieces of vigilance, attention, clarity in the details, they contrast with the generosity that reigns in the present-day France where everyone enters the homeland as if it were a mill. They still serve as a plan and model for the anti-Semitic committee which tries to see a little more clearly in our business.

The columns are divided as follows: merchants, manufac-turiers for their principals; owner-operators rural property, practicing arts and crafts, doing the second-hand goods, having competed for conscription, fallen into fate, serving in person, replaced, serving or ayar j served voluntarily, students attending public schools-ques; mortgage statements.

The Jewish population of the empire is spread across 38 not a free str.tpontin. And yet Mûiler or ScLùhze wants to ro>r the room and to be seated properly.

What to do? It's quite simple. As soon as the act comes, it sets in at the entrance to the corridor and shouts in a frightened voice:

– Gentlemen, there is a fire at Mr. Meyer's!

Fire! At Mr. Mayer's! Immediately, about fifty

I look at them. wind, very pale, and all the Mayer, the M ver, the >Ieïer [reef ilent towards the door of sonie. while, very tranquil-
The Berlin joker then chose, among the stalls that had become valantes, the one that seems best to him.

3;2 THE FIIAN'CR .TIIIVE

depari eiTi have S; it is 78,993 individuals; but the Jews from newly annexed countries in Holland and the North are not included in this work.

The number of Jews is 46,663 for the whole area of present-day France.

In the Seine department, we note the presence of 2,733 Israelites; we see to what extent they have multiplied since some figures from the Consistory allow us to count approximately 42,000 confirmed cases.

I^yon and the department of Rhône, which are infested today, since the Jew Millaud managed to get there to have elected senator, are almost intact; we are counting on it in total 58 heads of family making together 195 individuals. We read in one of the reports that 40 Jewish families have established in Lyon since 1790; among their members are 2 merchants, 2 owners, 9 artisans practicing arts and trades, 15 to 20 children attending public schools.

The Jews addressed a petition to the Emperor on sup-apply to be exempted from the strict provisions of the decree of March 17, 1808. The Jews of the Gironde had were examples of continuation, those of the Seine, on which the information had been good, had been the subject of the same favor.

The statements drawn up on this occasion provide us with some more clarifications on the Jewish population in some departments.

Among the departments that requested the exemption without having obtained it, we find the Moselle with 6,506 Jews, the Rhône 195, the Meurthe 3,489, the Meuse 405, the Côte-d'Or 250.

Among the departments, which requested and obtained the exemption, include the Gironde with 2,531 Jews, the Lan-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FUANCE 323

of 1,598, the Seine 2,783, the Basses-Pyrénées 127, the Alpes-Maritimes 303, Aude 4, Doubs 86, Haute-Garonne 107, Hérault 141, Seine-et-Oise 95, Vosges 345, Gard 425, Bouches-du-Rhône 948.

let's raise the Allier with 5 Jews, the Ule-et-Vilainell, the Finis tery 11, Loiret 7, Loir-et-Cher 10, Loire-Inférieure 11, Marne 2, Pas-de-Calais 63, Seine-Inferieure 47, Somme 14, Yonne 27, Aniennes 11, Charente 8, Lower Charente
 70, Puy-de-Dôme 38, Haute-Vienne 29, Dordogne 1, Varl4, Vaucluse 631, Haut-Rhin 9,ÎM5, Seine-et-Marne 132, Haute-Saône 5, Haute-Marne 44, Bas-Rliin 16,155, Isère 4.

The Jews, however, had friends around them Napoleon I*'. Ney, originally from Alsace, was he Jewish as has often been claimed? This name, in any case, is quite common among Jews. The particular fatality which has weighed on this family, the mysterious catastrophes which fell upon her, would confirm me in that opinion. In any case, if we are to believe VAUg-z-dbr-Jud^ he carried Israel in his heart.

When this newspaper reported on November 40, 1806, in 4863, Marshal Ncy occupied Magdeburg, he received the visit of autorities and n(>tal>ies of Tille. The marshal had asked (expressly that the notables of all confessions should be to him presented. After they had passed in front of him, he asked if there was any had no representative of the Israelite coiaranauié. The city of Magdeburg. replies one of the assailants. enjoys the privilege of not There are no Jews among these inhabitants; there is only one here and he is tolerated for particular reasons. – You mean the Israelites, replied the marshal, France does not know any Jews:
 moreover, gentlemen, where doanac la Kraaoo there is no pu-

32i JEWISH FRANCE

vilèges and from this moment the equality of worship is in Maude-town the only principle accepted.

"Today in Magdeburg," he said in conclusion, the German Israelite newspaper, 5,000 of our coreligionists and one of them is a member of the city council."

The Archives, which report this fact, do not pronounce not clearly on the fact of Ney's Jewish origin.

"We will add," they tell us, "that Ney, originallyfrom Saarlouis, was long considered to be extrac-Jewish tion; it didn't take many anecdotes like the one we just brought back to make this for him reputation. "

We have proven that Disraeli's assertion about Mas-during, absolutely improbable. In this case, the grandson of the Marshal, the Duke of Rivoli, who recently married a Jewess, Mrs. Heine, herself widow of the General Duke of The Moskowa, who was said to be descended from the Jews, would have obeyed a kind of racial attraction that we have cons-felt quite often in the course of this work. For the Marshal Soult, Disraeli's supposition seems to me absolutely lucently romantic, although it appears in a Plutarch Jewish at the same time as Jules Janin.

According to the Petit Journal, the first Jewish officer of the French army would have been Mr. Marqfroy, who died three years ago years old, in Biarritz, aged 95.

He had made the last campaigns of the Empire and had reached the rank of captain.

The deceased's father was the owner of the Château de Manacq, in Bayonne, which he sold to Napoleon I, and where he attracted and killed the king of Spain and his son, later the great Lord VII.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 323

Mr. Marqfroy, in an audience he had with Napoleon I", had obtained admission for his sons to a military school.

State schools had previously been closed to Israelites.

The deceased and his brother were the first two Israelites admitted in the military schools of France.

According to Mr. Kohn, the first Jewish officers were Messrs. d'Almbert, Mardochée and Polonais, released in 1809 on first from the Ecole Polytechnique, the other two from the Ecole Saint-Cyr (1).

(I) The Notice on the State of the Israelites in France by E.-C M., cited, under the Restoration, among the soldiers of Israeli origin: "General Baron Wolff, Field Marshal, Commander of the Legion of honor; his brother, battalion commander, knight of the Légion; Colonel Maurice; Alphonse-Théodore Cerf-Beer, captain artillery, knight of the Legion of Honor; Gustave Mévil, capi-artilleryman, knight of the Legion of Honor; Fes'el, captain, director of the Mutzig arms depot, officer of the Legion of Honour-neur; Worma son, captain and captain; Lion Berr, captain aax Invalids, etc., etc. »

Napoleon I's podiatrist, a man named Tobias, was Jewish; he later exercised the same functions with the Duke of Berry. The Ana little burlesque, but touching nonetheless, because a man who respects one's religion, even in the state of pedicure, is always respectable. "One Rosh Hashanah day, Tobias³ was in the synagogue when that he was fetched in full by the Duke of Berry.

The chiropodist's embarrassment was extreme; he went to seek advice from the Grand Rabbi Michel Seligman. » The revered pastor joined the scruples of his administered religious; he nevertheless urged him to ^e to submit to the prince's orders, a refusal, in this era of clericalism outraged, which could have serious consequences, but to arrange for only violate the solemnity of the day as a last resort.

Tobias, very perplexed, arrives at the Tuileries.

—Ah! that I am sore! exclaims the Duke of Berry when he notices, I long to be delivered from my ills.

Tobias bends down, examines the foot carefully, and presses with his finger. on several occasions on the part occupied by the horns.

— Ouch! cries the prince, you are hurting me.

—You see, Monsignor, replies our pediatrician boldly.

id

326 JEWISH FRANCE

The Jews, in the presence of the new measures, are bound— apparently arose from grievances, but the divorce was complete between them and the Emperor. Napoleon, whether he was or not of Semitic origin, personified, even in matters financial, the opposite of the Jewish spirit (1). By contrast as we find so many in this astonishing genius, this man so chimerical in certain matters, this stove in action in the manner of an Alexander or an Antar was, from that it was about public finances, the most economical rigid, the most meticulous, the most honest that one would have seen of— then Colbert. For works that honored the name French, for constructions, fear of encouragement to artists, for parties more dazzling than haircuts those that the world had contemplated until him, he threw gold without counting, then the next day he defended Targent of his people, taxpayers' money after all, with the bourgeois harshness of a Louis XH. He was precisely, if we can allow ourselves to bring these two names together, the con— milking of Gambetta, who said: "Take, plunder, dig "I don't give a damn about deficits, I'm not from here..."

suddenly inspired, I notice a violent luflauimatiou, and, in a day or two, take care to surround the foot with compresses, and I will come back to get rid of your horn.

Thanks to this subterfuge, Tubias escaped the cruel extremity, for such a scrupulous practitioner, to violate the solemnity of Rosch Haschauah. »

(1) In a discussion at the Council of State, he clearly indicated the parasitic character of the race: "One does not complain," he said, "of the Protestants and Catholics, as we complain about the Jews. It is that the evil that the Jews do does not come from individuals, but from the very constitution of this people: They are grasshoppers and caterpillars that ravage France.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 3f7

The Jews, sheltering behind Ouvrard, had taken advantage of the when Napoleon was busy waging battle' il'Austerlitz to abuse the candor of Barbé Marbois,' Minister of the Treasury, and organize about the Es- bonds the famous Tunisian loan trick, buy in
l) leave, then decide France to guarantee and sell in liausse. We know the terrible scene which took place on the return, when Barbé Marbois, leaving the office in tears Tuileries, said to the Emperor: € I hope, at least, that Your Your Majesty, don't accuse me of being a thief. – That's good.
worse, replied Napoleon, roguery is less dangerous-even more so than stupidity: roguery has its limits,
'•ètise doesn't have any.'

From 1810, the Jew, who had supported until then Napoleon, who no longer had anything good to expect from him, began (read on the European side. The all-powerful Emperor had against him now this mysterious force of finance to the-which one cannot resist, even when one is Napoleon, as Léon Say, Rothschild's man, declared it a insolently in the House.

Admirable for pushing, preaching, launching, Jewry is also po destroy or rather to undermine, to undermine, ruin below. When the Jew is against them, chief of empire or simple individual, journalist or singer operettas suddenly feel caught by a thousand Lilliputian threads which prevent them from moving forward; "they are thwarted in everything," as Disraeli so aptly explains; defamed, dishondemoralized, they don't know who to blame, nothing succeeds for them without them understanding why. It is necessary, to brave this occult power, before which Bismarck retreated, men like Napoleon or writers-vain with an upright heart, with an unrepentant soul who have meditated the words of Christ: "Blessed are those who suffer persecution for righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. holds on. »

No doubt, in undertaking the Russian campaign, Napoleon contributed to spoiling his business, but, a little more sooner, a little later, the financial coalition would have had reason for him.

The future banker of the Holy Alliance, Rothschild mon- tra, when the time of the denouement approached, an activity without equal; the very grandeur of the events seems to have raised above itself this Jewish nature generally not inclined to acts of heroism.

When evening fell on Waterloo, when the Emperor had tried in vain to enter the last four, Roths- child, who was watching in Brussels, was informed immediately of the defeat by the Jews who followed the army to achieve- to see the wounded and strip the corpses. If the first, in England with the news, he won twenty millions, he ran to Ostend, but a terrible storm seemed to make the crossing impossible. Puzzled a moment in front of these waves which broke with fury, the The banker gave the order to leave anyway. "Don't have Don't be afraid, he could have said to the captain, you carry more than the ancient boat, you carry the misfortune of Caesar and the for- Rothschild moon. :>

Bonaparte was dead, writes Michelet; from the iron age was born the silver century by the loans that were made for the war itself in full peace and for everything. An intelligent Jew Olinde Rodrigues, in the name of Saint-Simon, wrote the Gospel of this new religion.

The Jews, who until then were in the Republic, formed themselves in double royalty. The German Jews, later those of the South, created two reservoirs into which capital was poured.

THE JLIIF IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 329

While the former raised funds for the armies of the Holy Alliance, your seconds gave themselves to the second Bonaparte.

Michelet seems to indicate an antagonism or at least ruins of France between the Jews of the two rites; always agreed despite the apparent oscillations of the Stock Market, They were going to monopolize the money of the universe. Peoples and Kings were nothing more than puppets held by the Jews the sons. The nations had fought until then for the homeland, glory, flag; they will no longer fight de- now only to enrich Israel, with the permission of Is- Rael, and for the sole satisfaction of Israel...

IV

THE RESTORATION AND THE JULY MONARCHY

liquidation's account. – The outbreak of the Holhscilid. – The Restoration remains foreign to any sense of justice and pre- clairvoyance. – French bankers conspire against enx mdmcâ.

– The Orleans family and the love of Taraient. – Rothschild is the true minister of Louis-Pliilippe. – 1st masterpiece of Toussenet.

– The kings of the time. – Saint-SimoMism. – The pliiloso- financial philosophy. – The Pereire brothers. – The death of a shoemaker.

– The last preparations of the Aryan spirit against the invasion Semitic. – The thi^âlre and literature. – The C/oélienneiies ôi Petruâ Boiel – The Duke of Orleans' contempt for the Jews.

THE AWARD AND THE JULY MOSAIC

In 1790, the Jew arrived; under the first Republic and During the first Empire, he entered, he prowled, he looked for his place; under the Restoration and the July Monarchy, it sits in the living room; under the Second Empire he lies down in the beds of others; under the Third Republic, he com- begins to drive the French from their homes or forces them to work for him. In 4890, if, as I hope Still, there is still enough hidden strength in us. to snatch us from death, he will have returned to his point from departure and will have returned in bulk everything he had taken in detail to people who are too hospitable and too trusting.

In 1815, all the superb speeches delivered since 89, all the blood shed on the scaffolds and on the fields of battle, the beautiful deaths of politicians, heroes, heroines, Girondins islands, Montagnards, Ven- deans, the courage of the soldiers of Sambre-et-Meuse, of the these Scottish women, the Yergniauds, the Saint-Juets, the Charettes, Cathelineau, Stofflet, Lannes, Davout, Bessière, Charlotte Corday, M^{me} Roland, the capital Europe's pillows taken in turn, the irresistible charges of cavalry led, with lightning in their eyes, by the Murats, the La-salle, the Montbruns, the Nausoullys, the Bluchers, the Ziè-Ihen, the Platow, Yalmy, the Pyramids, Marengo, Austerlitz, Waterloo, the genius of Napoleon, the cunning of Talley-Rand, Wellington's tenacity - all this resulted in a liquidation account. - This formidable human movement

19.

334 JEWISH FRANCE

ended up in Frankfurt's Judengasse. The man from
At one moment there was a servile and still groveling Jew, who said:
"y affre moyen" or "y affre bas moyen."

The Aryans had been killing each other for twenty-five years* to put on a pedestal a Semite with an abject face who, pen-while we were fighting, peacefully clipped ducats.

The liquidation count is the triumph of the Jew. In fact opening one is the dream he constantly caresses. As long as a considering how long this one lasts, we can be relatively quiet; as soon as it is closed, we must expect to see recom-begin a new period of war which will open a other.

Centralizing in his hands all the particular debts-from Germany and England, Rothschild put in at the same time its funds at the disposal of the government French; he provided the money he demanded and demanded the money he provided. Like Master Jacques de Molière, he changed roles according to the circumstances; he was alternately the most implacable of creditors and the most complacent lenders. How to discuss the validity of a debt with someone who obliges you?

Under pressure from this helpful Schylock, France had to pay the most unexpected claims to the last penny babes, the most fantastic repairs, the most debts more chimerical. All that armies of 1,500,000 men had been able to cause real or imaginary damage-naries in their walk through Europe returned to the Restoration, but enlarged by the filth of the hands of the subordinate Jews, through whom these claims had passed before arriving at the already cleaner hands, but stilleven came out of the tomb and France had to pay the salary

LR JEWISH DVXS THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 335

of a repression of German reifres that a principle which-conch had supplied to Henry IV.

I These traffics, apparently exclusively financial, had the additional advantage of powerfully serving the Jewish idea.
The Jews scattered throughout Europe, and to whom one took over with a profit the debts they had bought for a piece of bread, knew that there was some France one of their own who dealt with state affairs directly-ment with the ministries.

James de Rothschild, who had already settled in Provence was no longer the little companion of the past, he was an Austrian baron, if you please, thanks to Mr. de Metlernich. If the Duchess of Angoulême, seized with surprise to the proposal, cried out: Fi donc! when spoken to to admit M"- de Rothschild into his presence, the Nucingen which crosses Balzac's work with its Germanic gibberish was already a kind of character.

The Jews from across the Rhine, who were timidly trying still, it is true, to gain a foothold in Paiis, were accustomed to look at the House of Rothschild as the house of of French Judaism. With the spirit of solidarity which animates the race, the Rothschilds helped the new airixants, provided them with funds to do the little it?mv, in
At the same time they received valuable information from them.
ments and organized this police force which is without equal in the whole world (1).

(1) See on this subject the book by Capefigue: History of the Grandet Financial Offices that the future, fairer than the present, meUrâ among the rare works of this temple intended for reading.
Also consult a Guancier work signed Auguste Chirac: La High Bank and the Itévoialiom The author has hardly done anything besides that

336 JEWISH FRANCE

The Restoration did not see the danger of this invasion.
Jewish, which Napoleon had so well discerned. Royalty had lost the sense of France for more than a century,' she understood nothing about the Revolution, neither before nor after • he lacked precisely what had originally made If greatness and power of this confined Monarchy

The strength of the first Capetians had been to identify themselves with French genius, to protect economic interests of the country while expanding its territory and to increase his prestige by arms. The latter Bourbons did not have warlike tastes; at one time where everyone, willingly or unwillingly, had appeared on the fields of battle, they had not fought once. these three brothers, descendants of François I", of Henri IV, of Louis XIV, of Louis XV even, so gallantly brave Fontenoy, none had known how to risk their lives to defend his throne.

What was missing from them more than anything else, what failed in such a fatal way for us to the monarchists of the Assembly of 1871, this was the principle without which any Christian monarchy is nonsense, the spirit of justice. Discite justitiam moniti, says the Scripture.... The Bourbons had been warned, but they did not like it any more justice. If they had been just, they would have had them shot, to avenge human conscience, a dozen Conventionals among those who had shown the most tenacitydistinguish Capefigue. The only interesting part of his book is that which affects contemporary financiers, on whom he doubts curious indications.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 337

lie against the unfortunate Louis XVI, and they would never have shot a soldier of the Grande Armée.

In everything they brought the same contempt for the justice. Do you know what he received from the Restoration, on the billion of emigrants, the felonious gentleman who had betrayed his king, cowardly abandoned a woman who trusted him, Lafayette, the main author of the Revolution? 450,000 rent books

Meanwhile the Chouans, who had held the cam-loincloth while waiting for princes who did not appear, were starving in their roofless huts. Cathelineau's family had lost twenty-three of his own on the battlefields and the Cathelineau family lacked bread while Robespierre's sister received- had a pension of six thousand francs!

The conduct of Louis XVIII towards the Vendéans, dominated by Elie, first Duke of Decazes and Freemason

By a real villainy, the king refused to recognize ranks that he himself had granted and to reimburse the vouchers that the chiefs had signed by his orders, for a war undertaken in his name; he did not even leave to the Vendée the advantages that the treaty of the Jaunaie, concluded between Charette and the republican government-bilican.

The widow of Lescure and Lcmis de Larochejaquelein, known as M. Crc-tineau-JoIy in the military Vendée, the sisters of co derniei-, Boncbamps' widow was placed under surveillance in the middle of the Bocage. We searched several houses, we even found, Saint- .\ubin-de-Baubigné, desecrate by the impious contact of the police the house where Henri and Louis de Larochejaquelein were born; this house whose windows open onto the cemetery where dai;s are buried their eternal sleep of glory the two, brothers dead for the Bourbons.

338 THE JEWISH FRINGE

Conservatives call this "playing politics"; They claim that men of proven reliability are needed. to engage in this exercise; they thus arrive at des-honor their cause and to be shamefully put to the door, which does not prevent them from starting again at the next opportunity The monarchists of Versailles take-nent Decazes fils like those of 1815 took Decazes father.

Justice, once again, is the best policy. ques. If the Bourbons, grateful for the services rendered, had established small fiefdoms for their faithful Bretons half military, half rural, that their owners would have had an interest in defending, they would have found there a strategic center to reorganize their army and march again on Paris when Lafayette, whom they had gorged, chased them away again.

The Jews were therefore able, under the Restoration, to continue their silent work. At the small synagogue on the street Saint-Avoie, which had been enough until 1821, had succeeded the temple of the rue de la Victoire, a street name in which the Jews like to see an omen.

It was only in 1818 that the Semitic question returned before the Chambers. A courageous citizen, the| Marquis de Lattier, demanded, in a petition, the proro-gation of the decrees of 1808 for ten new years. The discussion. Lanjuinais, sad thing to say for a memory which deserves to be honored by so many other culés, asked for the floor to counter the petition. In the House of the deputies the petition had more success. A man of heart, Mr. Paillot de Loynes, concludes with the dismissal of the petition to the Ministry of Justice and the Interior. After a slight discussion, the Chamber of Deputies adopted these conclusions and the referral was pronounced, but influences occult reasons prevented the case from being pursued.

THE JWP IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 330

The Jews, it must be recognized, then showed a great political mind while making very little noise about themselves. There was a period of reserve and preparation.

With the stubbornness of this race, which is eternal restarter, the Jews, as we have said, had inscut in the very place where they were when we had them chased away in the Middle Ages, rue des Juifs; then from there they had radiated into the surrounding area and occupied part of the quarter-Saint Paul's tier. New arrivals from Germany and Poland, gathered around the Mont-de-Piété and around the Temple, they gradually invaded the j>a-Roisses Saint-Jean-Saint-François and the White Coats to Saint-Merry, on one side, while others, following Saint-Antoine Street, established themselves in the parish Saint-Gervais. Today, the parish of Saint-Eustache is almost entirely contaminated and the Ilot has penetrated up to the arcades of the rue de Rivoli.

Fervor reigned in this reborn Kehilah. svTiagogues of rue du Chaume and rue Saint-Avoie were full. Every Saturday, the little lamp lit up in these pious dwellings. For a year, when he died Mayer de Piothschild, the office of the dead was celebrated every days ^ evening and morning, in the house of Salomon Alkau, cousin of James, who lived modestly on rue de l'Homme-Aruié.

The cumbersome and brnvnnt Jew <)"uijournliui n'existed

340 JEWISH FRANCE

not yet. There was no question then of insulting the Christians well, nor to mix with the dukes. As much, since 1870 above all, overwhelmed by the triumph and already imagining themselves to be completely our masters, they were cynical, rude-under the Restoration, they proved that they were capable to know how to wait.

All they had to do was wait, in fact. Given the lack-that absolute of any spirit raised in the bourgeoisie, he was visible that she was going to do out of base envy what the nobility had done out of carelessness and ignorance.

The number of bankers of French origin was, at this time time, quite restricted to Paris. "France," said Coussenel, this great generous nation, is so repulsive by nature to the ignoble traffic which forces man to lie, that he he had to bring from Judah and Geneva infamous mercenaries.))

In front of the Rothschilds, the Hopes, the Rarings, the Casimir Périer, the Lafiltes, the Ternaux, the Delesserts, occup-pay, however, in the financial world, a situation considerable; together, they could have prevented forever the Jewish bank, the German bank, to seize the finances, to introduce theft into the market and to ruin our country. They had been treated with consideration, as they deserved it by their probity, by this impre-clairvoyant no doubt, loving the French too much to suspect-to understand the hatred that Freemasonry stirred up around of her, but so straight, so pure, so irreproachable to the point of view of honesty! They were in relations with ministers who were not yet, like those of today- ' (today, botuso kickers and throwers mines without ore, in; iis men reproached who

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 341

came out of business poor, often keeping, for all heritage, a name around which no one rose suspicion.

A few petty grudges, the burning desire to play a role stifled all patriotism among the bankers; they sponsored the opposition, they overthrew a royalty whose history can undoubtedly judge severely the weaknesses wounds, but which was the honor even if we compare it to the governments that followed, which assured our nation the first rank in Europe, which personified by so many beautiful sides of the great and noble France of the ancestors, this France whose old king had put the colors on Algiers acquired before leaving for exile.

There is an affinity between the people of Orleans and the Jews. All Both worship money and this common worship brings them together.

it's just the value of money; they borrow it when they don't have any; when they have any they give it preferably to their enemies, in which they differ from the Bonapartes, also generous, but who prefer to give to their friends; the d'Orléans know what it is to have, They say like the poet: oportet habere.

These similarities in temperament explain the pre-eminence that the House of Rothschild played under the Monarchy of July ciliate. In reality Rothschild was the first minister-three of the reign and immutably kept this place under changing council presidents.

With the government of Louis-Philippe the reign of Jewish begins. Under the Restoration one could more or less to know the number of Jews. The costs of worship being at their expense, all were registered on the Consistory.

349 THE JEWISH FRINGE

In 1830, Roilischild had this measure repealed and made any census impossible; the religion of Moses was now employed by the State.

As Toussenel says, "there was no more royalty in France and the Jews held it in bondage.

From this reign of the Jews, for eighteen years, a chief-an imperishable work has been published: The Jews, Kings of the Age.

Pamphlet, philosophical and social study, work of poet, thinker, prophet, the admirable book of Toussenel is all of these things at once and my only ambition, I admit, after long years of literary interest, would be that my book could take its place near his in the library of those who want to understand the causes which have cast into ruin and shame our glorious and dear country.

"He is refined and delicate above all," he wrote to me. Mr. de Cherville, who has points of contact, was one day with the author of V Esprit des hèles, who, like him, has the feeling of sylvan nature; and my correspondent was surprised, with a naivety that astonishes me in turn, that a so wonderful a writer was not of the Academy, as if a man could achieve anything when he has a whole nation on his trail.

Toussenel was more than that; he was a spirit that the contemplation of Nature had made him deeply reli-

Phalanstery, would have gone straight to Christ.

He had what the saints had: love and hate,
I "love of the poor, the suffering, the humble, hatred rogues, exploiters, traffickers of human flesh-Maine.

In this eloquent book the epasbe iuat the icjjjiuit ^.ii.^ i ^'o.

THE JUtF DA>S THE HISTORY OF FRNNCE SH

more decent in appearance than our Republic, in essence almost as rotten as she is. All the dirty bargaining are there; the Rothschild diary is recounted there in its dirty kitchens and there you meet the Léon Says, the John Lemoine, Tes Aron, the Charmes, the Berger, the Raflalowich, the Jacquols of the time being given official applications, directorates, consulates, concessions by always threatening to refuse their precarious support, getting angry when they offer to pay them no not what they value, but what they are worth.

Jewish exploitation is displayed here in all its cynicism.
sees the king's ministers spending, to build the Northern railway, one hundred million, an enormous sum for the time when we ignored the gigantic scams Israelites whom we were able to admire; then they were taken away, when everything is finished and there is nothing left at the stall but exploit, offer Rothschild forty years of exploitation for a paltry sum.

Fould is there too, competing with Rothschild, who causes the death of a hundred people by his refusal to renew-to take a machine out of service.

This Fould was the son of a shoe-picker and the Biograpltie Alsacienne-Lorraine tells us all about the curious origins of this family.

'In the last century,' she said, 'lived in Nancy, in great sei-lord and respected, the banker Cerfbeer of Medelsheim, trustee General of the Jews of Alsace and Lorraine. He was the father of eight children including four sons, to whom he had given an education broad and liberal, but who, as true family Gis, profit-were few and placed their duties only after their pleasures.

.\u the bottom of the banker's window stood a small stripper
j lif, which illu-trjit the shoes of the people who went to the clerk. He noticed this child who was collecting the papers who were thrown out into the street, and practiced writing and drawing with a pencil conipter. Armed with this application and pained by the laziness di- his sons, he reproached them, cited the example of this poor man little abandoned orphan, who acquired education by himself- tion that teachers of all kinds, experienced, expensive paid, tried in vain to give them. Then opening the window He called the little one and said to him: "Sit here, my child, you You are studious, you are wise; from now on you will share at this table the my son's exercises, and I hope it will be useful to all of you."

What was said was done; the young shoe cleaner was installed in the banker's hotel and took advantage of the education he received if liberally, became valet, factotum of the house, then clerk, then cashier. He married one of the chambermaids of M"" Gerfbeer of Medelsheim, and finally wanted to settle in his account and founded a banking house in Paris. For this his benefactor gave him an advance of thirty thousand francs, but they did not were not enough and the new bank collapsed. A new sum thirty thousand francs was advanced, which did not improve matters; finally a third sum of the same value was brought to the post to the bankrupt by Ms. Alcan, granddaughter of Gerfbeer and niece of the general baron VVoIff. This time fortune smiled on Fould's efforts and never left him. He joined forces with his son Benoît, who married a Miss Oppenheim, from Cologne, hence the company name Fould and Fould-Oppenheim, long known. His other sons were ■Louis and Achille, the friend and minister of Napoleon III; his daughter of- came Ms. Furtado.

Fould senior died at almost a hundred years old, about thirty years ago. of years. As for the gratitude he should have given, he and his family, his benefactors, it is not up to us to talk.

In Toussenel's book, the new Jewish feudalism is masterfully painted and we cannot resist the pleasure of reproducing the terrible picture that it traces the illustrious writer.

Montesquieu forgot to define industrial feudalism; it is Too bad. There were some piquant revelations on this subject

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 343

expect from the spiritual thinker who said: "The finan- "The people support the State, as the rope supports the hanged man." industrial, financial or commercial feudalism is not based on on honor, nor on honors, like the Republic and the Montesquieu's monarchy. It is based on the commercial monopoly-insatiable greed, mother of cunning, bad faith and coalitions. All its institutions bear the stamp of monopolization—ment, lies and iniquity.

If anarchic despotism only overthrows the proud and respects the humble, it is not so with the despotism of the safe. This one invades the poor man's cottage as well as the palace of princes; any food suits his voracity. Like the mer- cure (I) subtle which insinuates itself by its heaviness and its fluidity to through all the pores of the gangue to seize the most tiny particles of precious metal that it contains; like the hideous tapeworm, whose parasitic rings follow in their circum- evolutions all the viscera of the human body, thus the vampire mercantile runs its suckers to the extreme ramifications" of the social organism to pump out all the substance and extract all the juices.

The tone, under the regime of money feudalism, is the egol-me who vainly seeks to hide under the mask of a phi- hypocritical anthropologist. *
Its motto is: Every man for himself.

The words homeland, religion, faith have no meaning for those men who have a shield instead of a heart.
Merchants don't have a homeland!
Ubi aurum, ibi patria. Industrial feudalism personifies itself in the cosmopolitan Jew.

A Dutch-style religion tramples Christ underfoot and scorns him. to the face to acquire the right to trade with the Japanese •

(1) We will note, this time again, that Toussenel the phalanste- nothing is found in the expression itself with the "marshallis pari- his from the 18th century, of which we have partly reproduced Request.

if»» JEWISH FRANCE

No one better than Toussenel has signaled the conquest of all the Christian states by the Jew.

The Jew, he writes, has struck all States with a new hypo- library and a mortgage that these States will not repay never with their income. Europe would be subservient to domination of Israel; this universal domination that so many conquerors have dreamed, the Jews have it between their mothers, the God of Judah has ter.u word to the Prophets and gave victory to the sons of the Maccabees. Jerusalem imposed tribute on all states; the most clear from the work of all workers goes into the exchange said

If the German Jews represented by Rothschild had so quickly managed to grab most of the fortune public, it should be recognized that they had been powerful—greatly helped by Portuguese Jews.

The Saint-Simonian school which was largely recruited among the Jews, without excluding, however, Christians of origin—gine, certainly one of the most interesting attempts of the human spirit.

Saint-Simonism was an attempt by the Jew to escape from his prison, which was no more than a moral ghetto, to become what Henry Heine called uh ^uî/" Tibtirtj. Without rallying to Christianity, the Jew got around the difficulty by founding a new religion.

Without doubt, here again, material enjoyment, satisfaction—faction of the present life, the love of well-being, the worship of money were the dominant elements, but a desire social organization nevertheless appeared. We opened people with great visions of the future; without any exclusion, I repeat, we invited all the sons of the family human to magnificent feasts; we made it seem before them prospects of promised land. A share even was reserved for these noble feelings of the soul, for these principles of respect, faith, fraternity without which the man falls to the rank of aolmal.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 347

Artists, thinkers, writers, men with projects, the Saint-Simonians did not blaspheme filthily; they did not basely outrage these beautiful ideas which have civilized—read the world. In everything they were the negation of Judaism that we see at work and that we can call the Freemasonic Judaism or Gambettlisle Judaism.

The Saint Simonians proposed to resolve the ques—social tion, Gambettism declares that there is no social question no more than there is a good God. Nothing to do on earth when one was not born a slider, nothing to hope in heaven. When Gambetta or his successors. Ferry, Tirard, Paul Bert and those around them are full, others can brush their stomachs without having the right to seek an absent Providence in a firma—ment empty.

Saint-Simonism, moreover, was profoundly artistic, he had musicians like David, critics like Bûchez, Emile Chevallier, Lerminier. The Gambetlismi.', as well as Zola very rightly explained, had and still has, because he is not quite dead, the scholarship holder's hatred for everything which is literature and art; it can only show pen servants like Laurent or histrions like Coquelin.

Capelig-ue discerned, with his usual penetration, the characteristics that differentiate closed Judaism from the Holy Simonism, which could be called open Judaism.

348 JEWISH FRANCE

The Saint-Simone spirit and the Jewish spirit, he writes, have this similarity that both tend towards speculation, fortune, but Saint-Simonism becomes colorful, passionate, poetic.

[1 makes social humanitarian theory while Judaism limit to work, speculate, win; the year makes the gold ducat shine, puts it under the prism of the sun, the other just puts it in his leather purse without ever being dazzled by the fake shine: Is it of good alloy? that is all he looks at, appreciates and which makes him decide.

The characteristic of the Jews who crucified the true Messiah is to try to create fake ones. Neither Bazard nor Enfantin found themselves up to the role. The Saint-Simonians did not Jews followed their chimeras on all roads, Jewish Saint-Simonians, like the Rodrigues and the Pereire, quickly returned to the instinct of the race and began to arm-to do business.

The Rothschilds, speculators of their nature, had taken care, as we understand, to follow the Jews of the Saint-Simonian school in their attempts to regenerate to create the world. In the immense Paris of ideas and utomagpies, they have always been the same as in their house of thick wooden fence of the Judengasse in Frankfurt, they wait for someone to knock at the door to half-open the peephole and ask what pledge we bring.

The Pereire brothers' first project, the railway of Saint-Germain, had hardly smiled on them; however, as Jacob refuses nothing to his brothers, they helped and sponsored their former employees a little.

When success came, they found that there was really some profits to be made in this way. Only-In fact, regarding the Northern Railway, they asked the Pereire not to concern himself with organizational details,

When everything was finished, when France had spent a hundred millions to give the Rothschilds a railway brand new iron, James brought the Pereires and held them to a little after this speech:

"How little you realize the mission of every race! The Aryan must invent, find steam, by example, and then die of hunger in an attic; he must, in addition, in the form of taxpayers, more or fewer, spend a number of millions to open the network. Then, but only then, we other Semites intervene to collect the dividends This is how you work with the goy. Isn't it written in the Talmud that the Jew is a man and that those who are not Jews are of the seed of cattle? The Deuteronomy Ronome, in verse 11, chapter 6, does he not say: Jehovah, your God will give you houses full of all your goods you have not built? Remember this lesson by love me and praise the Holy One Blessed to be Jews as me otherwise you would not have a penny of the sums which come back to you and that I will hurry to see you-ser. »

The Pereires then understood that the moment would not be^ Having just broken with the God of Moses, they drew closer more of their coreligionists, but nevertheless gar-dere in Judaism, a distinct and separate figure.

Isaac Pereire was a man of great worth. With his handsome patriarchal face, his supple and dignified manners at the same time, he really looked like a descendant of David The hands alone, rapacious and hooked, betrayed the race.

On a cheerful April morning I still see this great old man in this magnificent hotel on rue Saint-Honoré.

In front of the study stretched a wide terrace

2U

3*50 LA. JEWISH FRANCE

decorated with busts, then, after having descended a few marble ches, we entered this splendid garden which goes to Avenue Gabriel and which exercised, on the vis- emerging from the muddy and gloomy street, this attraction houses.

On an armchair, near the table, was an adorable Pater bought at a sale the day before. As I was examining this painting smart and fresh where French guards, sandblasting the Champagne, the little maids were teasing with good heart rebels and not very shy coiuédiennes, the old man said in his very sing-song and very sweet voice: Is it pretty?

If it was pretty, he no longer knew. The eyes were pres- that completely extinguished and, to ask for enjoyment last to the art he had sincerely loved, the possessor of so many wonders passed the hand to guess the outlines on the statues that decorated its park.

A noble vision of serenity and grandeur came to me the soul in this imposing setting, and yet consider this that is the association of ideas. While birds, rejoiced by the first smiles of spring, ga- were playing in the trees of the garden, a stubborn memory came to me from my father's shoemaker. He lived in an apartment perched high in a sad, airless, fetid house, rue Quincampoix, One day, my mother took me with her to find out why we didn't bring a pair of boots promised for a long time. When we arrived, in the black staircase, a horrible staircase with a damp banister that I still feel, so vivid are the childhood impressions- tines, oozing under my fingers, a whole world of coiumères, of neighbors, of workers commented on the lamentable story of the unhappy. With his life's savings, he had.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 3"-

through a legal advisor bought shares in the Furniture loan without his wife's knowledge, he had lost everything and he had hanged himself with the cords of his workbench- vail.

These small details did not disturb, I suppose, Tsa<tc Pereire; he was however faithful to the Jiumanitarian theories of his youth; after having begun by doing his good Happy to him, he dreamed of making the whole world happy.

He willingly placed in the conversation the famous aphorism:

"All social institutions must have as their goal the improvement of the moral, intellectual and physical condition of the largest and poorest class. >

no way, all to the contrary. The poor driver ^yes, night and day standing on his locomotive, exposed to the cold, in the heat, the face whipped by the snow and the wind, contracts one of those terrible diseases that science de-Moorish powerless to cure, is much inferior, to the point of V ;e physical and moral, to the good villager who lived peacefully in a corner of old France, did not work at the beginning of his strength and fell asleep in death with hope to enjoy eternal beatitudes.

The same is true of the famous motto: "To each according to his ability, to each ability according to his works." That it is Jewish low-class people, from Frankfurt or Cologne, who came France to., following the Rothschilds, and who have neither caj aché, nor good or bad works, possess the superfluous, while only men, who have capacity and who have produced (the works lack the necessary!

None of these doctrines stands up to scrutiny, and as need others, Isaac Pereire always preached participation

352 ' LA. FRANCE JUIVB

without ever having involved those around him in anything would.

Let us take advantage of the circumstance to point out the (('lé joker of all these so-called apostles of Progress. There you go, for example, a man like Isaac Pereire, who has everything his life sang of association, cooperation; how did he not didn't think of saying: "Hey, I was a journalist and beso-in my youth, the newspaper La Liberté is only a pin in a ball of fifty million, I'm going to leave ownership to all my editors who will join to exploit it jointly; there will be an interesting test there-healthy. »

These apparent seekers of social solutions are at a thousand leagues from such conceptions. They are less advanced, point of view of devotion to their fellow men, that the Romans of decadence who not only, as well as in testify to countless inscriptions, freed their slaves, before expiring, but left them to live in peace. "After my death," said Trimalcion himself, I want my slaves to drink water free.

The Pereires, however, are relatively good people.
They live very simply and, I believe, don't even have a lodges at the Opera; they do good, moderately, but they honorable and more French than the Rothschilds, they have point, like those escapees from the ghetto, the fury of putting themselves constantly forward, the gross impudence of coming crush with their insolent pomp families whose name is gloriously mixed with our history. This altitude gives them attracts consideration, and, in worldly terms, they are as respected as the Rothschilds, with their pretensions ridiculous, are hated, mocked and despised by those very people who frequent them.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 353

With the ideas they stirred up, the Per'iiire returned to the Judaism, under the government of Louis-Plulippe, the immense service to bring the Jews out of their isolation, to bring them more closely into the community, to put them in good on the horizon the silhouette of the Jewish humanitarian serving in appearance the cause of civilization.

The Rothschilds had substituted the old usury government loans, the Pereires created a whole financial system—new firm; benefits of credit, incessant turnover of money, circulation of capital, they wrapped the all a simulacrum of philosophy and a hint of God literature: bringing people together, improvement, suppression of pauperism....

No doubt the Pereires themselves would not have found all by themselves. To their intimates they showed the skull of Saint-Simon whom they had piously kept in their remains; we can say that this skull was an emblem Of this unfortunate skull emptied, scraped, cleaned, scraped by the two brothers, all the ideas of Crédit Foncier and Crédit Mobilier, all company labels who enriched Israel in the 19th century.

The merit of the bankers of the rue Saint-Honoré was to see what could be learned from this theme. They provided so to the German Jews this 4)little story, this novel—peaceful or warrior zero that must always be told to the Aryan while his loot is taken, the music necessary to accompany the extraction of molars.

This staging was not useless.

The invasion of the Jew, in fact, was endured docilely gUJourd'Ilui, then raised violent protests.

The romantic school, which had been resurrected in literature old France, corrected many false ideas, reconstructed with their color and their relief the customs of other-formerly and the existence of the disappeared generations, had been able to to account, in his study of the past, for the reasons which justified the repulsion of our ancestors for the Jew.

In Victor Hugo, the epithet of filthy is almost always attached to the name of the Jew.

French society protested vigorously against the enemy who was going to destroy it by trickery. All of Paris, revolted by the tasteless luxury that was beginning to display Nucingen, clapped his hands frantically at the scene from Marie Tudor, where Fabiani-Delafose said to Lockroy-Gilbert: "They are all like that, these Jews. The men-dream and theft is all the Jew, »

At the inauguration of the Northern Railway some fanatics tried to shout: Long live Rothschild! But Immediately, snorts and boos were heard. At Ver-The crowd gathered, bursting into laughter, in front of the Smalah dC Ahdd-Kader where Vernet had represented Fould in the guise of a Jew running away with the cassette.

At that time, we heard what no one would dare. now. Rothschild was openly attacked, and and 75,000 copies of the amusing brochures were sold healthy and spiritual that contain astonishing details on the manipulations of the Jewry.

It was called: i7js<ozre edifying and curious of Roths-child 1'-^ king of the Jews; - Ro^hscJuld i^r, his servants and his people, war on rogues, etc., and was the joy of a Paris still independent. New Year's gifts to Rothschild, Almanac of the thousand and one, had the same success.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 355

In this order, we must also mention a spicy one. brochure, published in 1816, all the predictions of which are are made and which seem to tell of events from other today. Its theme was: Grand Trial between Roulis-child I", king of the Jews, and Satan, last king of impos-tors: judgment given on the indictment of Junius, rap-The first page read: Arrit

King of the Jews, former bailiff of the courts of Europe^ general farmer of public works of France, of Germany Magne, of England, etc., etc., suzerain of the discount, usury, pawnbroking, speculative trading, etc., financing steelworker, industrialist, decorated with the Order of Christ, of Cord of the Legion of Honor, etc., etc.

For the maintenance of legitimate rights, monopolies, universal omnipotence of the House of Rothschild and in particular of the said James Rothschild Z^r.

As early as 1835, a work by a man named Renault had appeared Decourl, whose prospect we were only able to meettus, because the Jews make all the books disappear where they are judged a little harshly.

The work was entitled: Universal Conspiracy of the Judaism, fully unveiled, dedicated to all the remembrances-7'ains of Europe, to their ministers, to statesmen and generally to all classes of society menaof these perfidious projects.

The author already pointed out the progressive invasion which has taken on such formidable proportions over the past fifteen years

Since the liberation of the Jews of France, he said, their number has increased so much that, in the provincial towns where there were barely a few hundred of them, but there are now counted by the thousands. What did not seize their views

Îi56 JEWISH FRANCE

usurious? In what kind of business are they not [.as by their devious and cleverly combined tricks cause a crowd of people to fail respectable merchants? Ask the unfortunates who enjoy-were once of sufficient fortune where their goods.

It is certain that the good of the French who, from rich became poor, had to go somewhere. The Jews not having, as far as I know, arrived golden hatches from the bottom from Germany, it is obvious, despite the all new loc systems of political economy, which they had to take from where they were the riches of which they were proud.

The Jews, who now have the press almost to themselves entire, except for a few rare exceptions, had not yet bought that the Press, the Debates, the Council and the Century, who refused the advertisements in the brochures agreeable to Rothschild.

Independent newspapers of all parties, the Reform, the National, Peaceful Democracy, the Cor-Satan's sary, V Universe, \a Daily, France, written by valiant and French feathers, overwhelmed, with their biting epigrams, of their indignant revelations, these Turcarets swollen with crowns. It is in vain that the Archdukes The Isaiahites called upon heaven to witness the virtues of Israel, earth responded by recounting his misdeeds.

In July 1845, a charming spirit, a little turned towards the strange, but of exquisite originality, Petrus Borel, wrote a true masterpiece in the Journal du Commerce, regarding a representation given-born with great fanfare, by Rachel and the tribe of Felix; he treated from top to bottom, with a fine insolence of a scholar, whose pen leaves bruises on the skin like a gentleman's riding crop, this whole gang of gypsies and street singers, who had ended up take the high ground in Paris.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRENCHNESS 357

The Jew is more and more invasive, he wrote, without realizing-to what extent he was a prophet, in art as in the city: !e time is not far off when this race, once proscribed and burned, will will have been so decimated and subjugated that our cities will have nothing left but in a small corner of their suburbs a Christian community where there will be relegated to opprobrium and misery the remains of the last Chileans, as in the Middle Ages they each had a jui-where the last remains of Judea were rotting.

Poor wretch! The Jews, according to their custom, pursued him all his life, they hunted him down like a wild beast; he was already dying when they managed to to snatch from him the small job he held in Algeria, where he had taken refuge to escape them. Thanks to their intrigues, Pelrus Borel, the great writer, died of ignorance!

There was, once again, a very curious movement of defense against Semitism, on which the place we lack to insist as it would be appropriate. Someone will undoubtedly be found to devote to this subject a chapter which will be instructive and for which information-new elements will be provided; this question, in fact, (July has been sleeping for almost thirty years, has only just returned in the discussion, the monopolization of all the newspapers by the Jews even prevents it from developing.

Historians of the 19th century will return to all this.

or. poorly known from the 13th and 14th centuries. When we study-will say this point, most of the journalists of the reign of Louis-Philip, to whatever opinion they belong, appear-' will play a very beautiful role, very far-sighted, very peregreedy, very political, absolutely disdainful of money

3')8 JEWISH FRANCE

that the deputies and statesmen accepted without shame Rothschilds and Foulds.

The Duke of Orleans was also very struck by this invasion.
3a new genre and proposed to put it in order. This prince, so easy at first, so affable to everyone and who treated the artists as comrades, never wanted to receive Rothschild at his table. In 1842, when the baron demonstrated the desire to attend the Chantilly races, the Duke of Orleans refused to admit him to his platform.

A very significant passage from the eloquent author of the Jui/'s Rdis of the time, shows us what the feelings were of the Royal Prince on this point (1).

Sire, the Prince Royal, your beloved son, moaned bitterly of the encroachments of this insatiable power of the Jews, of these Jews, he said, who violate the power, crush the country, bring the curses of the worker back to the innocent throne burdened.

In his dreams of future royalty, he dreamed of freeing himself of a shameful vassalage, to break this new feudalism so burdensome for kings and for peoples; but he did not hide himself perils of the struggle. Perhaps royalty will succumb in Celtic struggle, he said one day to one of us; because these bankers will make themselves for a long time still, against the king, a weapon of ignorance of this the same people that the king wanted to serve. They will irritate his sufferings-

(1) The heroic Prince Im, a material that the Freemason Carrey ambushed and murdered in Zululand, had exactly the same feelings, and we can say that we will find traces of it in the draft constitution and the political works-ticks emitting from him, which were published some day. While showing opposition to any idea of religious persecution, the young man Prince strongly affirmed the need to protect the worker against Jewish exploitation, to defend savings against maneuversworks of the Enaacists.

frances by their lying press, they will again empty several salcbind them in the public square, they will throw their serfs against the palace unoccupied; and to lull the fury of this people, after which will have unleashed it, they will throw it one more royalty to devour.
I know that harsh eventualities await us; but there is no
no longer to shrink from the dangers of war, because the dan-
The gers of peace are even more imminent... It is necessary that, without later, today's royalty takes back the people from Jews, otherwise this government will perish by its Jews.

Did the Count of Paris know these noble words when-that some time ago he sat with his family at Rothschild's table, when his 011th was making his first First steps in the world in Ferrières? What a start for a girl from France I

U VtXmmiE REPUBLIC AND THE SECOND EHFIBE

CrémieuZ and Gondchauxaa pooToir. – Rothschild jumps the bank-< rolls. – France changes Jews. – The reign of the Ja'jti 4P Noon. – Pereire, Mirés and So'ar. – Offensive return of the German Jewsmands. – The organization of war. – The tempter lenlé.
– Bishop Bauer. – The German Jew is everywhere at the end of the Ei0-worse. – The dispatch from the WolfTel agency the declaration of war.

fi

THE SEVENTH BEPCBLIQUK AND THE SECOND EMPIRE

The Revolution of 1848 is the only one in France which did not not been pleasant to the Jews, while waiting for the one who will be infinitely less actionable for them, the good one, the one which will be made against them.

Lagrange's pistol shot almost blew up the Jewish bank, but like the Greeks who do not sit never at the écarté table except with a king or two of spare change in their waistcoat pocket, the Rothschilds do not only play with two or three Jewish statesmen in the sleeve. The king xraà fell under the table, the ban-quier suddenly spread out on the carpet, in front of the gallery which saw only fire there, a nice batch of brand new kings: Crémieux and Goudchaux. I think there was a three of a kind and that Mary was also of Jewish descent.

The first played a fairly important role in the

we dedicated a special chapter to him. Goudchaux was fiddling around in the small bank, he exploited the traders-embarrassed Parisians, with the secret help of Rothschild; he was expecting what I believe are called brooches. It was a manner of Tirord; of the maker of false jewels, Minister of Finance of the Third Republic, who so easily misplaces a hundred million at the pawnbroker's the second, the difference is not very noticeable (1).

(1) In the Revolution of 1888, said Crémieux in 1839, the war council of Oran, de laifj were attached to the timou of

364 JEWISH FRANCE

According to the Israelite Archives (year 1863), this would not be that on the pleas of the provisional government that Goudchaux would have deigned to accept the Ministry of Finance. I think we should see this as just another feature of the effron-Jewish society, the hutzpah. These abasements, usual in our Republicans of today, were not in character Republicans of 1848. Arago was able to take this step, but our glorious Lamartine, who remains so great despite his mistakes, had a soul too disinterested to be involved in these maneuvers; with the candor of the Aryans, he let-a Goudchaux introduced himself into the government to guarantee-shot the interests of Jewry, but he did not have the thought to humiliate before the Israelite bank the people who had just break a throne (1).

this tank was so difficult to steer. One of them was a member of the gov-provisional government and minister of justice, that is to say of the holiness among men; the other was the minister of finance, that is that is to say, probity among men." What aplomb! Malesherbes wouldn't have dared to say that.

(1) Here in any case is the story from the Archives: "Two members of the provisional government, Messrs. Lamartine and Arago surrendered at Goudchaux's on the night of Friday the 24th, at one o'clock, and begged him to take over the Ministry of Finance temporarily. On his refusal, they told him that Mr. de Rothschild and the principal members of the high bank were preparing to leave Paris, and that for the prompt restoration of commercial interests, it was urgent that he accept the Ministry of Finance. These niolifs alone have overcome his resistance. Indeed, upon his acceptance, Mr. de Rothschild went to his house and told him that his presence reassured him, and that he would remain in Paris, and the General Council of the Bank declared that he would pay at an open office.

▼erse of kings and ciiasse of valiant princes who fought for France, and lets itself be led by the nose by Jews from Frankfurt, which indicates to the ministers that it is necessary to take 1 In spite of of the hypochondria which comes to them from the race, like letiRolbschilddoi- sometimes laugh heartily when we talk to them about these citizens

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANXE 363

Everyone, moreover, remained faithful to their role. Lamartine, faced with the perils of the Fatherland, cried out: "Let us save France!" Goudchaux cried out: "Let's save Rothschi ld î"

Rothschild's situation was critical, and he was filling the antechambers of lamentations not on what he was losing, but on what he lacked to gain. No victim was less interesting; as Capefigue explains to us (i), he had tendered, in 1847, a loan of 250 million; from November 1847 to February 1848, he was able to place this loan by realizing even, the courses attest to it, a modest profit of 18 million francs.

With the greed that distinguished him, Rothschild had not found these 18 million worthy of him; he had kept the titles in his portfolio. When the Revolution broke out, he cynically refused- to pay the 170 million he still owed, he went bankrupt purely and simply. He is not necessary, in fact, to be very versed in the questions financial, to understand that the chance of winning implies that one accepts the risk of losing.

The government's conduct was all mapped out, it had than to grab this bankrupt and deposit him in Mazas which had just been built.

The good Goudchaux, you guessed it, took care not to act Thus, he considered Rothschild's theory valid. that the word given to the goy does not bind the Jew. No only he secretly admitted this man, who had just fail to meet its commitments to the State, to a new veraables which do not reveal mitlres, and which lead to the baguette in times of Republic, by one of their employees, Goud- lime or Léon Say!

(1; History of Grandet Financial Operations.

your conditions, but still he pushed kindness to him
provide the funds necessary to service the Greek loan.

Here Copefigue falls struck with admiration and we Let us explain this feeling (1). In history, I know little of more amusing episodes. The people are all black with po-dream, he dies of hunger on the cobblestones he has moved, all the workshops are closed; finally he is victorious, he is emancipated, he secured the freedom of the world, he succeeded... in what?
to put an obscure Jewish money changer in the Ministry of Finance:
the Goudchaux. In the midst of so much supplicating misery, only one misery strikes the sensitive soul of the child of Israel;
in the dry Treasury, he finds a way to pick up some funds and he takes them himself to Mr. de Rothschild. There,

Lockroy, the comedy you should have done; you would have given us entertained more than with the Zouave is in l'ias....

Proudhon, with a harsh and just word, defines the Revolution

(1) F aile Barrault, in the series of Letters sold in the streets there were many placards that he addressed in 1848, when he was Chief Editor of the Tocsin of the Workers, to all the men of niomeul, to Limartine, to Thiers, to Cavaignac, to Prince Louis Napo-Leon, showed the same surprise.

"You are a fool, sir," he said at the beginning of his letter.
to Rollischild. Maluré his four archdukes, despite his legal majority, Loni^~l'hilinpe falls; Guirot collapses; together they leave royalty coiittilnliDiineile and parliamentary eloquence, you resist.
It is not only the established peace that February overturns;
what he raises he brings down. Where are the personification of the pocsi", and rillusttaliou of science, which an explosion of popularity launched to the top; where are Arago and Lamartine? On the ground. You, you pla-nose. Shareholders, shopkeepers, manufacturers, rentiers, tumble into crowd, big on small, crushing on crushed Alone, in the middle of so many ruins, you don't flinch.... In short, all opulence collapses, all glory is humbled, all dominion is thrown away; 1 Jew, king of the era, kept his throne.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 367

of 1848: "France," he said, "has only changed Jews, n

However, this Revolution was almost ended.
a considerable influence on the future of France. From the proclamation of the Republic, the peasants of Haut and on the homes of the Jews; in Heyemheim, in particular, they had regained possession of everything that had been stolen. Brought before the jury in Strasbourg and Colmar. They were acquitted amidst cheers and carried on triumph.

Before the jury of Colmar, Mr. de Sèze, lawyer at the Court appeal, defended these accused, more interesting than the victims, with wonderful talent and withers the Jews in one of the most energetic harangues that ever sounded in a French courtroom.

Unfortunately the movement was isolated, no committee anti-semitic did not exist then to allow everyone the oppressed to get along and act together, and the attempt at emancipation of Christians had no suites.

Fould first married Jewry with the Empire, and, in his as Minister of State, then married the Emperor and the Emperor operator, pronouncing, without doubt, m petto, all the formulas of curses that the Talmud contains on the child who was to be born of this marriage and who was the unfortunate Princ* Imperial.

At the beginning of the Empire, German Jewry, represented by Rothschild, stepped back a little to leave the field free to the Bordeaux Jewry represented by the Pereire, the Mil-laude, the Solar. The Jew Mires enters the scene.

368 JEWISH FRANCE

The Jews of the South displayed the qualities peculiar to their race and that we have already noted: the brilliance, the taste, movement. With them the gold, which piles up gloomily in the Rothschild cellars as brought back by the silent rake of an invisible dealer, rang, tinkled, shone with splendors of fairyland and sounds of song; it accompanied, like Marco's refrain, the joyful period of this reign which was to end in terrible catastrophes.

The rolling of the coins was joined by the resounding declaration on the reign of civilization, the era of progress, the improvement of cities and the moralization of individuals by the gas.

To see this truly dazzling spectacle again, if close to us in date, and which already seems lost in the distant ages, you only have to reread the beautiful dis-

today these scandals, these outbursts of ap-small, this deification of wealth, opposed to these corruptions the austere image of the future Republic which would reduce spending, ban nepotism, respect-would be everyone's home!

A book by a great writer, who at least is a honest man, the Money Handlers, sums up this movement, as Toussenel's book had summarized the movement of the reign of Louis-Philippe.

Toussenel, however, had the courage to indicate the the leading role of the Jew in these shames. Mr. Oscar de Vallée left this point in the shadows. Time had mar-ché, in fact, and the Jew had become an adversary that one could not could not brave without danger. This gap, nevertheless removes any precise meaning from the work and makes it a

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 369

declamation in the style of Seneca rather than a study taken from life of French society.

Despite everything, this first phase had a picturesque appearance.
resque, a frenzied enthusiasm. The Jew of the South is not far-I am embarrassed to believe that the Aryan has the right to eat sometimes;
he rubs himself with letters like the Bordelais rubs himself with garlic, he is not incapable of appreciating a newspaper article.

The Constitutional, this Voltaire of the time, the Country, this Paris of the Empire, opened their coffers to writers who were not without talent. Millaud founded Vllistûire which fell before him and the Petit Journal which survived his nephew Alphonse. Without having the noble bearing of the Farmers generals, who were called Lavoisier or Be.uijon, who created chemistry or founded hospitals, the Em-worse enjoyed the company of artists, they were even writers in their spare time; to Solar, who had Clai-ron ei Clairette, Millaud responded by giving the Palais-Royal My Niece and My Bear.

To a few, as to Solar, fortune had come without doing much to conquer it, by virtue of this secret force, which brings money to the Jew as the iron to the magnet. On certain days, the author of Clairon and Clairette seemed embarrassed by her millions.
Who does not know the melancholic word of this millionaire?
in spite of himself: "Peace and little, such has always been my motto,
I always lived in noise and I ended up having too much.

Bordeaux surrounded themselves with French people; their guests were called-Dumas senior, Ponsard, Albéric Second, Méry, Monselet.

Happy to be alive, they had palaces built and were restoring old castles when German Jews

21.

370 JEWISH FRANCE

knocked on the door of the banquet hall and said to them: "Brothers, you have been at the table for ten years, you must be satisfied, if you would let us in in turn."

To invite them to leave, we lightly pressed the place with the help of German capital. Pereire, who had Mirés, was half crushed by Rothschild and we saw intervene in the market by bankers from Outre-Rhin.

To move big things you need a lever, a theme. The Rothschilds, in their first way, had played state loans, the Pereires and the Mirés, in fact appealing for public subscriptions, had emptied the small purses. Some had relied on peace without phrases, peace at all costs; it was the time when the famous saying: "We will not have war, the king is there decided, but Mr. de Rothschild does not want it. » The others had supported in their newspapers a kind of peace intermittent, philosophical at the same time, bringing together in an idyllic group the sister nations finally reconciliated, opening Universal Exhibitions.

The peace was worn out, the German Jews as a base of operation took the war; they organized, under the appearances-military events, the most vast and admirable speculative financial operation that has ever been tried and succeeded.

Who does not know this famous interview where, on the terrace from Biarritz, Mephistopheles Bismarck came to attempt the Emperor by offering him kingdoms to share (1)?

(1) The frivolous courtiers of Biarritz, it seems, owed this visitor strange with eyes shining with a dark fire, with Liaulain manners and beduisanles in tuônne time, both iuquiélaut el fasciut, to have

The tempter himself had been tempted, he had succumbed and concluded the Jewish pact, which is as subtle as the Devil, had gone to find Mephisto and showed him Alsace as Mephistopheles showed Napoleon III the shores of the Rhine.

Isn't the famous scene from the Second Faust?

– We have no money to pay our troops, Our states are in full revolt and our Chancellor does not know where to turn; thus speaks the Emperor, as if he recounted the critical situation of Prussia when the Parliament refused to vote for taxes.

– Never mind, replies the Evil One; to bring out money from the bowels of the earth, it is enough to create paper currency.

Alois is holding a party that looks quite similar to the Exposition universelle of 1867, where, as in the Second Faust, we see the Beautiful Helen appear, and suddenly the marshal enters into all joy, announcing that all is well world; the general also comes to say that all the troops have been paid; the treasurer cries out that all his coffers are full of riches.

felt an impression of this kind, they made it continuous, according to the fashion of the time, a small canon of operella.

tonight, it's a horrible page

To tell that one –U!

A stranger at the Villa

Vat ring in large equip;

They welcomed him: it was Satan!

< Satan, says Mr. Cuvillier-Fleury who cites these Verses dated 1860, said Posthumous and Revenants, it is Mr. de Bismarck, he came to the Villa where he left behind, when he left, like a smell of sulfur and saltpeter. " It smells like biiiile\" àisail-oa.

372 JEWISH FRANCE

–So it's a miracle? said the Emperor.

you presided over the party, in the costume of the great Pan, Your Chancellor told us: "I bet that to do the general happiness, a few strokes of plume." So, for the rest of the night, a thousand artists quickly reproduced a few words written in his hand, stating only: this paper is worth ten; this other one is worth one hundred; this other is worth a thousand, and so on. Your signature is affixed, in addition, to all these papers. Since this moment, all the people are given to joy, gold circulates and flows everywhere; the Empire is saved (1).

Goethe's scene gives us roughly the scenario of the events of 1870. The Jews offered Bismarck all the paper money he needed and, to exchange the paper money for hard cash, they made to succeed in the French war, because France was the only one country where there was money "in the bowels of the earth. "

The preparation for this war was admirable by all points, I repeat. Germany, in reality, had few thing to do and the agents of Stieber, the police chief from Berlin, who launched armies of spies upon us, found-saw the job ready-made; the Jew delivered to Germany the France all tied up.

From 1865 onwards, everything was invaded by German Jewry; The German Jew is the master in all places where the social life manifests itself. The Jew Olienbach, united with the Jew Halevy mocks the army chiefs in General Boum

(1) The Second Faust, translation by Gérard de Nerval.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 373

French. The excellent Father Kugelmann runs this printing-a street constantly crossed by people coming and going, who speak aloud and who always deliver, to ears always tense, interesting news, information-useful. His neighbor, Schiller, has the most organs. serious, like Time. Wittersheim has VOfficiel; Dol-Lingen and Cerf, two Jews, keep the newspapers by the announcements. The Jewish correspondents, the Lewitas, the Lewi-sohn, the Deulchs, the Jacob EMans, arrive at the time of layout in editorial offices, are installed in a good armchair, read the proofs before the writers and quietly collect in their notebooks everything that is said out loud and what is not written.

Germain Sée, despite the courageous petitions of Mr. Giraud in the Senate, demoralizes the growing generation, in teaching materialism to the youth. Turn around towards the places where we have fun, and, under the palm trees in zinc of Mabilly, you will see the Jew Albert Wolf, familiar with Colonel Dupin and making himself explained by the former leader of the guerrillas in Mexico, on which he published an interesting article, the weak sides of the French army.

Enter the Tuileries, it's Adrien Marx who occupies the em-Racine's work and who is a historiographer of France; it is Jules Cohen who directs the music of the Chapel; it is Wadleufel, who conducts the orchestra at the Court balls. Jewish archives request that a professor be appointed maHiemaliques of the Imperial Prince a Jew of Bohemia named Philippe Koralek.

Enter the sacred retreat from which no one, not even the Emperor, do not cross the threshold, you will see a woman there kneeling before a priest and confiding her anxieties to him sovereign and mother about the war that is brewing.

374 JEWISH FRANCE

This priest is the German Jew Jean-Marie Bauer. Never, since Cagliostro, Jewish interlopism, which nevertheless produces-bearing such curious figures, has produced such a complete, also worthy of interest to the writer who, later, will try to paint our strange century.

A fine morning, this suspicious convert arrives in this France whose clergy, by the height of its spirit, pro-founder of his science, the dignity of his life, is admiration of the whole world; he sets out to supplant the venerable Abbé Deguerry, chaplain to the Empress since long years, to occupy this position of trust of preference to all the priests in the country and he succeeded...

Does he achieve his goal through hypocrisy, by displaying apparent virtues? Not at all; his motto, as well as all Jews, is that we can get away with anything with the French; he organizes these famous ecclesiastical lunches where assist Paul Bert's future advisors, those who change-probably try with a prelate known for his republicanism:

Our paradise is a cherished breast.

displays a luxury of lace that makes women dream.

The siege begins: this acrobat in purple stockings puts on boots on the horse, he is chaplain general of the- ambulances, he gallops to the outposts, and his cavalcades drag him- always so close to the enemy that he would have time to throw him some useful information about the besieged city.

When it's all over, he bursts out laughing in the face of those he has fooled; he throws his Monsignor's robe into the wings from a small theater, it inspires pornogi'aphi- publications questions about the cocodettes of the Second Empire, he parades at the Opera where the greatest lords admit this priest unworthy in their lodge; in the afternoon, you meet him at horse in the Bois de Boulogne, where he gives a military salute to Gallifel, who, with a gesture of his hand, returns a bene- episcopal diction. Finally, slightly demonetized, it ends to go and get married in Brussels.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 375

By choosing such a schemer as confessor, the poor woman who paid so cruelly for such improvidence obeys the general feeling, which increasingly distances those who have an action on the affairs of the country of all that is French, of everything that comes out of the ground.

You know the word d'Aureilly. Someone said before him: Oh! me, if I confessed, I would not want confess to Lacordaire. - Monsieur has the pretension to have distinguished remorse? exclaims the illustrious writer Catholic.

The unfortunate sovereign also had distinguished.

In other circles, there was a love of vague theories, sentimental paradoxes, cloudy speculations.

A few months before the war, Michelet sang in

(1) The brother of this Bauer fulfills in Madrid the role that fulfills- knows eo Belgium the Lambert who married a Rolhschiid; he is General of Jewry in Spain. Viscount Dressou, pre- first secretary of the French embassy and now cbar^^é business in Belgrade, came with his wife to play the comedy of company cbez him, sometimes Feuillet, sometimes Gozlan. You guess the contempt that Kavilisse inspired in the Spaniards, so proud and so dignified-from Spain.

376 JEWISH FRANCE

Our sons, an ardent hymn to "his dear Germany!" including he regrets being separated by the Kehl bridge; he dreamed of make this bridge a kind of Avignon bridge where all the people would dance in circles.

They are all like this. Generals, writers, all confess-sent to the Jews.

You saw Colonel Dupin, look at Colonel StofTel. He too receives a visit from a Jew who comes as a pollster, as they say in thieves' slang. Read what the colonel made to Pietri and you will see the Jew at work go-between, field tester, half spy and half negotiator.

Lieutenant Colonel StofTel wrote to Mr. Pietri, at the dated November 20, 1868, while Mr. de Moltke, executed his famous study trip to our borders.

I told you in my last letter that I had some rather curious details to give you; here is the thing: MB., which I spoke about more high, is an important banker in Berlin, correspondent of Rothschild and businessman of Bismarck. Starting from the bottom, he is par-came, through constancy and practicality, to make a considerable position. He is the only Jew that Bismarck receives familiarly, the only one with whom he agrees to dine. He employs him as intelligence hunter, gives him certain missions of confidence, etc., etc. Something to note in the history of government-Prussian governments that have succeeded one another for a hundred years, they have almost crazy employed a Jew (already in the time of Sieyès), as more or less occult instrument. The one I'm talking to you about, without to be precisely an intriguer, aspires to play a role and to take the place of his predecessors, among whom the Jew Ephraim shines in the front row. Add that he is a gifted man, of forms benevolent, with whom I live in fairly regular and cordials. So, MB..., after having spent eight days in Varzin. at Bismarck's, came to see me very recently, and, if I'll tell you the details of our interview, it's just that everything suggests that he was responsible for probing me or knowing my notice. He took care, as a preamble, to ask me for the secret more absolute about our conversation, and then told me at length-his last conversations with Bismarck and the arrangements where

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 377

The minister, Mr. B.. told me, desires peace more ardently than never; he will do everything possible to preserve it; he is other- so much more sincere in expressing himself thus that he explains himself why the North cannot and should not desire annexation today of the Southern States; that the unity of Germany will come about quite naturally- sooner or later, and that his mission, Bismarck, is not to rush the moment, but rather to consolidate the work of 1866, etc., etc. On all sides, people are wondering if there is no means of restoring confidence between France and Prussia, no means of reassuring minds in Europe and putting an end to this affliction- giant stagnation of business. An interview with the Emperor with King William would be watched by many people as the most effective way to achieve these results. It was discussed in Varzin, and people around Bismarck seek his opinion on the possibility of a such an interview. His close friends told me that he would be delighted if she could take place, but he does not hide the fact that, in order to bring it about- to the Emperor, it would be necessary for him (Bismarck) and the king undertake to give serious guarantees, clearly expressed- (in writing, the banker told me), that of not interfere with a view to arriving at a union with the South. At the end of account, MB.. asked me what I thought of the provisions of the Emperor to accept or refuse an interview with such guarantees given (I).

The confidence of all these people in the Jew was unimaginable. Do you know who Colonel Stoffel, who however- dant knows the Jews, addressed to send to the Tui- leries his secret dispatches to the Prussian Jew Bleichröder.

(1) Papers and correspondence of the imperial family.

T78 JEWISH FRANCE

It is absolutely necessary, he wrote to Pietri on November 20, 1868, that you let me know, by two words thrown to the post office, if you received a shipment last Thursday 19, in the evening. It was one job for the Emperor and another for the minister, both contained under the same five-seal envelope that I had entrusted to Mr. Bleichröder, a Berlin banker going to Paris {}.

Benedetti was in Berlin the tenant of a Jew to whom, from rest, he forgot to pay his rent when he left; that's what he did the most spiritual thing in his diplomatic career.

The Dave Correspondence recounted, in 1872, how a Czech patriot had given Mr. de Gramont a tra-

English. Mr. de Gramont found nothing better "than to give this document to a German Jew who hastened, naturally, to publish it in the German newspapers, great profit from his friend Bismarck. »

In such conditions, Técrouloment has nothing that may surprise; it was a stock market hit like the disaster of the General Union. All the supports were sawn in advance and European Jewry being a bitch and France on the other, it was easy to predict who would succumb—berait.

However, everything almost went wrong at the last moment. A sovereign humanitarian, a man with a profoundly good heart, to be endowed with a clairvoyant faculty that was neutralized by the absence of will aggravated, this time, by a terrible, Napoleon III resisted as much as he could the pressure of the Empress who, goaded by the Jew Baaer, cried out: "This is my war!" Christian monarch, William sen-

(1) Papers and correspondence of the imperial family.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 37D

was his conscience troubled at the thought of the hundred thousand men who, today, peacefully cultivated the land and who, in a month, when a word would have been spoken—cée, would be lying dead on the battlefields. Until—At the supreme hour, the Empress Auirusta was near him a supplicant for peace; it is even said that she threw herself one last time at her husband's feet, when everything seemed—blait finished, to urge him to make one last effort.

William did what the Emperor certainly would not have done. or rather could not have done in his place, the candidacy of the Prince of Hohenzollern to the throne of Spain was withdrawn.

Desperate German Jews attempted the coup fake news, which almost always succeeded for them, the shot (hi Tartar, as they say at Rothschild. An agency Jewish agency, the Wolff Agency, announced that our ambassador had been grossly insulted by the King of Prussia, and you see from the enthusiasm with which the French Jewish press sent back the steering wheel.

"We have disrespected our ambassador, we have slapped the i'rance, my blood boils in my veins! "so cried these republicans who, today, receive all diplomatic kicks, saying: thank you very much (I)!

Although it is only the prelude of amazing things that we will now collect at every moment in this history of France, which is now nothing more than history

(It is needless to add that Count Benedetti formally denies—
In his book: My Mission in Prussia, the history of this ou-imaginary tragedy. "I will not stop," he said, "at the pretenders insults to which I would have been subjected, nor to the improper procedures that attributed to me.

3. JEWISH FRANCE

Jewish in France, the fact of this war, declared on a Stock Exchange dispatch, deserves to attract attention. He says well the psychological state of this country, which no longer has as its basis traditional institutions, which is in the air, subject to all atmospheric influences, sometimes rising upwards like a balloon that the wind lifts, sometimes falling to flat as a deflated balloon...

VI

THE GOUGERELLE OF SEPTEMBER 4. — LA COULONNE THE THIRD REPUBLIC

The Jews of the Government of National Defense. — The austerity of the Picard. — The continuation of the war. — Simulate the Baden and Steenackers the Belgian. — The two Jewish sovereigns. — Gambetta and Crémieux. — The intervention of a third Jew. — The spies Jews during the war. — The Jews during the siege. — The entrance
Prussians in Paris. — A Stock Exchange in a camp. — The worker Parisian. — The Commune. — Simon Maycr and the column of the Grand Army. — Like the men of the Restoration, the conservatives of the Versailles Assembly are foreign to everything feeling of justice. — The repression is both relentless and unjust. — The talisman of the little papers. — The morals of the high democracy. — Catholics foolishly ignore the instrumoves from the failures of the men of September 4. — The Duke of Broglia and its ignorance of reality. — The Jewish slaughter in Germany and in France. — Paris, depopulated by the Commune, is repopulated by the Jews. — The false Alsatians. — The Jews take the direction-tion of the republican movement. — The trade manifesto Parisian. — The Castries and the Sina — The Count's ideas of Arnim. — An insolence of the Baroness of Rothschild. — The embarras of M. Decazes. — The restoration of the Monarchy. — The Count of Chambord did not want to reign. — May 16. — The man-that the government's energy. — The political testament of Berlin. – The Jews in Romania. – France driven out of Egypt.

– The reign of Gambetta. – The Jews prepare a new war against Germany. – The big deal. – The attitude of the Prince of Bismarck. – Roustan on stage. – The expedition of Tunisia. – Our poor soldiers. – The Tunisian Founding Credit and the fez of Mustapha. – The virtue of Floquet. – We are looking for new quarrel with Germany. – The affair of the rue Saint-Marc.

– The dangerous madness of Déroulède. – The Sedan feast.
– – Gambetta disappears. – The arch-mime Ferry. – LeToi.kin.– The search for gold. – Always the financial companies. – Laug-His. – The convention with the railways. – The railways of Senegalese iron. – Absolute impotence of Jewish policy. The Tohu va bohou lalmudic. – The solution to the question social.

THE GOVERNMENT OF SEPTEMBER 1. – U COMMUNE THE THIRD REPUBLIC

September 4, as expected, put the power to the French Jews: the Gambettas, the Simons, the Picards, the Magnins, to whom, if we are to believe \i. of Bismarck, who is generally considered to be quite well informed, You should contact Jules Favre. He is a Jewish financier, Edmond Adam, who took possession of the prefecture of police. Camille Sée, the secretary general of the Ministry of inside, is Jewish.

Mr. Busch's work, Count Bismarck and his continued during the French war, is very explicit in this subject. On February 10, speaking of Strousberg, the minister said:

Almost all members or at least many members" of the Provisional Government are Jews: Simon, Crémieux, Magain and Picard, who was not believed to be Jewish, and very probably also <îarabetta, from the type of her face; I even suspect Jules Favre.

We do not know to what extent the fact is exart for Jules Favre, at least it seems true for Picard. A Picard was among the deputies of Jewish notables in 1806. Among Jews admitted to the Polytechnic School in 1882, the Archives Israelites mention a Picard Berheim, – the son of the publisher of Paul Bert's anti-French manual. We know the role played in the Tunisian affair by the Jew Weill Picard.

It is not, as Mr. Henri Rochefort claims, a

3S4 JEWISH FRANCE

It is due to the energetic intervention of Fould and the Jewry that Ernest Picard's brother had to come out of a town bad step. (1).

(1) Here is also the story of Mr. Henri Rochefort in Vlntransi-giant of May 21, 1883, a story to which Mr. Arthur Picard did not oppose cuD denied, although the General Council of the Basses Alpes put it obliged to do so. When such fellows are mixed up with liquidation accounts which include two or three billion and that they find themselves in the company of men of their caliber, you judge whether the coins should roll.

"When I sat in City Hall as a member of the government-National Defense Department, writes Mr. Henri Rochefort, Raoul Rigaul, then secretary of the police prefect of Keralry, gave me a report, found in the boxes of the former prefect and signed by a commissioner police, which recounted the arrest and imprisonment in Mazas of a scholarship holder accused of stealing 300,000 francs from various people.

"This story was all the more interesting because the thief was the one brother of a member of the September 4 government, - against which Gambelta harbored the most lively hostility. Nothing could be more curious, in fact: the prisoner was going to be taken to the police station, when The Emperor had the idea of proposing to the deputy of the Opposilian, brother of the miserable, to save his family from dishonor, on the condition that the fierce opponent would pass imperceptibly into the ranks of the majority.

"The deal was accepted, and the party that called itself an inslaiit The "Open Left" was born from this washing of dirty linen. Well, this former resident of Mazas, you can probably imagine that the SpuUer, the ChallemeI and other puritans excluded him from never of their immaculate group? Think again: they all recom-called for universal suffrage with as much warmth as they had put to exorcise Mr. de Boueiller. He is now a deputy, and it is up to them only he must.

"We will be less odious than these honorable people, and we will not name-will not let the thief they made their friend. Unfortunately, our discretion will probably be useless, because it is likely that as soon as the first words everyone has already recognized.

Mr. Henri Rochefort []speaks of a police commissioner because he remembers a report by Mr. Martinet, dated July 31, 1857, ousla-that he had been forced to expel Mr. Arthur Picard from the Stock Exchange where his presence among his dupes caused a scandal. The report

The situation was very simple. France spent its existence of nation to win resounding victories and to suffer terrible defeats, she had Tolbiac in turn. Bouvines, Marignan, Rocroy, Denain, Fontenoy, Auster-Litz, Lena, Solferino and Cr cy, Agincourt, Poitiers, Pavia, Rosbach, Waterloo; she only had to do what she had always done in similar circumstances, to sign the peace, to heal his wounds, to say: "I will be happier-reuse another time.

This is how Bismarck, who reasoned according to the principles of common sense, had understood things. And that he has declared it on many occasions, notably to Mr. Werl , mayor of Reims (1), he intended to sign peace in Reims; constatating the theft of 300,000 francs from the "accusal of the Soci t  g n rale, the arrest of the accused and his confessions, that of Mr. Bondeville, peace officer; he is from December 11, 1915, and he has published. How austere these left-wing deputies are!

(1) Read the cover of Mr. de Bismarck with the mayor of Reims Mr. Werl , in quilting the Chancellor, faithfully recorded the exact text of this interview in the newspaper that he held of the slightest facts of Prussian reoccupation; Le Figaro has reproduced part of this document.

The King of Prussia left Reims to go to Ferri res on Wednesday, September 14, around ten o'clock in the morning.

The day before, Mr. de Bismarck came to find Mr. Werl  and said to him:

"Let's talk tomorrow; I'm leaving with a heavy heart. - We hoped "signing peace at Reims was the King's will and my greatest "burning desire: it is in this hope that we remained ten "days here. - Or we are forced to continue the war... we regret ittt tera. »

- Count, interrupted Mr. Werl , France has no interest to continue the war, and, for it to refuse peace, it is necessary that your conditions are unacceptable.

"I will tell them to you," continued Mr. de Bismarck; "we ask
"two billion, Strasbourg with a plot of land of 4 or 5
"leagues wide as far as Wissembourg, so that the Rhine flows

after which everyone would have gone home, some with a thumbing their noses, others with laurels, as it happens sees from the beginning of the world.

Two billion was very little for the Jews, who dragged behind them a whole staff of starving people, to whom the spoils of France had been promised.

Then one of the events occurred which will remain the most singular of the SIXTH century and, one might say, of all centuries. A gentleman, born to parents who remained Italian, barely French himself, since he had not opted for nationality French only at the last moment and with the certainty that a infirmity would exempt him from all service, doubly foreigner, since he was Jewish, and who, in any case, did not represent that the twelve thousand electors who had nominated him, came say :

a My honor is so ticklish, my courage is of such a rare essence that I cannot consent to this that peace be made and that, on my own authority, I want continue a war to the bitter end."

In the most rudimentary civilizations, among the

Among the Kaffirs and the Bushmen, there are, in serious cases,

■ a semblance of consultation with the country; we ask the tribe gathered: "Do you agree to take your bows, your arrows or your tomahawks?

The hairy kings consulted their leudes, Charleragne consulted his peers; under the old regime, we gathered-

"Games listed in German cities -- We ask for the » reanioD of the Chambers, because it is with them alone that we can-

We are going to treat, and it is, - he added, - this last condition

"I have the most difficulties."

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 3K7 knows the general States in critical circumstances. A we fell back beyond the Kaffirs and, for five months, a Genoese adventurer sent people to have their heads broken arms and legs, while he smoked exquisite cigars, and this without anyone thinking of protesting.

It is true that Garabelta had a witty word, this somewhat coarse spirit, particular to the Jews, but which does not wear less.

î» As I look at you all as fools, he had said to the French people, I will, on thirteen-eight millions of French citizens, choose a Baden-Baden as Secretary of the Government of National Defense.

No Frenchman was judged worthy either, gloomy for the defense of his country, to keep the secret of these dispatches telegraphs which then had such considerable importance—maple; a man was chosen who was born in Lislx)nne; let us add that it was of Belgian parents, according to Vape—water.

If history later wants to look for the Ince of one of those who played the main role in what was called, by antiphrasis no doubt, the government of Defense national, she will only have to open the Salon booklet at the section: Foreign sculptors and grace^irs on medals or on fine stones, we will find there: Steenackers (François-Frédéric), born in Lisbon, MH

There were in reality, during this period, two sovereigns Jews: The Taikoun and the Mikado. One, Gambetla, took care of the financial institutions of Israel, made the loans and leases chés, lodged the Jews in places, where, like Esfjuiros in Marseille, they could get rich quickly; the other was occupied—

388 JEWISH FRANCE

^upa of the general interests of the race and of the Hebrews of the out.

The emancipation of the Jews of Algeria, in the midst of the invasion, highlighted the Jewish character in all its relief, implacably indifferent to anything that is not family. We treat—We will examine this question thoroughly in Book IV.

An even more surprising phenomenon which leaves a lasting impression the decline of the French temperament! Not one of these offi—ciers, who were going to be killed for the pleasure of the Jews, didn't have the idea of going up to this old Jew's house and shaking him up in the legendary yellow patterned dressing gown that he and tell him:

"Miserable old man, we have abandoned the Father
common faithful to come and do our duty in France, we have sacrificed all our preferences, all our sympathies, all our memories, we obey funny escaped from all the cafes, vomited by all the dives, out of all the cesspools, to Spullers, to Pipe-en-Wood, to ex-convicts like Bordone, to Poles equivocal like de Serres, and you only think of diminishing still the little strength that remains to us to free some abject date and pastille merchants from seraglio!

When Gambetta and Grémieux had done their task, Jules Simon came to Bordeaux to announce that it was time to represent the large five billion piece for which The Morgan loan had been just a curtain raiser.

Oii claimed that we would never know what was said in this interview in Bordeaux; he is not at all uneasy however, from the facts, to guess which act the canvas of speech. This is the method of Titus Livius.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FR.VXCE 389

"Brother," Jules Simon must have said, "you've given yourself enough."
You and your friends, give way to the German Jews who are waiting impatiently tooth their share of the cure; you will come back with another trick up your sleeve and after personifying mer-vigorantly, by your fiery courage, the war to excess, you will personify with your organizational qualities and your knowledge of geography the hope of revenge.

Note that in these conferences, where the decision is made comes out of France, the original Frenchman, the native Frenchman, the son of the French, who cleared the land, made the Fatherland, does not intervene in any way. The dialogue continues between two foreign Jews; one is Italian and descends from Germany mands who were called Gamberlé, the other is Swiss, calledpelle Schweizer from its original name, Suisse from its name birth certificate, Simon by his literary name (1). Neither the neither the first nor the second have received any authority to govern kind of mandate.

It is not displeasing to the imagination to imagine the real ones representatives of the country, who pays, who fights, who dies, waiting in an anteroom for the end of this interview Israelite.

an old man with white hair, should we sacrifice the last one?
I'm ready.

– Should we go and treat the wounded or those with smallpox?
asks the Sister of Charity; I await your orders while praying God for you.

(1) It was really amusing to see how these people respect each other. This is how, in May 1884, the newspaper de Gamberlé treated this poor Jules Simon: "Mr. Schweizer says Switzerland, says Simou, who changed his name like all the comedians-diens, etc., etc.

2i.

300 JUJVE FRANCE

– – Many thanks, said Jules Simon, that the study of philosophy has made civil; a prayer never makes wrong.

– God! What? Is there a God! exclaims Gambetta, rushing towards the door, with this movement of a lone rider, both undulating and swaying, who earned Bullier his first successes. I'm running away, I'm I'm running away for now, but I'll be back.
you, Beguine, take care of the law; I will give you some congregations; no more are needed! There are Jesuits?, Domi-Nicains, Brothers, who went to collect the dying under the shells while I burned my shins in the fire, I will have them expelled from their cells; to better bear witness contempt for the country, to better demoralize the army, I will force French officers to come in full uniform to take religious people and old people by the collar...
On that note, good evening everyone! Long live wine and long live Girls! Let's go to San Sebastian!

In every way, the Jew thus served Bismarck.
The Prussian spy in Metz was a merchant named de Mayer, – another one! – Discovered by the soldiers French, who broke everything in his shop, he hanged himself. Germany was hardly embarrassed to replace him.
"We are being noticed," said the newspaper Le Nord, "at the date of August 19, 1870, that most Prussian spies taken in Alsace are Jews This ignoble profession cannot to be better exercised than by the sensuals of that degraded race who had the execrable fortune of producing in Judas the the most accomplished type of perfidy and treason." According to the Journal de Rouen, Régnier "was only a Prussian Jew–

The Illustration has painted us in striking colors—their the Jew Allernaud in his role as a spy during the war.

The Jew, said this newspaper, in an issue of September 1873, was the scourge of the invasion.

As long as the battle lasts, the Jew remains behind. He fears the blows.

But has the enemy fled, is the battlefield clear, then the German Jew runs up.

There he is master and king. It is to him that all these belong corpses. It is not with impunity that the soldier designates him under the characteristic name of crow.

In all tranquility, he strips the dead, he goes from group to group. .\ seeing him leaning over like that, running, lost, eager, <»one would say a parent who is looking for a brother, a friend. He is only looking for gold. Sometimes we hear a moan, it's a wounded man who sup-folds, but the crow really has time to stop for such trifles. Doesn't he have a mission to fulfill?

Because we must not forget this side, the worthy character is functionary of the State, it is part of the German organization, it does not He doesn't just steal, that's the personal side; he's a spy.

Cczi the crow who, after the lost battle, will carry to the quarter-General Tier all papers found on senior officers.

We see that this is not a sinecure; moreover, it is not do not limit the fatigue. We must go to meet the army, seek resources from each village, gather information on the hiluation and the forces of the enemy.

Sometimes when he is sick the Jew is shot, but this happens very rarely. First, because of this inexplicable passion that he nourished for his sad person, he takes all his precautions and only wanders wisely. Then, if despite all his tricks, he falls into a trap, he is free to operate on a larger scale. He betrays the Germans as he spies on the French; in the future he will keep the information in double entry and the profession will not will be more lucrative.

But the triumph, the dream of this strange and repulsive personality, it is the armistice; we are then sufficiently at peace to have-

see neither cors nor bullets to fear; we are still quite at war to be able to practice his honest profession.

So much profit!

First there are the requisitions, which bring in whatever one is forced to give up the biggest share, but we make up for it with the soldier; the soldier is stupid, he gives for a florin what it is worth hundred.

Then, for industrious people, there are still other resources.

We have, in the west of France, around Le Mans, could see for ourselves that the Jews, that the German army-mande trailed behind him, rented Prussian soldiers by the day-his own and were accompanied by them in the villages. Frap-At a house, the Jews displayed a filthy parchment covered with more or less authentic stamps. The translation of this paper, we guess it, one word is enough to render it: requisition. How could the peasant resist; the soldiers were there? as a threatening proof. They delivered their cattle which one was going to sell.....

But I see a concern emerging in Fespril of my readers. Financial Jewry is getting rich with borrowing Morgan, the English Jew, Merton, who was to end tragically-He, too, is charged with a confidential mission, the Jew Esquiros sits in the prefecture of Marseille and by a reminiscence, no doubt, of his book The Vie-^'ages crazy, is made, to agree to leave, to allocate a strong compensation from morality police funds for Jews Germans strip our dead and ransom our pay-without; everything is for the best, but what happens during this time the little Jews who remained in Paris?

Rest assured, they're doing very well. We refuse work for industrialists who have five or six hundred workers to live, it is granted to all the daughters of Israel. statements made before the procurement commission for the arming of the National Guard are edifying on this point. Let us quote just a few lines from the deposition of Mr. Berthe.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 393

remember everything that was done during the siege. For a long time I sold to a concierge from rue Grenier-Saint Lazare every day 4 or 5" • francs of merchandise that he was going to take to the Town Hall; i! con«- filled the supplies and was going to deliver them.

In the same house, a half-year-old girl from eighteen to nineteen years old, Israel, daughter-in-law, merchant of good goods (I), had known how to •open the doors of the City Hall and find a way to deliver every day 3 to 400 francs of goods.

And I could never get a deal 1 This young girl passed in front of me, at the Town Hall, as if in love. She would come in right away and I would have to wait for hours. I had three or four hundred workers at home!

I noticed that Jews struggled with suppliers like number at least. Most of the markets were given to these people; they are more sociable, more patient than us; they sa- They want to do what is necessary, they do what is necessary.

The young lady I was talking about, I was told, only wants to pay that... that will be bad! too bad.

I confess that we have thus provided ourselves with bad goods.

There were some very intriguing Jews and Jewesses who obtained what we could not achieve. To achieve this, he would have had to give tips, lunches, dinners, and all things that don't didn't suit me.

(1) Almost all dealers in holy objects and ornaments church are Jewish; which allows them to make pretty profits with a clientele that pays regularly, and to spy what is happening in the ecclesiastical world. All the scandaleux in which priests were involved were organized this way, thanks to a surprised mole, to a trap set. The way to act of the calliolic party in France, its candor, its absence binds any precaution will be an eternal subject of wonder for the Future.

394 JEWISH FRANCE

Once the armistice was signed, the Jew became a merchant again and few people cared. he had to succeed in preventing the supply of Paris; settled in Versailles, the Jews bought everything at low prices who appeared on the market and resold it at rates drew a fair sketch of this singular world which is dragging-born in the footsteps of the winner.

In the streets, he said, soldiers of all arms are moving around stiffly and silent. Noisy, on the contrary, are the German Jews who followed the army carrying out their small trade with obstinacy and the spirit of consistency that characterize your Jewish race. These picto-few samples of commercial Germany cry out in dis-I will French their merchandise in the highest tone; they appear especially well supplied with tobacco, judging by their cry perpetual: "Dabac to fimev and to brïsscrà two vrancs the licre!" There is one in particular whose intonations are very comical; In some ways they remind us of the voice of our colleague WolCF.

Bismarck, seeing Jules Favre arrive at Versailles, had blown the whistle. Cosmopolitan Jewry, which had inspired, sponsored, led, prolonged the war, had to appear in triumph; she entered Paris behind the cuirassiers whites. A writer, whom I don't know, but who knows painter, Mr. René de Lagrange, fixed this scene with a incredible accent of truth, in a study published in a corner of the Figaro supplement and which, I affirm to the future historians, is one of the rare exact pages that we have written about the events of 1870-1871.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 19TH CENTURY

It was not the aptness, writes M. -René de Lagrange (I), that we first noticed, it was the General Staff which, obviously, was doing the deolairears office. This vanguard arrived at a trot, casting a worried glance, right and left, at the thin headband of spectators who formed the hedge on both sides. The caraliers who composed this escort - I still have them - were almost all men of tall stature and powerful build, standing on horseback like thoroughbred squires. They wore, for most of them, the shining uniform of cuirassiers. Wearing helmets their crest bore chimerical animals, reyétus of cui-decorated with raised coats of arms or metal shields, these (.avaliers sparkled under the first rays of a March sun.

The plivaionoaiie of these aristocratic soldiers was in harmonies with their male armor. The whole thing was grandiose. Their blond red hair, their heavily planed mustaches-and with a bold jet, their complexion clear and red at the same time, their sky-blue eyes with their fierce rays reminded us, to the point of being mistaken, the portrait of these same men, once traced by the chisel of Tacitus: Oculi cœrulei et trueei, rutila amœ, magna corpora. 11 You have to be fair, however, even with your opponents, these phy-

Seeing these kinds of giant horsemen, one would have said these Burgraves from the banks of the Rhine, contemporaries of Redbeard, such as we see them sculpted on the facade of Heidelberg Castle or in Li.'s prints by Albert Durer. This whole group breathed Germany from the iron age, the reign of force, the military middle ages, little escort, in the middle of which one could distinguish the king of Prussia and Mr. Bismarck, whatever army she had, only advanced a precaution, as we have said. Entering this Paris, in this revolutionary abyss following a five-month siege and a half, it seemed scary. It was like entering the volcano. Before risking the army, the General Staff was feeling the ground, out of fear, no doubt, that, despite all the precautions taken, what a mine loaded with dynamite, did not explode under the footsteps of the army fl) Figaro of February 28, 1883.

6 96 THE JUIVR FRINGE

of invasion It was a king, princes, generals making, that day, functions of uhians.

This military group was immediately followed by another group, but civil, that one. The second group was, certainly, more curious even more than the first. Behind these fully armored Centaurs* of iron and glittering with steel, advanced, mounted on their horses> worth like tweezers, strange characters dressed in long, brown, padded coats. Elongated faces, glasses-golden tones, long hair, dirty red beards, vermiculated in corkscrews, wide-brimmed chajieaux, these were all ban-Israelites, as many as Isaac Laquedem, following the German army-like vultures. In this getup, he was not difficult to recognize their professions.

They were, obviously, Jewish accountants or financiers in charge of collecting our billions. After the military headquarters, It was the Ghetto General Staff. We don't need to say that an even more accentuated fear could be seen on all these terrified and sordid faces.

When this double procession had passed, quite a long time, more than an hour, at least. We learned, the next day-hand, what had been the cause of this gap; the General Staff in question had stopped at the Elysée Palace for lunch. Mr. Ernest Picard had the kindness to have the enemies served there to his friends put, a welcome feast and washed down with Champagne wine.

When this republican lunch was savored and washed down to perfection, the procession resumed its march to go up the Champs-Élysées and the armored and gleaming Centaurs parade before us again, followed by the children of Israel with dirty beards, but this time the physiognomies were no longer the same. Lunch had produced its effect: the face illuminated by the wine of the best vintages of France, with a blazing eye, syrup in his mustache, and an arrogant attitude—giant, assured, moreover, that no aggression was to be feared, that no mine would explode under their feet, the armored generals—trotted up the avenue (1).

(1) See an article in the Dieti Public, March 3, 1871, where I believe, gave the true impression of the d<'i>arl of the Germans, remailaul in

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 397

I have observed more than once, in my historical work—ques, the hesitation one feels in adopting the story that gives the best the exact and just note, and that is why, I repeat, I am not afraid to recommend this page precious to the historians of the future.

I myself lived then on Avenue Montaigne, and forced to going out for one of my sick relatives, I was able to check the scrupulous fidelity of this painting.

Picard, according to the testimony of neighbors, would have attended at the beginning of the meal and toasted with the Germans, in any case, he himself came to the Elysée to ensure that. nothing was missing from the winners' lunch.

Among the German Jews there were quite a few Jews. French, who were already dealing with the famous loan This Exchange, in the middle of a camp, had the strangest aspect; it was like the lamentable and comic epilogue, as the sinister and grotesque commentary of this Jewish war.

Everything is true, once again, in Mr. René's story. of Lagrange, notably the episode of this unfortunate ouvrier who, mad with patriotic grief, plunged his knife in the chest of a general's horse and, delivered immediately to the German Provost, was shot, we believe, behind the Palace of Industry.

This summary execution had the character of an omen and the meaning of a warning.

The Parisian worker, as he still was, was a nuisance to France. Jewish Masonry. He was a very unusual type, that one—in front of the Arc de Triomphe.

23

398 JEWISH FRANCE

there. Everything was mixed up in his confused brain; he loved the France and Poland, because she had been persecuted, he hated what he called, we never knew why, the left as a priest, but he did not admit, like Paul Bert, that the man was completely like a dog; he looked—without horror the crucifix which adorned his humble death, he remembered having placed it once on the bed where some loved one had just died, he hung it on the Branches the blessed boxwood branch that the child brought back; near the crucifix, sometimes, was attached the cross of honor of some companion of Napoleon!<=>■.

The parisian worker was, in fact, revolutionary and chauvinistic. wine, he shot at the troops on days when the crowds gathered and felt his heart beat when some regiment paraded in the suburbs. Convinced, by reading Eugène Sue, that the Jesuits spent their lives hoarding inheritances, he nevertheless said a friendly hello to the Brother who had instructed him. He spoke out forcefully against superstition and would have been sorry if his son and daughter did not not their first communion. The big day arrived, it let the mother and child go to church alone, then, suddenly, threw down the tool, put on the frock coat of the di-sleeves and, hidden behind a pillar, he chased the boy or the little girl, among the white crowd undulating in the nave to the sound of hymns, to the brightness of candles; when he had recognized a beloved face, he turned away to es-wipe away a tear, found himself face to face with a comrade who cried like him and said: "You too, old man... What do you want, it moves you" (1).

(1) See this subject, as an excellent document on the iHat of es-real price of the Parisian population, the curious Journal held little-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 399

Skillful with his hands, undisputed master in these works half aisles and half industrial where Paris, supplanted now there as everywhere by the foreigner, triumphed so long time without dispute, Parisian worker, served by a innate taste, which took the place of knowledge, was rarely idle and lived relatively happily.

By his qualities, his enthusiasm, his gaiety, this guy was everything particularly an object of hatred for the German Jew; by his patriotism which had just been affirmed during the siege, it was an obstacle to the invasion of foreigners among us; by his loyalty, his selflessness, his love of all that was right and honest he was a danger for the future political-financial dictatorship of the Jew Gambetta. The Commune was an excellent opportunity to daot the Commune, by the priest of Saiol-Thomas d'Aquin, the abbot Ravailhe. At the time of giving the first communion to his children, the priest fears that the Federates, who occupy the place and the artillery barrage, do not oppose the exit of the procession; he will soon find the postmaster. – How so, replies the brave insurgent, and he has his men put under arms* and sound the bugle, while the eofauls pass in chantanL The next day the balailioa was changed, and Mr. Tabbé Rjvaiihe adds that he does not know what has become of the federal officer. He will have been killed (from behind) by some friend of Simon Mayer and Dacosta, or denounced to the Veràaillais by some Freemason, to whom the oppo-Tunisia will have given, later, a position of tax collector or sub-prefect. The place he occupied in the workshop must be occupied today-today by a foreigner.

In 1848, when the barricades were being erected for the June days, and where the Mouffetard district was in full swing excitement, the priest of Sainl-Uédard and his clergy were buried desired that, according to custom, the body of the deceased could make a final times around the church that had been his. The workers lent themselves-wholeheartedly accepted this wish, and removed before the coffin the paving stones which they replaced as soon as the procession had passed.

400 JEWISH FRANCE

kill as much as possible. Denounced by the leaders who had trained, by the Barrères who, since then, have become plenipotentiary ministers, victims of their courage, these unfortunate people strewn the streets with their corpses, avenues, squares, gardens, parks.

You have certainly met them, during the second siege, going to the ramparts with conviction, making cook their potatoes under the trees of the Tuileries, marching in good order in front of the Rothschild palace and not having the thought of entering it. For the lower Jewry German woman who ruled Paris, the hotel of Monsieur de Piôthschild (always put an accent of admiration on the ô), was an object of veneration, and without effort she imposed the respect of this dwelling to these armed multitudes (1).

The Aryan, it is necessary to repeat, is a being of faith and discipline and he keeps these feelings even in the revolution; he was born to be the fearless crusader and believer, the soldier of the old guard, the obscure victim and still interesting from a Commune. It is in turn the hero of the Chanson de geste, the grumbler that celebrates Béranger, the black powder fighter of the three Days, the one who

On the gold strewn before his steps,

Victorious, walked barefoot and did not bend down.

(1) An eyewitness and very truthful, I am convinced, told this little fact which is characteristic. Lea? or May 28, when everything was already lost for the Commune, the Federates considered the place of Belleville the shop of a hosier, and my faith, they began to seize the socks with the eufauline joy that we have all experienced changing our clothes after some big fatigue. A sergeant arrives and accuses them of dishonoring their cause by pillage, and here are our people returned and restored everything they had taken. Isn't that very Parisian?

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 401

The Commune thus had two faces:

One unreasonable, thoughtless, but courageous: the French side.

The other mercantile, greedy, plundering, basely speculative-lative: the Jewish face.

The French federates fought well and were killed.

The Jewish Communards robbed, murdered and oiled to hide their thefts. Some established traders rue deTurbigio organized the devastation as an oper-commercial ration and retired to New York two or three times millionaires. Like Nathan, who is talking about Maxime du Camp, the Jyiifs made the pregnant souZasçe, only-The murder followed by theft was complicated this time. of fire.

The Commune also had two results.

First, it enriches, in modest proportions, it is true, the Jewish bohemia which, after the passage of the govern-National Defense Council, could hardly do more than shake especially to strip palaces, ministries and hotels individuals of the Ch.viiens of their works of art. (The Commune did not once touch Jewish property;

not a single one of the Rothschild houses has been set on fire.)

Then, – a much more important result, – she to have thirty thousand French people slaughtered by French people.

The Germans, in exchange for their high and disdainful protection, asked only one thing from the Commune.

After destroying the prestige of our armies, they were still offended by the glorious legend of our ancestors.
This column, made of cannons taken from the Germans, which stood up in Paris, embarrassed them; despite their easy triumph

402 JEWISH FRANCE

on the nephew, they still wanted the Emperor invintarget that we saw draped in the coat of Augustes,

Morning in the azure, evening in the stars.

Masters of Paris, they would not have touched this column;
They respected everywhere the monuments of our victories and the images of our heroes; the tomb of Marceau, the sta-kills of Fabert, of Kléber, of Rapp. There are things that the Aryans do not do these things themselves, but sometimes,
They have them made by Semites as if to prove that these may be useful on occasion (4).

How moving is this scene of May 16th in the square Vendôme! This vague emotion, which agitates a crowd assembled-wheat, makes you wait for unforeseen events. We say in the groups that the Invalides will come to line up at the foot of the Column to defend it; these few survivors great battles, which we used to see happening every day May 5 and every August 15 to lay wreaths there, have dressed in their uniforms "worn by victory," they accostrent all:

Lancers, grenadiers with ticking gaiters,

Dragons that Rome would have taken for legionaries;
Cuirassiers, gunners who dragged thunders,
Wearing the black colback or the polished helmet,
All those, those of Friedland and those of Rivoli.

(1) The Prussian officers witnessed the fall of the column of balcony of the Ministry of Finance Prussia ganJa for trophy the statue of Victory which was bolted in the Emperor's house and which, despite all the research, could never be found.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 403

Nothing shows. The hour has struck. We wait for the signal.
Who will give it? Thank God it's not a Frenchman,
He is a Jew; he is Simon Mayer.

Listen to Maxime Du Camp (1):

Suddenly a man appeared on the crowning, waved a tricolor flag and threw it into space, in order to clearly indicate that all that had been the French Revolution, the first Em-worse, the royalty of Louis-Philippe, the second Republic, the Second Empire, disappeared from history and was to give way to the era news, symbolized by the blood-colored rag, which is called the red flag.

The man who had the honor of throwing the colors of the France was worthy of this mission: his name was Simon Mayer. On March 18, he had behaved nobly in Montmartre. Captain to the 469th battalion, commanded by Garcin, replacing the elected leader was Blanqui; then imprisoned or on the run, this Simon Mayer had heroically assisted in the assassination of General Lecomte and Clément Thovuas. This beautiful action found its sweetest reward at ^Me hour, under the sun, in the presence of the members- of the Commune attentive and charmed. A bugle call was heard. An enormous siler.oe, as Gustave Haubert would say, filled the streets. Everyone was silent and kept their eyes fixed invincibly on the column in front of which the cables were stiffening. It was a little after 8:00 p.m.; from time to time, a few distant shots of oéaoo seemed like a funeral salvo drawn from the depths of invisible horizons.

A man sold a God who came to bring to the world words of mercy and love; his name was Judas, and he was Jewish.

A man sold a woman who had confided in him;
His name was Simon Deutz, and he was Jewish.

A man, in front of the Prussians, gave the signal for

(1) Convulsions of Paris, volume II, pages 257-288.

to overturn the monument of ours on a bed of manure old glories; his name was Simon Mayer, and he was Jew (1).

This sublime trinity, God, Woman, Genius, Celtic triple form of the ideal, Divinity, Beauty, Glory, of all this the Jew made money from...

Before handing Paris over to the high-flying Jews, the Low Jewry took the opportunity to satisfy a little his age-old grudge. When a venerable priest, in charge-wantwhites, asked Dacosta what crime he had committed to be arrested, the Jew responded with a typical word where the affectation of Parisian slang poorly hides the hatred that comes straight from Jerusalem: "There are eighteen hundred years that you made it for us."

Gaston Dacosta particularly incited against the priests-very Rigault, a fierce kid, no doubt, who was like a like a little Nero drunk with omnipotence, but who had good times and would have done infinitely less of evil without the sidekick who pushed him (2).

(1) By a singular comparison, it was again a Jew who played the main role in this scandalous ceremony of the inslalla-Lion of Cazot as president of the Court of Cassation who forever dishonored our great judiciary.

It was believed until the last moment that no president of the chambre would not consent to receive the administrator of a company now bankrupt financial institution, the crazy man whose appointment (was a slap on the cheek of each magistrate.

When, on Wednesday, April 25, 1883, Bedarrides was heard inviting Cazot to take possession of his seat, a sudden boo arose, irresistible, unanimous. "Bailiffs, silence!" cried Cazot exasperated." That was all, and this very short scene remained present in the memory of all those who were indignant witnesses.

(1) It was to Raoul Rigault that many ecclesiastics owed to be able to leave Paris, and this, in very singular circumstances-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 401)

When we went to the Mazas registry, Gaston Dacosta, who was at Rigault's side, no doubt to prevent him to weaken, drew up the list of hostages; on the file of one of them, he had written in advance: "Keep this rabble

The first name of Isidore de François, the director of the Roquette, who presided over the executions, would perhaps tend to do believe, as has been asserted, that it was also Israelite stock. He too thought and expressed himself like Dacosta: "Fifteen hundred years ago," he said, speaking of the priests, that these people crush the people, they must be killed; Their skin isn't even good for making boots.

We could have done and we will probably do more than one jièred, and of which I can guarantee rexbclitude. This captain of the Commune, Lalaane, obsessed always by this idea of seeing soul and everywhere, had been to search the Auguàlines from the rue de la Santé. He didn't find any underground passages, of course, but was struck by the greeting he received from the Superior who was a woman of high intelligence; he spoke of her to Raoul Rigault. A delegate to the Police went to fix Pietri's sail, and came to talk for several times with the nun. "I guess what you don't dare ask me—der, he said as he left, passes for your calolins.... Here you go. I'm sure that if I were defeated you would still hide me. here.... B The person who gave me these details was absolutely convinced that when Raoul Rigault was surprised, rue Gay-Lussac, It was towards the Augustinian convent that he was heading.

(i) The Hungarian Jew, Leon Francke), born in BuJa-Pest'u, and member of the Commune, was a descendant of the famous Abarbanel or Abravanel, Minister of Finance of Isabella the Catholic, and who had to leave Spain during the Great Expulsion of 1492. The family d'Abarbanel, who took refuge in Austria, took there, we learn from the 4''cAi-Israelites, the name of Franckel. Isn't this background curious? The future of a Spanish Finance Minister, who became something as Minister of Public Works in France, and avenging his own by murdering our priests?

Vermersch, as he himself acknowledged, was descended from a Jewish family from Amsterdam.

23.

406 JEWISH FRANCE

interesting discovery from the point of view of the influence of type and breed, researching the family of most of those who were involved in these horrors; but France, then, had other concerns. Delivered to Prussia by the German Jews she had welcomed, bled white by GamLelta, dishonored in her glorious memories mi" litteraries by Simon Mayer and the column demolitionists and other Simon; she sent the Bamberger to the Chamber, she decorated the Jew Stern, she swooned with admiration in front of the Rothschilds who were going to exploit it thoroughly.

Not a single man in the majority foresaw this situation.

What these men, who were called clerics, lacked was caux, it was simply to be Christians. No more than the policies of the Restoration, they did not understand the word from the Scripture that we have already cited and that must always repeat, because she is the alpha and omega of man of State: "Discite juslitiam moniti, warned by the events, learn justice." It is on justice that returns constantly this great doctor of politics, Bossuet, "the only one, said Doudan, in his always somewhat precious style, who could have made the speech from the throne of God, if God suffered a representative government." "When I appoint the justice, writes Bossuet, I name at the same time the link sacred of human society, the necessary brake on license, the only foundation of rest, the just temperament of authority and the favorable support of subjection. When the justice reigns, faith is found in treaties, safety in commerce, neatness in business. » Elsewhere, it indicates the essential conditions of social balance in a more eloquent and more precise line in its sublime familiarity than all the volumes of the rhetoricians: "Justice and Peace are two close friends (1). > Jiistttia and Fax osculaUe sunt.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 407

Justice is the first need of people; at the same time as long as the guarantee of interests is the satisfaction of a innate aspiration in all human souls. France brings to this love the passion that is proper to it. That asks this nation in love with the ideal? Justice. What where does it lie, even in its revolutions? the chimera, the oml^, the parody of this justice which is necessary for him as air to breathe. Why the French Republic, so c^ié-tive in this Ile-de-France which was his bei-ceau, has it so quickly and so prodigiously grown? It is that the first The Capetians were, above all, men of righteousness and justice. What is the image of king that has remained the most vivid and more popular? Is it that of so many monastics? of bold rides and rushing into the thickest of enemy ranks? No, it's the image of a vigilante sitting under in the oak tree. More than the memory of the Taillebourg bridge defended by a single man against an entire army, the memory of these rustic seats where everyone, without interest.

the one who had the strength, remained engraved in the souls.

Why, after such a long eclipse of Royalty, then that for many years the legitimist party was not more than a brilliant general staff without soldiers, the country calls—read it freely, spontaneously, representatives of the premonarchical principle? It is because the Monarchy, always [\\)JusUtia fundamentum Kegni, lit—oo on the facade da Hoff^urg^ the imperial palace of Yiemie, and the inscription is good and— Link placed.
^ ' ,

408 JEWISH FRANCE

tender to the little ones, had known, on occasion, to be severe to the strong.

It was to do justice that the country, in its interest, had recourse to the men of tradition, to the deputies from the ground, to men whose families, ordinary life, the character were known to all and inspired confidence, in troubled times, to those who, in times ordinary people, would have preferred entertainers and charlatans.

At that time, there was a lack of a man animated by this noble spirit. love of justice, a man of high heart, of soul great, gentle to the lost, terrible to the wicked who had cold-bloodedly sold their country, who took over the leadership of the party monarchical and demanded above all the punishment of a adventurer like Gambetta, who had allowed himself to conclude loans without the authorization of the country, of a Ferry, of a Jules Favre.

Not only did the Catholics betray the mandate of justice entrusted to them against the men of the September 4, but they left the repression of the Com—can be accomplished in conditions of savage iniquity.

This whole phase is, moreover, one of those which stop—will last the longest the thinkers of the future who have there is the opportunity to study in action, at work, the high demo—French cracy, to see what its morality is, its true feelings towards the people, the conception she has of herself of Good and Evil, of responsibility, of equality.

The French Monarchy, as we have said, exercised virilely and Christianly its function of justice, it had gallows for the financiers, the Enguerrands of Marigny and the Semblançay, beautiful velvet scaffolds Morency, the Marilhacs.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 109

The Restoration, even in its failings and its mollesse, did not have the vile repression: she did not take the little one soldier, she took the marshal prince of Moskowa, the General Mouton, La Bédoyère allied with the noblest families from France.

The Republic was merciless to the humble, and trembled in front of those who had an appearance of situation, in front of all those who had bourgeois nobility, who possessed—were the mandarin's jade button, which were inscribed
But any painting.

All those who were shot at Satory — at part Rossel — were poor devils, tiny habentes, people without connections. Thiers had granted the pardon of Crémieux; it was General Espivent beyond Yilleboisnet who had him executed, so to speak, on his own initiative—Crémieux was to be shot at the same time as a foot hunter. The members of the left naturally did not take any notice of the poor little one: cannon fodder, good for killing; they interceded for the man intelligent, responsible, for the lawyer! General Espivent, who was of old French race, did not understand the democracy in this way, and he clearly stated that he intended that the lawyer should have the fate of the soldier (1).

This history of the Commune, still so little known and whose face will change completely as soon as the

(1) Crémieux was so sure of his grace that, when they came to take him—to Fort Saint-Nicolas to take him to the Pharo, he was convinced that he was being taken to ratify the letters of pardon; it was not that he saw the troops lined up in a square that he understood the truth; he felt unwell, and they had to sit him on a chair to shoot.

410 THE JEWISH FRINGE

incredible documents which are in some hands (1), was the triumph of small papers.

All the men of September 4th, the Jules Simons, the Jules Favre, the Picards, Thiers himself, had been in relations with most of the leaders of the Commune, and not

The instructions given once were redone new with an injunction to drop certain charges. Those who could not be justified were released (2), and it there was not a day when some letters were not seized sent clandestinely to prisoners like those that Jules Favre wrote to Rochefort.

The captives used whatever pledges they could get. – which is quite understandable – and the lawyers pre-seers imitated this good Jolly, on whose tomb Gambetta made such a beautiful speech, and were endowed with

(1) Let us add that not all the Tuileries Papers were burned, as is generally believed. A few were saved during – during the first siege by Mr. de l'ienne. The most important had were deposited in the cellars of the house occupied by the great AumAnerie, rue de Rivoli. At the time of the entry of the troops into Paris, their presence was reported to General Douay at this location, who had just arrived at the Place du Carrousel; he immediately made them load onto 17 or 18 vans, and, without saying anything to Thiers, Ules "sent under escort to Cherbourg from where they were sent to England – earth.

These are the documents that will show what the republican-nism of the men of September 4, and who will avenge, by contempt of history^ the unfortunate people they had slaughtered.

(2) Félix Pyat, whose retreat was known to everyone, remained calm – hidden on Rue Pigalle, and only left Paris with a passport perfectly regular.

A senior official of the Ministry of the Interior still has his possession an order to free six prisoners signed Thiers and countersigned Calmon,

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 411

the smallest scraps of paper from the captives to use later against them (i).

A few pages blackened with ink were then the best talisman against violent death. Ranc, born clever, seizes Thiers and Pallain's cassette entered political life by going to negotiate to take it back. Legend has it that the box was returned, but absolutely empty; the astonishment-nante fortune of this Pallain who, despite his absolute nothingness, found a way to be a director in three ministries at the times, would seem to indicate however that one or two papers remained in the cassette. The rest, still according to the fall of the Commune; it is, in any case, a fact which shows little in favor of the independence of justice military, than a man who deserves to be condemned to death October 13, 1873 can walk peacefully until that time and even if in the House, without that no one should dare to pursue him. Either he was guilty or he was not; in the first case it would have been natural to* continue immediately, in the second case it might have been fairer not to condemn him.

The historian of the future will undoubtedly not forget to complete this picture with the features which shed light on morals

(1) From the point of view of character reduction, od rappro- chera that time of the little papers of another era of war civil. Who knows the story of Wgtippa d'Aubigné, in love with DicUie de Talcy, whom he is too poor to marry? He is offered to take advantage of documents on the Wmboise conspiracy which are in his possession, and which seriously compromise the Chancellor of the Hospital. He goes to get the coins, throws them in the fire and says: "I'm here." burned them for fear that they would burn me, for I had thought of the (enta lion. ■ of all those people who cried out so much against the corruption of tyrants. We have noted, speaking of the government of National Defense, that France, in terms of guarantees and rights, had regressed beyond the tribes Kaffirs, since the blood of his children, his money, of his destiny, without deigning to consult her. Under the moral report, it is the rabbit farm which seems to be the model of the high French democracy whose circumstances exceptional highlights private life.

412 JEWISH FRANCE

This rabbit farm, however, has a special character; she is a rabbit in a prosecutor's office, in a lawyer's office; the hutch witness to these loves seems to be a green card. Jules Favre is not content not to have natural children, he tries to bring them in by force in the normal framework, it tortures the code about of them, he commits forgeries, he has Millièrè shot who has denounced these infamies, he was held captive for three months, in the Versailles detention center, the unfortunate Laluyé who knew too many intimate secrets to be allowed to live and who in fact ends up succumbing to the mistreatment in another prison (1).

All these people, friends or enemies, are held together by of supposed sons, of legal precautions taken to trans-put a fortune, a name, a title sometimes.

To all this shameful trafficking, to this bargaining, to this

[I] Laluyé, who lived quietly in Rueil, and against whom one does not absolutely no charge, he was detained administratively.
ment for three months. This is how the power behaved this Jules Favre who, under the Empire, always had the word virtue at the buckle.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 413

impunity granted to people we fear, to people who closely or remotely still touch the bourgeoisie; it must be contrasted, to complete the painting of the state of mind of the Republicans of 1871, the most appalling contempt for life human being that has ever been seen at any time.

In history, I seek above all not the detail scandal, but the symptomatic detail, not the information sensational, but information for reflection. I believe that tiny facts are also interesting for study of an era that only important facts. In the great facts actually, the battles, the extraordinary events-dinaries, it is God who reveals himself, in the small facts, it is the man who betrays himself. I look, for example, as a excellent document this conversation that Baron Olivier de Watteville, then inspector general of prisons, had with Galmon, then Undersecretary of State at the Ministry of the interior, and which he authorized me to reproduce: M. de Wat-Teville wanted to maintain the arrest of a MB of Mr.
which the government later decorated.

– He's one of our agents; let him go.

– But, Mr. Under-Secretary of State, he did to shoot fourteen national guards who were refractory to the Com-municipality.

– It was to better hide his game. ...

– That's very disappointing, Mr. Undersecretary. of State, for the families of the victims.

Who uttered this dreadful word? Is it a Sulla for which reason of state justifies everything? A soldier accustomed to risk his life and for whom the lives of others are no more price than his own? No, he's a bureaucrat, a center

a member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences

414 JEWISH FRANCE

ticks. What politics and, above all, what morality do we teach?
in these places!

What human beings fell in those terrible days,
the bloody harvest that death brought, no one will know pro-probably never.

Communist writers who admit the figure of thirty thousand deaths are rather below than beyond the reality. Men who through their functions have seen the things up close admit thirty-five thousand in private.
Mr. de Watteville, director at the Ministry of Education public, the brother of the one I was talking about earlier and who was one of the first to enter Paris, fixed at forty thousand the number of victims both on the side of the troops and on the side of the insurgents.

The paltry figure of six thousand five cannot be explained.
hundred deaths given seriously by Mr. Maxime Du Camp that pays the special conditions in which work the writer. To raise a monument which, despite its imperfections, will be of considerable interest for the future, Mr. Maxime Du Camp always had to turn to the sources officials and he found the most competition everywhere eager, but with the reservation of not saying certain things things, to always maintain a certain convention.

Jewish Freemasonry, which wanted to depopulate Paris to make room for foreigners and the men of September 4-members who wanted to punish their rebellious voters, and, they too, to go and look for them "in their lairs," had each on their side an ingenious idea which proves that the Progress is not an empty word.

The foreigners who led the Commune changed the neighborhood battalions, they disoriented them; the battalions-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 410

Federated ions of the Boulevard Malesherbes fought at the Place de la Bastille; the battalions of Rue Mouffetard were on Boulevard Malesherbes. This measure facilitated the fires, because known men in a street would have hesitated to light a fire at their neighbors' house; she returned the the Commune could not escape the bullets; in their neighborhood they would have been aware of the issues, they would have found help to hide. All the doors, in the con- milk, closed before them and they fell by the hundreds- on the sidewalks or roadway.

The idea of the Versailles Republicans was also good. The generals had asked that we march the peacekeepers at the head of each coloime. Thanks to their knowledge of Paris, the city would have been retaken in forty-eight hours, and one was not, as it happened, stayed a whole day in front of a wall that we could turn in a few minutes. Picard and Jules Favre oppose were to this extent and thus succeeded in making the fight much longer, the exasperation more vivid, the massacre more barbaric.

To the federalists shot at Petite Roquette, at the barracks Lobau, at Montceau Park, at the Porte de Versailles, you must add one thousand two hundred men who, for various causes, insubordination, attempted escape, were passed through the weapons not on the plateau, but in the woods of Satory, where was still being executed on July 10. It is still necessary to join this figure those that the disease decimated. The prisons, the Construction sites in particular were hell. The unfortunate guarded by gendarmes the loaded rifle did not have the right to get up to satisfy their needs, they languish-

416 JEWISH FRANCE

Saienl in the middle of their garbage, at the slightest movement we were firing.

The Conservative MPs let everything happen, they did not did not understand the word of Scripture: justitiæ Dei siint reclæ, they had neither the beautiful mercies nor the severi- necessary things. They chatted familiarly with men who had usurped power and violently penetrated- ment in Værarium and they were merciless to the unfortunate people who, pressed by poverty, had accepted a small place under the Commune and dabbled a few pennies in a box where the people of September 4, all poor before, all rich after, had not left much.

To the unfortunates of this order they were merciless; they could not find sufficient tortures to punish them, they shipped them across the seas in a kind of cages and probably regretted not being able to send them all at the Satory plateau.

cruel or their mediocre intelligence? No, only they had brains shaped in a certain way, they saw it like that, they were imbued with the prejudices more bourgeois. A man, who occupied a position in the world, like Jules Favre, everything could be per- to put, to kill thousands of human creatures without never be worried; the idea of shooting a barrister of the bar association, an academician, would have seemed sacrilegious to these polite people, like the idea of delivering a car to the executioner- dinal, a porporato, would have seemed so to the sovereigns of the past.

The leaders of the Assembly, moreover, were thirsty of power and, on the contrary, had never been hungry; the am- bition therefore seemed excusable to them in its most abominable worthy misdeeds, while the unfortunate one who had

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 417

took a job to eat, seemed worthy of all the punishments since they did not understand it.

The notion of reality was what was most lacking in these men of indisputable honesty, but of experi- practical experience, which, not being illuminated from above, nor informed from below, should inevitably be defeated by men who came out all bruised, all vibrant, all smoking, all soiled sometimes with the most real life and the most difficult.

Take the most illustrious defeated Dacian, the Duke of Broglie. What could he know about modern Paris? He probably had- surely never set foot in a workshop, nor in a cafe, nor in a brothel; he had not talked, the eye to eye, nor with unreasonable workers after their day is done, nor with crossroads agitators, who shake up society by knocking over dominoes, nor with girls who live and die from the corruption of cities. He left his house full of examples worthy of being imitated, glorious traditions, high feelings, for drive to another salon where he found the same atmosphere; he had never left a world where one speaks and where one thinks nobly, where even weaknesses are veiled in idealistic appearances, where passions are rare- ment low. Looking within himself, he saw nothing that was a degradation of man, he saw himself all young, working as if he had his career to make, obsti- faithfully, in his generous optimism, to certain liberal ideas, having pride, no doubt, but the beautiful pride in letters, the laudable ambition to render ser- vices to his country.

Obviously, this former President of the Council will have been actively involved in the movement of a century where the Jew r.

4J8 JEWISH FRANCE

everything leads and leads everything without having seen the Jew, without guess his role for a minute, without suspecting what can contain hatred against the old French society, against the aristocracy, against Christ, the heart of a German Jew, whose fathers were hanged between two dogs. If the Juii appeared to him, but only in the form of a baron already washed, very honored to be in such company and holding on to it pretty well; he didn't doubted that the one who had just called him obsequiously "my dear duke" bribed the insulters who were going shouting through the streets: "Demand the bankruptcy of the Union general, the suicide of Mr. Bontoux, the arrest of the prince de Broglie! »

If we were to ask the former minister about the Jewish question foreign affairs, we would obviously find at him the tolerant and broad theories that Lord Macaulay, who was an applauded orator and a fine scholar, like the Duke of Broglie, developed, in 1831, in his Essay on the Incas-political pacities of the Jews.

With less eloquence and merit, most of the members of the right lived like the Duke of Broglie, in the same unreal sphere. I bet that the Viscount Dthenin d'Haussonville, for example, did not know when he was a deputy, a quarter of what he learned by going par-to cover the furnished rooms, the dives and the public balls, for his beautiful book of V Childhood in Paris.

The first one who seriously dealt with the issues workers, from a conservative and Christian point of view, was a soldier. Why? Because this soldier had seen the Commune closely, because the military profession, which provides a living in the midst of all classes of society gathered together, puts immediately a man of the valor of Count Mun opposite beyond reality, peels away the prejudices of education and concenacle conventions, constitutes an admirable school observation for men who are organized for to understand and to think.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 419

Anyway, the muii>ut i^i.-. - i.<_- i .v:-.-i iudh c de

the odious sea of a merciless repression that they desired eagerly, in their hearts, the future henchmen of GambeHa.

They struck, with outstretched arms, on the little ones and on the humble The usurpation of functions especially, I said, found these naive people who had not had the courage to be implacable rage to bring to trial the men of the A Sep-month.

The members of the pardon commission. Tuilhand, Corne and other Batbies, sent to New Culetluouie, as guilty of usurpation of functions, an old man who, I believe, had agreed under the Commune to be something thing like sub-inspector of lamps in a ministry.

One day while they were arguing over this case, GambcUa passed by, heard some scraps of conversation and knocking vigorously, as usual, sm' the abdomen of a members of the commission:

– Bravo! Gentlemen, he cried, with a loud laugh, if he has usurped, let him be punished! Let us have no pity for those who usurp public functions!

Then he walked away, looking at them with a look of contempt.

The years 1872 and 1873 thus saw the triumph of There was, from one end of Europe to the other, a Jewish hosannah accompanied by the noise of millions. The Jews did again, but in prodigious proportions, what R.othscliild had made a small deal at the time of liquidation of 1815; they got rich by lending to the French, they took back from the Prussians what the French had taken from them paid. Of the five billion at least four remained in their hands.

420 JEWISH FRANCE

Bismarck had nothing to refuse to those who had commissioned for the war; Thiers was on his knees before those who gave an appearance of financial glory—to a country crushed under all the shame of defeat.

The king of the moment was Bleichræder for whom the France was later to undertake the expedition of Tunisia.

It is in the second part of this work, Europe Jewish, that we will have to deal with Germany which speculations whose main theater was France.

A very remarkable study, published in the Revue du Catholic world and signed Hermann Kuntz, is enough for us give for the moment the essential for the portrait and the role of the character.

Mr. Bleichrøder, said Mr. Kuntz, had the greatest part in all financial and stock-market affairs of the new France from 1866 to 1870 (I). When Paris had to pay its ransom, Bis-Marck called upon the enlightenment of Mr. Bleichrøder. He had him come to Versailles to verify the funds advanced by his associate and friend intimate, Mr. de Rothschild, whose wife played the irascible patriot to the point that the poor German ambassador, Count Harry d'Arnim, thought it necessary to complain about it undiplomatically. Mr. Bleichrøder received the Iron Cross and was awarded the particle, as a reward for this distinguished service. His fortune became immense and in no way inferior to that of a Kolhschild. After its ennoblement, he was also created first consul general of Austria. In this capacity, he gave a dinner for fifty people at the corj^S diplomatic. The table, set in a decorated dining room by the first artists, was loaded with centrepieces, candelabras, etc., in richly worked gold and silver. Behind each guest stood a servant wearing the house livery, overloaded of gold embroidery. We can imagine the effect that must have produced the description of this sumptuous feast and the goldwork estimated at several million from Mr. Bleichrøder in the year of grace 1876, to when the population of Berlin was desperate as a result of the crash of 1873(1).

(1) Deliveries of October 15 and 31, 1881.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRXN'CE 421

Germany was quick to understand the meaning of the scene from the Second Faust, which we mentioned above. Duped by a real phantasmagoria, she believed, with the paper money created by the Jew, own real gold and soon realized that this gold had slipped through his hands. After three years she had nothing left in her fingers but scraps of paper that were worth less than leaves dead, and all the gold stirred up had gone to be buried in the pockets Jewish.

The losses inflicted on the German people, says Mr. Kuntz, hung this period of unbridled speculation, are calculated at three and even at five billion by statisticians. It is estimated at three or four hundred

(1) Let us not forget, however, that if Germany agrees to serve the Jew as an instrument, and to reward him if necessary, she keeps him absolutely away from everything that touches on honor and the dignity of the country. When the son of this Bleichröder, who had slipped away, we don't know how, into the officer corps of the hussars of the guard, presented himself in front of his comrades, a huge boo rose up, He was spat in his face and had to flee in a hurry. Never German officers, who still have some traditions from the ancient Teutonic knights, will not admit that one can entrust a flag to a man who is willing to sell it for money, then—that he puts money above all else.

u

422 JEWISH FRANCE

thousand families of owners, industrialists, small capitalists that were ruined while the newspapers were graying them of glory and excited their hatred against the Church, the Jesuits, the religious works.

In exchange for the billions they stole, the Israelites of Germany organized, in fact, the Kulturkampf, which gave them anti-Semitic agitation, as the share that they took from us when poor religious people were expelled from their cells will cause them to be expelled from their palace.

Moreover, speculation and persecution were rife among us. also, walk in company. Beforehand, the Jews preparried this invasion which is the obligatory complement and in reality the only appreciable result of all the revolutions in France; they attracted all the wanderers to Paris, all adventurers, all bad business traders—res of the Israelite world, they placed them in the voids what the Commune had done in the populous districts.

In June, July, August, September 1871, certain streets seemed deserted. At the end of the year, everything was full, lively, alive. The pure-blooded Parisian, who roamed the city as an observer, was quite astonished to meet everywhere strange types he had never seen, to see on all the shops named Mayer, Jacob, Simon.

Thanks to the ease of naturalization^ to the pre-fire meditated on acts of civil status, to the complacency of em-folded which had been placed in all the necessary places, These intruders quickly formed a sort of identity. A
The difficulty that bothered them was that devilish German accent; They then played the Alsatian string and the good Mr. d'Haus-helped them wonderfully by this society of Alsatians—

ir. JEWISH PAN'S HISTORY OF FRANCE 423

Lf^iM-ains who, despite his laudable intentions, has caused incalculable harm.

What would he not have done for these Alsatian Jews? who said so patriotically, with one of them, the rabbi Isaac Bloch, so sharply noted in the past by the Universe^ that the war of Prussia was advised by the Pope for to have honest people slaughtered, and that the Prussians, con-produced by the hand of God, had happily arrived to punish the guilty and save the innocent.

How touching and how great this genera-rich and dear Alsace, which paid for France everything whole! What heart would not feel stirred at the thought of this noble province that war has separated from us! Glory to her who, silent and dignified, bends over her hop fields to hide her tears, and, when she raises the head, sadly questions the horizon to seek there what which was the Fatherland!

Glory to that one! But shame on this theatrical Alsace which has put herself at the mercy of the acrobats, in this Alsace of shop window and concert café that we see everywhere, posing or cooing romances with her eternal knot in her hair, to the weepy, intriguing and begging Alsace which dishonors the most august information ever the earth contemplated.

One collects herself and prays, the other beats the drum with her mourning, lives off the annexation as the Savoyard lived off his marmotte, organizes benefit performances and noisy raffles where the Germans who appear in the committee put as a big prize a zebra to remind, they say, with their somewhat loui'd mind, the speed with which the French fled in 1870.

One gave Kléber, Kellermann and Rapp to France;

424 THE JEWISH FRANCO

the other is personified in the grotesque type that we call there the Schmider, she gave Kœchlin Scharwtz, Scheurer Kestner, Risler, she gave birth to wom-my dead enough to all patriotism to marry the Floquet and the Ferrys, the starvers of besieged Paris (1).

One must be respected and kissed on the forehead like a persecuted mother, the other must be treated like a daughter

(t) The excuse for these fatuMles is that they are more German than French. Ms. Jules Ferry is a great-granddaughter of the heroine from Gölhe's novel, Werther.

The famous Charlotte, Charlotte Buff, born in Wetzlar, married Johann-Christian Kestner of Hanover; she is therefore the grandmother of Ms. Kestner, whose daughter became the wife of the president of the Council, friend of Bleicbrøder. The ham element is always more or at least represented in these families. The famous Miu Duverger, who finds a relative; related to Jules Ferry by marriage, never loses the opportunity to remind him; she wanted to clarify her parentage in a letter addressed to the newspapers, in October 1884.

Montmorency.
Sir,

My mother was the boss of Mr. Cbailes Kestner, who was my cousin-sin, therefore. She often told me the story of Char-monkfish. Only she added the following anecdote:

Charlotte, my great-aunt, being on a trip with an old woman relative, was forced to stop at an inn where these ladies of the-rent^spend the night, due to the delay of the post horses.

The relative knew in a somewhat uncertain way what was being said. in his family: that Charlotte was the heroine of Goethe's novel. The room they were given had two beds, and as luck would have it, the curtains of these beds represented... Werther's suicide!

-If it's her, thought the old lady, she won't go to bed.

But Charlotte didn't testify, and she went to bed.

Did she sleep? No one ever knew.

I wanted to inform you about a fact, quite curious in 8sum> and, convinced that you will not hold it against me, I beg you to accept, Sir, my most sincere greetings.

AnSDSIINB DCVIBORK.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 423

of shameless brewery which soils in debauchery a costume which should be sacred from now on.

of being Alsatians, they were Alsatians-Lorrainers; they had two names as one has two, hands, to take more tache.

Whether they came from Cologne, Frankfurt, Hamburg, from Wilna, all these foreigners were fiery patriots. If they had not been betrayed by the heroic officers of Saint-Privat, Gravelotte, Bazeilles, we would have seen some beautiful! The France of Saint Louis, of Henry IV, of Napoleon, Condé, Bossuet, Fénelon had languished in ignorance, they no longer wanted this; they did not hear—would no longer be tyrannized by their ancestors. If you tell them asked what their great-grandfather was doing in France or their grandfather in those cursed times, if he was merchant, worker, soldier, in which city he lived, they remained silent, felt guessed, and murmured: "It's a clerical.

Their opinions, moreover, quickly betrayed the falsehood feelings that they displayed with such ado. If they had truly loved France, they would have pronounced with admiration—the name of Louis XIV who had reunited Alsace to kingdom; their great man, on the contrary, was Gambetta which, by prolonging the war, was the sole cause of the loss of two provinces.

The admirable solidarity of the Jews among themselves, their spirit of intrigue, allowed the newcomers to get rid of—quickly serve everything that, in small businesses or the middle industry, was still of a French, had kept the good sense and the fine judgment of their ancestors. They snuck into all the committees and soon had removed everything that bothered them; they recruited their workers and accustomed them to receiving servilely a slogan. They thus succeeded in getting elected in this city, which claimed to be patriotic, Baden people like Spuller and Frankfurters like Leven.

24.

426 JEWISH FRANCE

By 1873, the Jews had openly taken the lead of the republican movement in Paris and forced to follow them most of the traders who clearly saw that we were going to ruin, but who did not dare to resist, for fear that their credit was not cut off by the Israelite banks. In the petition addressed to Mr. Feray d'Essonnes, by the Parisian business representatives, to congratulate him on having among 160 signatories.

Here we find all those who, at the beginning, contributed to give the Republic a reassuring appearance, point of view of interests: the Beaucaires, the Brunswigs, the Cahen, Frankfurt and Elie, Godchaux, Hirsch, Heymann, Lantz, Lazard, Lyon, Oppenheimer, Rheims, Simon Brother and Guesdon, Schwaab, Schwob, Trier, Wimpfen. We will mark how many names, among those, betray a German origin. This alone should have given rise to an awakening to the Parisian population and show them where their truths were interest tables.

As usual, the Jews sought a false Messiah and quickly found it in Gambetta. We will paint, at chapter devoted to the character, the group of freedmen that formed around him and the special world of which he was the spokesperson or rather the docile instrument.

MacMahon did not bother them much. True to their inexplicable craze for half-foreigners, conservants, instead of addressing a brave general,

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF THE FRANKS 427

French Men strain, in Canrobert or Dacrot, which would have risked his life and would have won the battle, put their confidence in this deceitful soldier who, himself, did not speak never and always lied."

Although the guy was awfully scruffy at home, MacMahon, the grandson of an Irishman, can be considered a representative of the ruling Celtic race.

"The Greek," wrote Paul de Saint-Victor, "was the child of genius of the Aryan family." We can say of the Celt that he has was the terrible child of this family.

The Celts had heroes, prophets, poets, There has never been a politician among them. century after century, some characters emerge from this race extraordinary and almost legendary. It is a Celt that Duguesclin, who reconciles France with Victory; it is a Celt like Joan of Arc, who saved the Fatherland; herself seems to have some revelation of this identity of origin-gine with the winner of Cocherel. When she goes up to horse to go and deliver Orléans, it is to Jeanne de Laval, the widow of Duguesclin, than the one inspired by the Fairies fountains sends her maiden ring. It is a Celtic again that Marceau, born in Chartres, in full thunder meeting in the middle of the melee, on the Place du Mans.

moment when they rush at each other, saber raised, the soldiers separate them as if they were deducing that they were two brothers who were going to fight each other.

The readiness to devote oneself, this spontaneity, this brief surge of enthusiasm which suddenly arouses, from the middle of this race of beings of inspiration of an almost greatness superhuman; all these precious gifts are annihilated by the absence of any faculty of order, of measure. As

4-'8 JEWISH FRANCE

social organization the Celts left to themselves have not never been able to get past the clan.

Ireland died of family divisions.

During the War in the Vendée, Charette, Stofflet, the prince de Talmont spent their time arguing and did not never been able to combine a general movement. Very capable to accomplish some exceptional feat, the Celts are unable to pursue any plan in a sustained manner.

Mac-Mahon had all the qualities of his race on the battlefield, he had all the faults in power. He was unbelievably grotesque as President, left to chase from an impregnable situation, did not succeed never understand anything and ends up capitulating in shame-ment in front of some lawyers who were trembling in their skin every time he looked for his handkerchief, believing that he was going to grab his sword. He had neither the flexibility, the habit-political lethality of a Greek like Thiers, nor the feeling of duty, respect for one's word, tenacity to support one's right that a German would have had. Thiers called him "the soldier disloyal" and he justified this judgment by abandoning all those who had believed his formal promise "to go until the end.

Before him Trochu, another Celt, had acted exactly likewise, not even trying to defend the sovereign to which he had addressed emphatic declarations, accumulating lies upon lies for months on end dreams like a child who is happy to win an hour and escaping from a responsibility he had sought-carried out by vanity by a subterfuge worthy of a savage (1).

(1) Trochu, nolez le, even manages not to lie to the Imperial Empress; when she asks him if we can count on him he does not

At Trochu as at Mac-Mahon, the two men who, unfortunately for us, played such a considerable role in our affairs you find the same naive duplicity. When the Count of Chambord came down to Versailles to see the Count of Vanssay, the Marshal refuses to receive him; the envoy of the Imperial Prince, on the contrary, he replies that he is legitimist; he betrays everyone, he prevents everything by a kind of very confused personal ambition that he does not dare admit to himself. Ambition is always like this in the Celtic, she does not stand out in full light, in full relief like the objects in the South, it is indecisive and lunar like an Ossian landscape.

The Jews, near the Marshal, acted through Baron Sina, and the Castries. Baron Sina, a very wealthy Jew from Vienna, who had embraced the Greek religion, had given one of his daughters to one Castries, the other to the Ypsilanti pi'ince, which had quite serious claims to the crown of Greece. The father-in-law, when he had accepted this son-in-law absolutely ruined elsewhere, already saw himself sitting on the steps of the Hellenic throne and making a loan for the country from which he would settle the brokerage himself. Either the prospect to be governed indirectly by a Jew, even if he was baptized, said nothing to them, whether they were happy with King George, The Greeks showed no enthusiasm for rights of Prince Ypsilanti and the baron died without having realized answers neither yes nor no, he replies: "Madam, I am Breton, Catholic—that and soldier." All this is strictly true. He had said: "the gov-Governor of Paris will not capitulate, * and he resigns to the moment of surrender. This is the counterpart of the story of the lord Dreton, who had given his word not to see the king at his passage to Paris, and who, in order not to fail to keep to the letter of his serment, talked with him in the darkness his dream. But the family inherited the idea. Gambetta had the address to persuade the Sina that he was not asking better than supporting Prince Ypsilanti's candidacy for throne of Greece and these, for their part, did everything they were able to prevent Mac-Mahon, who went every year hunt in their homes, to seriously oppose the establishment—of a Jewish Republic in France.

430 LA Fn\>:cK .t(t;vk

The countless negotiations about Dulcigno, the strange trades with the Kohkinos and the Tricoupis have not Duke Decazes, associated with many financial affairs, was also under the domination of the Jews. The mother of the Duchess Decazes, Madame de Lowenthal, married to the son of a Jewish banker, had been in Vienna The damned soul of Baron de Hirsch (1). The engagement of the daughter of Duke Decazes with the young Lucien de Hirsch.

(1) See The Vienna Society, by Count Pail Vasili.

Who does not know Marie-Antoinette's saying: "You will tell me" so much! " At present, there is no politician, even with very sincere Christian sentiments, which is invulnerable-capable of this terrible force of money. We defend ourselves for a long time-time, but we end up giving in to certain sums so con- so astonishing that consciences are as if floored. The most farms hesitate for a moment, then look at those around of them, understand the meaning of certain silent looks and capitulate. Mr. Brunet, a magistrate who was considered honest, a former Minister of Moral Order, agrees to become the second in command Baron de Hirsch, to take his share of the spoils of so much misfortune. reux. He left for the Orient in August 1885 to defend the iute- retsduJew. It is true, says the Gaul, that the baron makes the things. "As proof we only want to cite what Mr. Brunet was telling the other day at the Palace, in the middle of a tight group of lawyers-cats of all ages. He said that, hating the sea, he would make his journey via Vienna, to the terminus of the Austro-Hungarian railways

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 431

The great misfortune of France, then, was not to find-to get to the head of politics, real representatives feeling of the soil, to fall into the hands of this nobility very modernized, very money-hungry, very mixed up particular to stock market speculation and therefore very Jewish.

The only one who was above these concerns and who had an incontestable moral value, the Duke of Broglie, was constantly deceived by Léon Say.

France was able, however, to have a moment of shadow of hope; she had found an unexpected helper in a Prussian so admirably organized, perhaps, for politics than Prince Bismaick, but less virile than he, weakened and worn down to the marrow by the passion he always had for the feminine essence, the Weihliches weren of which Goethe speaks.

History, later, will dramatize this short fight between the struggle between Cinq-Mars and Richelieu; it will give its truths tables proportions to this episode which could have had considerable consequences on the destinies of the world and which went almost unnoticed, thanks to this Jewish press, all whole this time again on the side of Prince Bismarck, and which only reveals contemporary events what it takes to deceive public opinion.

Serbian; that from there, to the frau of the baron, he returned to poate until Sarambey, head of the railway cbemio of CoDSlautinople, ne traveling only during the day, the postilions themselves not traveling not to risk traveling at night"

What example does this veteran of the bar give to interns, and By what right do conservative newspapers accuse Floquet of Mustapba's businessman?

432 JEWISH FRANCE

Count Harry of Arnim was no mere favorite like Cinq-Mars, trying to overthrow, to please a coterie, a minister superior to him; he was considered by Prince Bismarck himself, as the only man who could replace him. At the beginning of 1872, the Chan- The celier had even proposed to the Emperor to appoint the am- bassador of France his ad latus.

Count Arnim wanted more. Seconded by the most of the German aristocracy, supported by Empress Augusta, he dreamed of replacing Bismarck and to continue his work, but by changing completely- the operation plan.

Prince Bismarck, as he declared with the brutal frankness which is usual with him, encouraged the Re- Jewish public in France so that France would be powerless health, despised, dishonored in Europe, without taking care of the dangers that the outbreak of infection posed to the world that he let grow.

Count Arnim, on the contrary, wanted to cure the France so that Europe does not fall ill thanks to this neighborhood. It was inspired by the maxim of Philip II: "It's better to put out the fire in your neighbor's house- only to wait for him in his own. » To France, once in monarchy, either with the Count of Chambord, or with the As Prince Imperial, he offered Belgium and Metz as compensation. sation of Alsace, while Germany occupied Hol- moorland, and became a maritime power. England betta, constantly betrayed us and ended up taking Cyprus and Egypt, right under our noses, was held in failure for a long time Europe was entering an era of peace and order that could have lasted a century.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FEIANCE 433

Prince Bismarck, who was then acting in concert with the Jews (1), broke the unfortunate Arnim like glass who, deprived of his jobs, stripped of all his titles, went to die in Switzerland from the grief of having lost such a beautiful person part. All those who had been involved in this movement, which had ramifications all over Germany, fled—rent to escape the harsh condemnations that he made rain down on them Mr. Bismarck, in a country where crimes political crimes are assimilated to common law crimes, where the regime is the same for the writer who attacked the Chancellor that for the thief who stole a wallet cash !

Count Arnim, moreover, did not find in France a conservative to understand it. Mac-Mahon and the Duke Decazes let Baroness Rothschild insult, in an official reception, the ambassador of a great power—ance which pursued a design favorable to France.

One would not believe in this aplomb of a Jewess, whose grandfather was clipping coins in the Judengasse in Franc—wrong, if the diplomatic documents were not there (2).

(1) See, in the pieces published by Count Arnim, the role played by the Jew Simou Deutch, friend of all French republicans.

(2; We have already insisted on the very psychological character curious about these aplombs of Jews and Jewesses. Compare in this order to the act of Ms. de Rothschild allowing herself to lack respect to an animator accredited to the French government, the incredible scene of Sarab Bernardl at the border (October 1884], refusing to allow his belongings to be visited, and overwhelming them with insults customs officers; also reread the episode of Gambetta calling his adversaries miserable and dunghill, when he is in the opposite and making seize from his bench and lock up a representative of the people, whose discourse does not please him. The significant side is docility with which one accepts, or undergoes; neither the geus of the world, nor the deputies that protest. There are hardly any except the customs officers who have retained some of their dignity.

The poor ambassador, who feels the affront that one he made it was inspired by Berlin and that we obey a mol order of Bleichrøder (1), written to Duke Decazes:

It seems to me that the German ambassador, committed to present to the most official house in France, should be able to counting that the persons admitted, at the same time as him, to the hospitality of the Head of State, are required not to demonstrate by an attitude of spiteful animosity and calculated nonchalance that – as far as he is concerned – peace has not been restored between France and Germany.

You and I would have immediately answered: "My-Sir, I am sorry that someone was invited. as ill-mannered; if she has the misfortune to present herself at the Elysée, I promise you I'll have her thrown out by the servants.

The unfortunate Decazes thinks about his actions that Rothschild can lower the stock market the next day and he gives birth from the following post which, moreover, is not badly written:

Paris, December 12, 1873.

It is at the moment when my audience begins that I receive, Sir, your private letter dated yesterday.

I can neither admit nor understand that such a inconvenience may have occurred. It is in truth, Mr. Marshal,

(I) The Antecedents of the Trial of Arnim, at Pion.

On the occasion of the marriage of Miss Beatrix de Rothschild with Maurice Ephrussi, Mr. Bleichrøder sent, as a wedding gift to the young spouses, a painting by Hais Makart, "a nuptial allegory-much-watched, much-discussed, "A\\e Gaulois. Come on, so much better, our money is used for something 1 which, more than any other, would be especially and directly affected. So I will discuss this incident with him and take his orders. In the meantime, Your Excellency will be pleased to agree with me; regrets for what can only be a misunderstanding, the expression very cordially of my highest consideration.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 403

As for the Faubourg Saint-Germain, it is still convinced quier of M. de Bismarck and the associate of Bleichröder, obeyed a movement of patriotism, a fit of heat-

French vinism by insulting the German ambassador.
Tears come to everyone's eyes when we tell
This story is The Good Baroness, the women whisper,
How she loves us!"

On the other hand, the same people who spend their lives with Prussian Jews, who invite them to all their parties are loudly indignant in their patriotism when they see the banner of the German Socialists appearing on the burials next to the banner of the French Socialists.

Despite everything France, the real honest, patriotic France, worker wanted the Monarchy so much, she had so much need that the restoration of the Royalty was very close to being TO DO.

In reality, the only obstacle was the Count of Ghamedge. God forbid I should disrespect this noble and pure memory! I wept at the death of the poor man Little Imperial Prince more than most of those that the Empire had showered them with blessings. I still remember the hours of sadness that I spent in my little garden at the time of the illness of the Count of Chambord, Before my lilies, which droop on their stems, at the moment that

436 FRANCE JIJ[VE

the days passed, seemed like the image of this existence, as the symbol of this Monarchy of ten centuries, in which France had so completely incarnate.

History has rights, however, it will say what it doesn't?
let's say: "The Count of Chambord did not want to reign."
In ages past, on the morning of the coronation, the Archbishop of Reims was going to knock on the door of the room occupied by the king in the Chapter's apartments. – The king is asleep! replied said the Grand Master of Ceremonies. – Wake him up, said the archbishop. In 1873, France knocked on the door of the king's room, but the king didn't wake up!

If some writers, like Dr. Carlyle, look history as a collection of small labeled vials
in advance and into which we enter the facts, others, on the contrary, and we are among them, want to sur-everything in history studies men, sees beings.

What more exciting study than this when, without that the party intends to impose, willingly or unwillingly, on public opinion, we puts you in people's shoes, you try to guess what they are thought, what we would perhaps have thought in their place!

One word is enough to describe the Count of Chambord, the word Goethe's on Hamlet:

"It is a soul charged with a great design and incapable to accomplish it.

No king's soul was higher, more generous, more right, but the temperament was not there. We see, as through crystal, the battles that take place in this heart. As soon as the opportunity arises, Count de Cham-
The board tries to find a pretext, it tries to win

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 437

of time, he curls up in his flag (1), like us we curl up in our sheets when someone comes to us searching at dawn in winter for a boring chore.
that he has retreated, he sf, reasons, he brings himself back.

To this lack of determinism, it is necessary, to remain in living analysis, join the completely natural intervention of the Countess of Chambord. Leave aside all the sentences; stay in simple humanity, and imagine what this devoted woman must have felt when she saw her husband, happy near her, doing charity, hunting, eating well and she said to herself: "Tomorrow, all this happiness will be replaced by infernal machines, gunshots, riots.

-I came back once, the Duchess often said.

(1) It is not doubtful now, for any man of good faith, that the flag issue was only a pretext. At the Ad^em-
At the Bordeaux assembly, some Orleanist deputies addressed themselves to Mr. de La Ferté, which they knew was equipped with the full powers of the council of Chamedge.and asked him if the flag issue would be an obstacle.
Mr. de la Ferlé replied that he was authorized to affirm that this question would not cause any difficulty; he added that, in his opinion, It seemed impossible for him not to maintain the tricolor flag which the misfortunes of the last war had just made sacred.

On the 29th or 30th of June, 1871, Mr. Bother met in room i three legitimist deputies to run the Reservoirs: the Duke of L.arochefoucanld-Bisaccia, Count Armand de Maillé and Viscount de G nlaul-Birou: he asked them what was the meaning of the letter that the on my heart, but delicacy obliges me to ask you to wait that I have explained myself to the country on the reserved questions. These gentlemen declared that they understood nothing and that there was no had no reserved questions." Although it was close to midnight at 8At the end of the interview, we ran to Mr. de la Ferlé's house, made him get up, They explained to him what he was thinking; he was troubled, fainted, and said, "I "If disavowed, it must be the question of the flag!"

i-iS JEWISH FRANCE

from Angoulême, but I will not agree to return second time.

The Countess of Chambord had been raised with the Duchess of Angoulême who constantly told him about the scenes from the Temple, the almost uncon- naked, because history has hardly dared to raise them, along martyrdom of the little Dauphin that the poor princess, huddled behind the door, heard every morning screams of pain under Simon's blows. "Madame," someone said to me who lived for a long time in Frosdhorii, had kept these stories an inescapable impression. The people of Paris inspired in him a real terror.

The faults of the Count of Chambord became even worse thanks to contemporary habits. Formerly a pre- tending in this situation would have found some companion as Henry IV had, not having his language in his pocket and speaking to his king as a comrade. Our time, of in which all heroism has disappeared, lives, on the contrary, in a perpetual written lyricism, in a kind of daily lyricism- nalistic; we have the glory without having to give ourselves the hardly worth acquiring. The future will be amazed to see that the Count of Chambord and Marshal Mac-Mahon, who have never made an effective effort to save their countries, have been overwhelmed with more flattering epithets than all the saviors of peoples together.

The lie of vain adulation followed the Count of Chambord until death and many people are convinced that it was the intrigues of the d'Orléans who prevented the restoration of the Monarchy.

The facts absolutely contradict this statement that would be enough, moreover, to deny the character of the Count of Paris.

their tireless, the Count of Paris does not respond completely- to the ideal that a romantic country like ours should be made of a sovereign; it has nothing to stir the imagination. We regret that a little flame and enthusiasm does not add to so many serious qualities.

The dream of the one to whom birth has imposed so much great duties would have been to live the life of a planter in free America. Curiously, at the beginning of 1870, the Count of Paris's departure plan was definitively immediately stopped and he had set the date for July its installation beyond the Atlantic.

We become attached to the countries we fought for and the Count of Paris, whose calm courage had excited the admiration- tion of the army in the Civil War, kept, from his stay there, a reprehensible taste for institutions which are not suitable for France. "He is a prince who does not have enough prejudices, it has been said of him; he would be more just to say that it is a prince who has or who at least has long had all the prejudices of modernism.

The d'Orléans, as we have said, have always granted money is of excessive importance to them, having it is as a complement, as an extension of being. The company of the Yankees, among whom the god Dollar is the object of a true cult, has not modified these feelings- ments. For the Count of Paris and his family, the fact of possessing- der much constitutes a merit and it is under the influence of these ideas that a firmly Christian family is arrived to give the country the demoralizing spectacle of ! house of France living on a level of intimacy with the House of Rothschild.

This is, I believe, the impartial portrait of a prince founded-

440 JEWISH FRANCE

truly honest man that France, returned from well chimeras, will perhaps be very happy to find for to bring some order to this country ravaged by a horde of bandits. Given such a man, his conduct towards- The Count of Chambord's life could only be 'very correct. He was very happy, all those who approached him closely testify to this, to be rid of the legacy of 1830 and to return, not only to the monarchical tradition, but still in good behavior, in decency which come to a tidy family; from the visit of the August 5, 1873, he no longer considered himself anything other than a Dauphin.

On October 30, 1873, after the publication of the famous letter that overturned all restoration plans, Tailhand ran to the Count of Paris and found him surrounded by three dukes: the Duke of Broglie, the Duke of Audiffret-Pasquier and Duke Decazes.

—He doesn't want it, said the Duke of Audiffret-Pasquier, mon-Lord, the sleeve is yours.

—It is impossible, interrupted the Duke of Broglie, the honneur forbids you. We only have to extend the Marshal and see coming.

Alone of all the important men in the government, the Duke of Audinret-Pasquier, the one whom Thiers compared to a cockchafer in a drum, intrigued to diminish in advance the authority of the King. He had said at a banquet attended by several priests from Normandy: "We will tie him up like a sausage and it will be impossible for him to move.

This remark, reported to the Count of Chambord, aroused, without doubt, his distrust of the Assembly, but deep down he does not asked only to be discouraged.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 441

What is striking about the Count of Chambord, I repeat, what is truly patient is the antagonism of the temporary that always eludes and of the consciousness that constantly pushes towards the accomplishment of duty.

After the letter of October 27, which did not appear until the 30th, because V Union kept it for three days without wanting to insert it and only decided upon receipt of an imperative telegram, believes everything is over. On November 17 or 18, Count Chamboard arrives at Versailles.

How moving this day of November 19th is—bre 1873, which perhaps decided the fate of our country! The monarchist deputies who stood in the house neighbor of that of the Count of Vanssay where he stayed the King knew that the Earl of Chamlwrđ was at Versailles, without realizing that he was just a stone's throw away from them

They begged Mr. de Monti, Mr. de Blacas, Mr. de la Bouillery, to let them know the location of the other-guste traveler; they clung to them to persuade them to talk.

gather on the Place d'Armes to form a procession for the King; as soon as they were seen entering the Assembly shouting: Long live King I one hundred and fifty others would have joined the first and would have uttered the same cry. Royalty represents was born quietly into possession of the palace of Louis XIV; she was restored with acclamation by the country's representatives.

The King would have encountered no difficulty. On a word from Yes, Mac-Mahon would have come to pay his respects and take his orders. Ducrot was all his; Charette would have 'walked by his side. If the Duke of Broglie, undergoing, as we have said it, the influence of Léon Say, who already flattered Gambetta, the man of the Jews, had not helped in the restoration-

25.

m THE JEWISH FKANCE

ration as much as it should have, it had hardly bothered the royals- lists in their preparations; he would certainly not have had the will, nor the power to have the legitimate King returned to the border.

Let us add that three thousand papal zouaves, perfectly organized and who could go to Versailles without waking- to draw attention, were quite willing to come and give the I>oi a honor escort. An arsenal in Rennes contained the weapons of these regiments.

But even that would have been useless. Everything would have been swept away. in a surge of enthusiasm, in a broad and irresistible current. The French soul, let us not forget, did not resemble not then to what it is today. There is a world of difference between France then and France today, debased by the oppo- Tunisianism, dead to all great thought, rotten in the marrow, preoccupied with dirty trafficking, pornography and scandals. The tremendous events of the war and the Commune had awakened patriotism in all hearts, purified feelings; we still believed in the rele- movement of the Fatherland.

The people of Paris, disgusted with the republicans who had slaughtered their former friends, accepted the restoration. I heard twenty times of workers who were going to their work or who were returning from it, say philosophically: "Let them bring back their Chambord and give us the peace ! "

The Count of Chambord's heart failed him at this hour. supreme; instead of acting as a King and summoning the marshal

From this side could still come the decisive act which would have everything saved. If the Marshal had been of the race of these military men, frank, jovial and round people of the past, he would have perfectly understood that the Count of Chambord was these men who must be thrown into the water to persuade them to swim. He would have made an appointment with him, he would have invited him to lunch, he would have made him drink a glass of champagne for the health of France, he would have prevented two or three reinforcements of cavalry forces, all the officers of which were ardently legitimists; then, suddenly, he would have shown the sovereign to the troops. This time again we would have shouted at the top of our lungs—Head: Long live the King! The right center and the left center would have met to do paperwork for hours and hours in commissions, they would have nothing to put against the fait accompli. We would have a few billion less debt today, and France, instead of being an object of pity for the nations, would have become the arbiter again of Europe.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 443

Marshal MacMahon was neither cheerful nor frank; he could not have been already having a solitary dream of a presidency; he refused to receive the King.

In this country, which was once the land of hardies, headbutts, wild bravery, no one moved. The only one who really felt his mission, the hero that France was waiting for, the Imperial Prince was too young, and no doubt he was saying to himself in England: "If I were the Count of Chambord!"

From this date onwards, there was no longer any evidence in the party monarchist, to use an expression of Saint-Simon, that "cascades, snow words and pistols of straw." We fell back into this perpetual convention which loses and emasculates an era that only asks to be deceived. We talk about uprisings, fighting, Vendée on paper; it is vaguely suggested that we conspire worse to flatter the subscriber at the time of renewals—

444 JEWISH FRANCE

ments (1). In short, we see this thing as completely dull, Arthur Meyer exclaiming from time to time: "The King is coming!" Montjoie-Saint-Denis 1 Forward, sons of the valiant!

contrary. The effect produced by his death attested once again to the more the place held in the world by the idea that he represented—felt. Posterity, without accepting the hyperboles of the days—boulevard nautique, will be respectful for this figure, she will understand why such a man did not have the courage to reign over a people who kill princes who do not belong to him does only good and who adores the tribunes who deceived him and ruin.

Christian nations need good pastors peoples as the Bourbons were for so long, to countries panicked and exasperated by revolutionary ideas, he
We need beastmasters.

The Count of Chambord was not of this race and, quite by encouraging his supporters in their hopes more adventurous, while undoubtedly continuing to pray for France, he gradually detached himself from it. I would say almost that he detached himself too much from it, because one would have liked to find—see in his will a 'word for so many men who had defended his cause, a thank you to writers like those of the C/nion, a legacy, on 17 million, for

(1) There was, however, some time before the death of the Count of Ctiambord, a fairly serious conspiracy start organized; which proves once again the correctness of what we said of the perpetual oscillation of this spirit. If he had lived, the Count of Chambord, who would only have had to want to reign who had not known how to want, would probably have tried, out of scruple ie conscience, to return by a scuffle.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 445

these workers' circles which are such a noble attempt at social-Christian lism.

Curiously, this prince, whose mother had been dis-Norea by Deutz, was treated by two Jewish doctors, because Vulpian was only called at the last moment. Did he sought this expiation by spirit of sacrifice? I want believe it because such a preference would have been very unusual.

After missing the opportunity and not working that very weakly to bring about the only possible solution, the statesmen, who so unfortunately led the party conservative, had some inclinations to react to May 16 and they would have succeeded if they had had the slightest energy.
Who does not know, alas! the ridiculous conditions in the—
that the fight was engaged by pusillanimous beings who,

What, were only concerned with removing it?

Of the two leaders of the Seize-Mai, the one more willing to sacrifice his life would certainly have been the Duke of Broglie, but he was embarrassed by the habits of a completely literary temperament, by this perpetual hesitation of mind which makes men—of a certain political school unsuitable for any determination. Fourtou, pure Gascon, true captain of comedie, was with more cunning, the model of Sulpice Vaudrey of Mr. Minister, the provincial corrupted by the life in Paris; he only took advantage of his time in the ministry to "get so far in there." The Duke of Broglie was timid like a parliamentarian, the other coward like the one; the first was afraid of damaging his doctrine, the other trembled at the thought of compromising his skin (1).

(1) This miniature so soft which, with the powerful machine of the centralization at "a disposition, believed to go to the last limits

446 JEWISH FRANCE

Whenever action was required or proposed to them to act for them, the men of the Seize-Mai retreated. Mr. Oscar de Vallée told me a detail on this subject which has his interest. His nomination had been announced in the French nation as attorney general at the court of Paris. "I am ready to accept, he said to Mr. Brunet, but I presume that my first act as magistrate will be to do arrest Mr. Gambetta and his famous committee (1).

The government hardly thought about this. These so-called Catholics, whom we have seen so hard on the poor devils of the Commune, trembled before this Italian factious.

The real culprit, however, was Field Marshal McMahon. He himself had taken the initiative of the Sixteenth of May that audacity, by banning the sale of the Petit Journal in train stations, found himself on the platform; he responded very proudly to the threats of the victorious left: "If I had done all my duty, you would not be not here." This is not one of the least drawbacks of the system parliamentarian, than to give the direction of affairs to men who have only verbal courage, who imagine themselves according to the word of Guizot, "to have acted when they spoke." Apart from a few exceptions—tions, assurance on the podium and energy in action are mutually exclusive between them. Bonaparte almost fainted when he entered the Orangery Hall, he saw three hundred covered puppets of grotesque tinsel, bawling. Morny himself, who was piece of paper the smallest words he spoke to the Bedroom.

(1) Mr. Raoul Duval, whose energy is well known, would have also consented—simply to take the portfolio of the interior. He only asked to be authorized to arrest six hundred individuals who, since 1870, had committed common law crimes, and who were walking around peacefully—just like Challemel Lacour, who never paid the hundred thousand francs to which he had been sentenced for the part taken by him in the looting of the Calluire establishment.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 447

nothing made it indispensable at that moment; he had repeated in every tone that he would not back down; he refused to call at the Ministry of War, General Ducrot who declared himself ready to take whatever measures the circumstances require—stances.

General Ducrot, in this sad period of our history, was the only one who was constantly resolved to sacrifice if necessary for the salvation of the country. At the beginning—ment of 1873, when everything was so well organized for the return of the Emperor that Napoleon III, in order to be able to mon—riding, underwent the operation from which he died, Ducrot was the soul of the movement that was about to take place. He began then with the most complete devotion at the disposal of the Count of Chambord. In December 1877, he did not—only ordered to act, stating only that once the order If he had recovered, he would pronounce himself "for the first person who would be there." These were his own words. The Imperial Prince, who was waiting impatiently on the other side of the strait, would it be arrived before the Count of Chambord? I believe so. In all case, France would have been saved; the Marshal did not want that she was; he obeyed a feeling of petty jealousy towards a comrade in arms by refusing to call the General Ducrot at the Ministry of War (1).

(!) Oa claimed that Mr. de Lareinty had managed to raise a moment—the morale of the unfortunate Martchal, so lamely collapsed that he had arrived. A soldier, to cry instead of com—baltre. He would have been appointed Minister of War and a piece signed by him in this capacity would still exist in the Ministry of the Saint-Dominique. Viscount d'Harcourt is said to have returned near Marshal and would have determined him to consent to his own forfeiture.

This is possible. There is no doubt, however, that Mr.

These facts were confirmed to me by intimate confidants, by personal friends of the general, who heard him repeat, at that time, that he accepted all responsibilities; they are, moreover, public knowledge.

—You are a hundred times right, one of the men told me. more actively involved in these events and who express themselves on the Marshal's account in terms which I do not wish to repeat, but you are wrong to be so clear, it will harm the success of your book in a certain world.

That's where they are. The truth bothers them, like light. bothers the sick, they need the night light that burns sadly—ment in the carefully sealed room.

It seems to me necessary, on the contrary, that if France perishes we know the name of the one who lost it, necessary also that we pay homage to this poor General Ducrot,

Lafayette, who is, it is true, considered very versatile and very inconsistent—so much, was not one of those who came to find the Marshal to decide to surrender to Dufaure.

To appreciate the truly shameful role of the Marshal Mac-Mahon, on whom such a heavy responsibility will weigh, if the France succumbs under the government that he allowed to establish itself, it is necessary read the Journal of Ten Years, by Mr. Eugène Loudun. It is not no step that has not been attempted, no question that has not been made, no argument—nothing that was used to excite the Marshal to act. Everything was useless.

Mr. Rouher said on this subject to Mr. Eugène Loudun:
< The Marshal is a nobody. You said he was discredited, despised, I told him myself, four years ago: "You could—you must be Cromwell or Monk; if you are Cromwell, show it, we let's see if we should follow you. It is easier and more dignified to you to be Monk; but, if you are neither one nor the other, you will be despised by history." Today, he was neither, and he continues to drag himself along with no other idea than to stay where he is. Par—sometimes he is very annoyed and even scared, and he cries; he cried still in November, but it leads nowhere."

T, E J'JIF IN the history of FRANCE 419

who sleeps there in a corner of the Nièvre. Twice defeated the great patriot did not want all this military noise, bugle calls, drum rolls, who avail) rocked his heroic life resounded around his coffin and it is simply that he went to wait, in a cemetery

Fourtou, himself, wanted to crown with a memorable act this beautiful resistance of the conservative party; before leaving to the ministry, he appointed a knight of the Legion of Honour the Jew Albert Millaud, author of Madame l'Archiduc and other bawdy operettas. This was his testament to Brutus and farewell to the business of the representative of order and religion.

The Jews were the real victors of May 16th and the opportunity soon arose for them to show that they were the masters in our house.

For the first time, at the Berlin Congress, France was going to find himself facing Europe, which had so trans-left mutilated in 1871.

Who was chained to represent this ghost? An Ange

I have sketched elsewhere the portrait of Waddington (1), this cosmopolitan who falls into the category of all naturalized, of all the peregrini, of all the circulatori that we will meet in the course of this work. It has relatives everywhere, except in France; his cousins are nombreux in Germany, his sister married a Prussian diplomat-

(1) Unpublished papers of the Duke of Saint-Simon, one volume, chez Qaadi.

450 JEWISH FRANCE

his own, Mr. de Bunsen; one of his uncles is a colonel, in the English army, another, Evelino Waddington, died in April 1883 in Perugia.

No one in the country was surprised by the choice of this Englishman, not more than one was surprised by the choice of Spuller as Secretary General of the Government of National Defense- The lowering of intelligence was such, at that moment, that we did not even pay attention to these enormous- mites.

The attitude taken by Waddington at the congress did not raise even timid protests.

The course of action was clearly indicated and the first A Frenchman who came, intelligent and patriotic, would have followed her with ins- tint.

Russia, through the latent antagonism that exists between it and Germany, is if not our natural ally, at least the only nation we can count on. The Czar Alexander had done us a signal service in 1873, by opposing an offensive return of Germany against us. What could the conditions of the Treaty of San-Stefano pro-Russia?

However, we saw this strange spectacle of a minister of foreign affairs, nominally French, marrying, with a desperate zeal, the interests of England, pushing her to take Cyprus, smiling when she announced in advance the intention of driving us out of Egypt and seizing it.

For France, Waddington demanded only one thing... the emancipation of the Jews of Romania.

For Romania as for Germany, we renlet's see our next volume, Jewish Europe, and we don't let us take from the question only what it has in common with the France.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 431

Whatever the lies of the Jewish press, each, moreover, is somewhat aware of the situation of this unfortunate country.

Brave, artistic, hospitable, the Romanians, who descend-tooth of the ancient Colonists of Trajan, like to recall that their very name attests to their close kinship with the sons of ancient Rome.

It was only under Aurelian in fact that Rome was con-forced to abandon Dacia to the Barbarians and to Dacia mountains substituted, on the other side of the Danube, the Dacia from the shore: Dacia ripensis.

We will not say so easily that the Emperor, writes eloquently-recently on this subject Mr. Victor Duruy, a final farewell to this valiant Roman population of Dacia Trajan. Worthy of his origin and of the one who gave it its first cities, it has played the role of Pelagius and his companions in the Carpathians in Asturias, braving from the height of this impregnable foaer-ble all the invasions, regaining foot by foot, while they flowed towards the South or the West, the lost ground, and reconstituted-killing, after sixteen centuries of fighting, a new Italy, Tzarea Romanian, whose advent is welcomed by the peoples of Latin race among the free nations.

oriental grace both masculine and poetic, they like to sing in the evening, by the light of the stars, these original melodies whose strange rhythm remains in the charmed ear. They would be, in a word, perfectly happy, like the French, moreover, if the Jews did not exist. *?

The Jew there does not constitute a fixed disease, a swamp more or less extensive and more or less fetid, it is a kind of perpetual flow that is impossible to stop. The great reservoir of Semitism, Galicia and the provinces

452 JEWISH FRANCE

Neighboring Russians are constantly pouring their hordes there. "T^ stinky.

A hundred times these Jews with corkscrews and tufts have been described filthy moorland adorned with enormous frogs, leaving dropping vermin wherever they go, offering danger constant for public health.

Bent on this unfortunate country, where their Messiah, they say, must be born from the family of Isrolka, the Jews made of him what they would like to make of France; they devour it, they gnaw it, they suck it, they exhaust it. Monopolising the sale of strong liquors, they gradually attract all the money, all the products, all the properties belong to them of the region (1).

As soon as a farmer sets foot in a cabaret, he is

(1) The facts occur in the same way in Russia. In the Jew of Sofievku. a volume published by Pion, V. Rouslane which, me ^ it is said, is the pseudonym of a woman with a big heart, the baroness "" of Dxxkull, whose husband is Russian ambassador to the King of Italy, admirably described the absorption of a whole village by a family of Jews. A Jew falls from starvation at the door of a castle, an old servant, guided by his instinct, wants it 7 push back, the merciful Lord intervenes she collects; to the ^ after a few years the Jew is absolutely the master; he has ame- a whole tribe was born; the lord is ruined, the castle belongs to the n invaders. The outcome is superb. Mocked by those who r. have stripped, these unfortunate Russian peasants see everything suddenly reality; without thinking, without consulting, instinctively, They rush upon the Jews; they do not plunder, but slaughter, burn, and only stop when they are exhausted.

Despite the wise measures of the Russian government, the Jewish baron 300 million.

o Jewish vampirism in this country has still retained its brutal side and » material; in our house the octopus is gloved, it snatches the purse without violence. When the victim screams by chance, the Jewish press makes lost, everything goes through the gears: the farm, the field, the cattle, clothes, wedding ring, everything. Alruti by the poison that is poured on him, the unfortunate man signs an engagement – that we overload and that we no longer represent to him anything but long after, when he is unable to pay. So the Jew has it seized, and a crony buys it at a low price. poor devil's little domain.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 453

All small businesses, writes Mr. Ernest Desjardins (1), member of the Institute, like Mr. Waddington, and not very suspect by nature of exaggeration, is in their hands; milk, meat, fruits, especially brandy, which they do not drink and which they adulterate with vitriol, deceiving the Romanians, poisoning at the same time the city and the countryside.

This people, says the same writer elsewhere, wants neither to serve, nor to learn, nor to cultivate, nor to pay; he does not want to participate in any charge, makes no sacrifice, does not even submit to the laws of police, hygiene regulations, and with its eight hundred thousand arms seizes neither the plow, nor the pickaxe, nor the rifle – but the money (2).

These are the clients that Mr. Waddington gave to France, go the music to cover his voice: "Freedom, principle of 89, forgetting barbaric prejudices... » The unfortunate ruined man understands that it would be bad form to complain, and will commit suicide far from the Jew's palace so as not to disturb him.

(1) The Jews of Moldova.

(i) Romanian Jews have at least the merit of confessing, with a certain frankness. Their horror for the profession of arms. The On July 1, 1863, a document was placed on the desk of the Buckarest Senate petition of the Jews of the commune of Leova, who, in order to exempt themselves from the military service, said this: "As we Jews are generally fearful people who don't even know how to shoot a hare – reason, for which we have lost our homeland and groan for two thousand years of a situation inferior to all, – we do not year 1865.)

4-54 JEWISH FRANCE

the age-old protector of the oppressed; these are those for whom he took up the cause, to the amazement of Bismark who laughed out loud at every session where our minister delivered the question on the carpet.

After the Treaty of Berlin there were some really touching in the pain of this people that Europe condemned to disappear before the Jew.

It was not, we repeat, a determinate number-mined of Jews to admit, but of all the Jews to whom it would be nice to settle in this country to the detriment of the pro-landowners. According to the Waddington doctrine, any Jew was a Romanian citizen.

A former revolutionary, a man who, during his exile in France, had been the friend of all republicans arrived, Bratiano told the House of Representatives that moving words: "Gentlemen, in my political life I have gone through many vicissitudes and many misfortunes, but nowhere and never have I felt as unhappy as in Berlin."

Meanwhile, Jewry was exalting itself, and Crémieux, in a session of the Israelite Alliance, exclaimed in a tone dithyrambic:

My faith is great in the face of our situation today, which is so beautiful. Ah! let me attribute all this to the conduct so noble, so loyal and so pure that our Minister of Foreign Affairs held in Berlin manages, our Waddington. (Several rounds of applause) welcome this word from the speaker.)

This word seems to indicate that Waddington is of Jewish origin; unless Crémieux meant by which the Minister of Foreign Affairs was theirs because they had paid for it.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 405

Jew OR paid to serve Jews, Waddington in all Cas spared nothing to defend his marriage or to win his money. He supported the cause of the Treaty of Berlin, which was the death of Romania, with all the bitterness Judaic. France, thanks to him, generous France, played weak nation, to allow the Jew to enter by force from vitriol in the throat of the dying woman.

Bratiano, with the energy, the ever-living hope of the true patriot, undertook a similar journey across Europe to that of Thiers going to beg for defeated France.

Austria, Russia and Turkey recognized individually-dually the independence of Romania. In England, In Italy, Bi'atiano found ministers sold out everywhere to the Jews, and had encountered merciless resistance. consciences, however, had revolted before the facts that he was telling and he was answered: "The powers signatories of the Treaty of Berlin are in solidarity. That the France declares itself ready to recognize the independence of the Romania without demanding the immediate fulfillment of the leonine clause relating to the Israelites, and we will make it as much, s

Waddington resisted and always replied: <r Point of citizenship rights granted to Jews who keep houses sounds of girls, poisoned brandy cabarets, usuiiera counters, no accredited French minister near Romania.

In vain they said to him: "But what is this question which Is any internal police of interest to France? Freedom of worship is not the same as the cause since it is It turned out that Romania is perhaps the country in the world where tolerance is the best practice.

456 JEWISH FRANCE

The Waddington didn't move and the left, almost entirely mixed up in financial speculation and living thus to the wages of the Jews, naturally found this admirable conduct.

Another Romanian envoy, Mr. Catargi, was not happier. Here it is, word for word, from the newspapers Israelites, the cynical response Gambetta gave him: "I commit your government to comply; France will not recognize not the independence of your country without you having recognized civil rights to all Jews without distinction. Mr. Gré-better hold on. Mr. Waddington took to the Berlin Congress the initiative of this question; it is a matter of honor for the France not to let her elude. I myself gave my word to Crémieux to support it; so I cannot yet once you commit to fulfilling your commitments without delay-managements. »

Let us repeat that this was not at all a question of religious freedom.

Mr. Ernest Desjardins still writes about this in his brochure: Jews in Moldova:

I affirm that the religious motive has no part in the measure taken by the government, nor in the hostility that the population testifies to the Jews. The lukewarmness of the Orthodox Greeks for their worship and the indifference of the priests employed by the State make impossible the slightest suspicion of religious persecution. What we hate is a foreign people in a country whose substance, forming a State, within the State, like the Protestants in France before the edicts of Richelieu.

But we have from this fact a more significant testimony—still active, that of Mr. Ad. Franck who enjoys in the Israelite world of deserved esteem.

In the response he sent to Mr. Xavier Roux who had asked what he thought were the causes of the agi-anti-Semitic agitation that is growing throughout Europe, the professor at the Collège de France declares that in Romania as in Russia religious beliefs are absolute-ment foreign to the measures taken against the Jews (1).

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 457

The learned author of Kabbalah would be very kind then to tell us on the basis of what principle we are intervening in the internal affairs of a people who have only the misfortune to be too weak to ask us to mingle of what concerns us.

Romania, however, half escaped the danger.

A Republican MP had the courage to address this issue which everyone avoided with the greatest care.

"It's been eighteen months," said Mr. Louis Legrand in the session of December 15, 1879, that the Treaty of Berlin proclaimed the independent state of Romania. Austria, the Russia, Turkey, the three most interested powers to the observation of the Treaty of Berlin, immediately recognized the independence of this small nationality. Italy has recently followed this example. I asks that France do the same and ties up with the Romania has regular diplomatic relations.

to explain the motives that had made him act; he feared the publication of certain documents which would not have been did not do justice, he simply quibbled about naturalization- tion by head and by specific categories which look at it did not in any way, and in which the government French had no reason to interfere.

(1) Annals of Christian Philosophy, October 1881.

26

458 JEWISH FRANCE

In fear of being unmasked, he nevertheless ends up give in. The Jews, moreover, felt that the Romanians were at the end of their patience; they were not unaware that it was prepared scenes on this side near which the exec- cuts of Bulgaria and Russia would not have been, for use a word from Retz often quoted by Maxime du Camp, only "greenery and pastorals."

We decided to send him to this side, as a member French from the Danube Commission, an official whose Semitic origin would not surprise me and which, in in any case, was like the representative of French Jewry in this region. We choose a man named Barrère, former condemned by the Commune who became a Gambettist. If necessary judge from the quick way he fled under the Commune as soon as the street battle began, I believe that at the time of a great massacre, his coreligion- naries there would have been wrong to count on him. remains, grateful Jewry has since passed it into Egypt where we will find him again soon (1).

Jewry was not ungrateful to Waddington.

(1) The Jews did not give up on overcoming the Romania, and they use all means to succeed. In 1885, the French government imposed a fifty percent duty all the products* of a country guilty only of not liking Israel's usurers; it is a real commercial blockade. The Ar- Israeli chives do not hesitate to declare to the Romanians that This is a providential punishment. Divine justice, they say in their issue of August 13, 1885^ which is not as slow as one goes away repeating it, inflicts at this moment trials on Romania- denies this commercial land, access to which was illegally, odious- defended the Israelites. And it is France, which has so courageously- actively defended the Jews who were oppressed, tormented and tortured by cicie. • . <^ a ^ ly, / A-' -f

>>-<^ , -^ ^ . .<>-r. -^ ^■'-iJ^ ^i:icc. ^'j<éi^^

/ / y/ / ^ n^r-^' -'it^^'->^^^ ,--;^^ '' .x:-^ .o".^ ^^ /:

J .^^ .

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF RANÇA 459

1883, V Israeli Alliance had the credit of withdrawing the old minister of the contemptuous oblivion into which he had fallen, to send him to Russia to plead, with the authority that can still attach himself to the title of French ambassador, the cause of the Israelites of Russia.

Mr. Jules Delafosse gave a speech on this occasion of admirable patriotism. Leaving all politick aside, he only placed himself on the ground of the French interests; he recalled that Mr. Waddington, subservient to England had thwarted all the Berlin Congress projects of the only ally we could count on; he asked that at this ceremony where foreign nations deployed all their pomp, France was represented by one of his real children, by some glorious soldier.

It was all in vain. The Israeli Alliance had spoken, covered the speaker's voice, and from the stands one could hear The deputies shouted laughingly: the English! the English!

Waddington went to Moscow to take a walk at our expense its nobility of business card and its grotesque crest where depicted fleurs-de-lis under a bundle of arms, with this motto which, for such an oblique character, seems of a mockery: Loyalty!

During his embassy in Russia, Waddington, convinced that we can do anything with us, was huge plumb. To prevent any rapprochement with the Russia, Germany wanted us to do an insult to the government of the Czar. Waddmglon consented willingly-third party and, in the grand official ball that he gave, he did not deign not invite the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. de Giers.

This fact, which my readers might accuse me of in-boasting out of partisan spirit, is absolutely authentic, it , is mentioned in particular in the Gaulois of June 22

1883, by Mr. Lonis Teste, a very moderate and very aware of diplomatic matters. Isn't it delightful—still, France, on the eve of bankruptcy, offered two hundred and fifty thousand francs to an Englishman to go to be insolent to the only power that has preserved for us a shadow of sympathy?

Mr. Waddington's dispatch to London crowned this building of ridicule. It was said that the former student of Cambridge was fixed there with no thought of returning and that, the , a quality of Englishness not being lost, he had the hope of being appointed peer. We were not so lucky; he continued to serve England on our backs. It is he who decided the French government to disavow and deprive of his command the brave Admiral Pierre who died of grief. But his masterpiece was the project of accession of France at the London conference for the settlement of the Egyptian question. Not only did France accept the occupation by England of this Egypt where our influence had been so long preponderant, where our French capital had been swallowed up, not only she agreed to the reduction of a debt guaranteed by all the powers, but it admitted a loan taking precedence over all the others and intended by England to repair the damages that she alone had caused.

The Germans and the Russians, fortunately, defended—better serve our interests than our ministers had done, and the conference miserably failed. Mr. Waddington in was inconsolable.

As for Barrère's conduct, it was more singular. again. We know with what interest all of Europe followed this which took place in Egypt in September 1884, in when the suspension was announced as imminent of debt repayment. To serve his country, Lord Northbrook, as a good Englishman, had left his great existence, his hunts, his beautiful residence of Forham in the Hampshire. Barrère, the wicked Commune turned minister—from France to Egypt, did not deign to be at his post: ((I shot the French flag in 1871 in front of Prussians, do you believe that in 1884 I will go there? defend in Cairo against the English? » Thus reasoned probably this opportunistic diplomat.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 46!

The French debt commissioner, Mr. Lechevallier had also chosen this moment to indulge in the resort.

Everywhere, moreover, we find Waddingtons and of Barrères. In an English newspaper, the Statht, a diploma-Mate painted a burlesque picture in August 1884 and heartbreaking for us who have kept a heart French, of what our foreign policy was delivered to all the adventurers of Europe. We got rid of them soon few of all the men in the career to entrust our interests to Jews of all countries; when a diplomat had by chance concluded an advantageous treaty, it was dis-wished because he had not reserved any special benefits at the Jewry.

In 1880, says the English newspaper, France took Africa a militant attitude. Gambetta, concerned about moving public opinion public in Italy, sends to Rome and Tunis a diplomat of race, experienced in business for twenty-five years. Baron de Billing appeases the resentment of the Italians and brings back an excellent treaty-slow. It is disavowed because the crooks of opportunism found few nuggets to collect. The invasion of Tunisia has place, the Bardo treaty is imposed on the Bey. Who is entrusted with the care to label it? To Mr. Bréard, Brigadier General, absolutely unknown, and to Mr. Rouslan, a small agent of purely commercial order-cial.

26.

462 JEWISH FRANCE

In China, a fine and skillful diplomat, Mr. Bourée, makes a treaty as much as the convention of Kassar-Saïd reported from Tunisie by Mr. de Billing. Quickly, the opportunist faction also rushes to disavow it; and France launches into negotiations absolutely-ment buttonHes conducted by naval doctors, com-aviso officers, Prussian customs officers. This is the height of irony. we despair of seeing Courcel or Saint-Vallier soon command battleships.

Two years before I died, Gambetta, feeling the need to fill the p&cl)ir« efai Israelites more or less German or cosmopolitans of on «îltc-wrigo, wanted to operate the conversion of ia Italian debt. To the Ii:rU to send on a mission to Rome an ins-brilliant viewer of the ënaacas, he invents sending a picnic there plate of M"» Arnaud, from Ariège, a Spanish Jew by the name of

We know the welcome given to this sad character by the Co-

Gambetta wants to obtain an audience with Bismarck. He launches scout an Algerian deputy, &m\m customs agent at Marseille, soon followed by another deputy, a rapper in his spare time, lotteries maker, and angelica merchant from Niort. The ban-Jewish quier Bleichbræder, despite all his good will, participates in these ridiculous talks that fail miserably.

- The Jews had Waddington on the outside, on the inside they eureftl Léon Say. Léon Say who passes, rightly or wrongly, for the brother of Alplionse of Rotliscnld, is the king's man Jews, he prefers to wear his livery, he lives every rfiâtitiJ like a faithful clerk take the watchword che2 he flees nothing but for him, through him, with him. In the im-posing in the Republic, the Rothschilds had not alone-, ^nent the satisfaction of being absolutely the masters of the the Uâi'cbé fiuiaiçiier, he§ tasted the proud joy of seeing one of their employees to govern this France under orders that they did not deign to govern themselves.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 463

The \Tai master of Jewry in France, in fact, the one in which Israel and Freemasonry put their dearest hope was Garabetla.

In exchange for power, the Jews asked Gambetta four things:

1° Business to be done;

2° Religious persecution, the abduction of classes of this Christ who offended them, the closure of these schools from which so many illustrious men had come and where we learn-born to children to become good Christians and good French ;

3° A general security law which allowed, at the time appropriate, to complete the work of the Community, and under pretext of repeat offenders, vagrants, pimps, to drive many French people from their native land, in order to insti-to take all the Jews of Russia and Germany in their place, from Romania who feel the need to change country ;

4° Finally they asked for war.

Gambetta organized as many businesses as anyone wanted.

He carried out the Bône trick in Guelma, the trick of the false conversion with the help of Léon Say, he decided to buy back the local railways, by the State, which was so successful.

It was the pure and simple repetition of what to prevent the repurchase of all lines on behalf of the Em-worse, but Prince Bismarck had bought it back, for the account of Prussia, a number of lines and the Jews, on an operation of twelve hundred million, had made at least five hundred million in profit. They had

464 JEWISH FRANCE

acted as one would later act in France; warned in advance, they had brought down the shares, they had seized and had been reimbursed at the rate of the issue-sion. The Prussian Parliament, it must be recognized, was more honest than our deputies who all made no secret of it not, had a part in these manipulations. Mr. de Maybach having proposed to buy back at the rate of 23 the shares of the Rhine line, which only have a nominal course of 8, such a clamour arose in the Assembly that he had to renounceto his project. In France, the republicans would have simply said to the Minister of Public Works: "How much Is there any benefit for everyone?

Gambetta had persecution carried out, we know how,
by the Conslans and the Cazot. •

The law of proscription of the French, he charged Reinach to prepare it and Waldeck-Rousseau to present it

All this, for the Jews, was trifle.

They like, as we know, to speak in parables, in figures that the initiated understand half-heartedly. A few months before the war of 1870, you did not talk with two people-sounds a little mixed up in the movement which was being prepared without that there was no talk of diverting the course of the Nile. Divert the course of the Nile, it was to pass the influence of France to Germany. From 1872 onwards, there was talk of the big deal. The rich discussed it at the Opera or at the circle. The most needy of Israel, taking half* cup, hinted that the times were near and that they too were going to have castles, hotels and hunts.

Big deal, indeed, and so big that no event-
No part of the story would have had such an impact.

The billions that the unfortunate French had paid looted; everything had been done to sow division and hatred in the hearts; the army had been cleverly disorganized; nothing was ready, we saw it clearly when Farre, to send a regiment in Tunisia, had to take men from Brives, horses in Perpignan, saddles in Versailles (1).

Put this disorganization in front of the formidable organization of Germany and you can guess the result. would have barely had time to make the small loan and the enemy was upon us, squeezing our throats, while a Duke of Frigolet or any Thibaudin would have tried to set in motion this formidable machine of mobia system that would take a Napoleon to handle.

It was the crushing, that is, ten billion ransom.

How to pay them? The Jew was there. He took care of it. Germany's account to advance part of the sum, only the return, we understand, not being able to be done in one day, it would have taken over the country in some way

(1)Aumomenlo\iDérrouliède and theL'guesdes Patriotes provoked stupidly Germany, we didn't even have ammunition; the parts of our arsenals were damaged and unusable. At the end of 1882, General Billot had to ask the Chamber annual extraordinary credit of 2,673,323 francs intended to destroy these cartridges which had cost us enormous sums See on these brass cartridges letters full of technical details addressed to the newspaper La Ligue (January 21, 22, 23, 1885), by Mr. Albert Uubuer, a notable merchant, who had the naivety to go and entrust his patriotic anxieties, guess who... to Spulier.

In his letter of January 24, Mr. Hubncr notes that behind the The main manufacturer of these brass cartridges was the Rothschild. See what we say, book!•', of these Jewish kings, king of the wheat, king of the railways, which, in reality, have the mastery absolutes of everything that concerns the security or life of a country.

466 JEWISH FRANCE

in charge of the winner; he would have carried out his dream of being the master, at least temporarily, of this land promised who had so long rejected him from her borders to keep France in the soil. Tax collector necessary in Germany, he would have exercised a kind of royalty, perhaps to be obtained for Rothschild the title of viceroy. Then all Jews, young and old, would have come to sit in the hearth no longer by thousands, but by hundreds of thousands.

amiable man, moreover, unrolled one day before me, would have come true.

The French, truly worthy of the name, would have scattered throughout the world like the Israelites after the destruction of the Temple, or the Poles after the defeat of Kosciusko.

The mass would have remained, working under the stick for that the Jew would have chased away, sold out Meyerbeer's operas or the operettas performed by Judic.

Big deal, again, because never speculation more gigantic haunted a human brain.

Gambetta could not succeed in this prodigious operation.
, Who saved France led by a band of schemers and exploiters, deceived, fooled, mystified in every way ways?

It was simply this vital instinct to which France had already owed her salvation so many times. She let everything be said, dare everything; she shouted to the people who governed her: "Pillage, steal, traffic in everything; but to any desire for war, she opposed a force of inertia, obstinate, dull, unshakeablelabel on which nothing could bite. This feeling of conservation did not come to the land of a higher intuition, he was all animal; like the beast that senses the approach of

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRENCHNESS 467

the slaughterhouse, France prudently refused to advance and nothing could not force him to do so.

In vain Gambetta pushed for the ridiculous demonstration of Sweet, as if France, from which we had torn Strasbourg, had an interest, some motive to remove a city to these brave Montenegrins to give to the Greeks. In vain he incited Greece to war and gave her a pledge of our intention to support it by organizing the ridiculous Thoraassin mission. In vain he went to hold discussions belligerent course in Cherbourg; no one moved.

Neither France with ridiculous boasting, nor Germany Magne by insolence did not play into the hands of the man of Jews.

It is appropriate to dwell here on the attitude taken by the Prince Bismarck vis-à-vis France. We can judge it now as the future will judge it, whose

In 1873, the Iron Chancellor had the thought of rushing to us. Was he wrong in his view? It was happening so, we said, a real attempt at recovery—The terrible lesson seemed to have borne fruit. perceived among the new geuei-ations, that they were Bonapartists or royalists, of ugliness, of the elau, of the dedication. These young officers, who had learned the path of the sanctuaries, these old chaplains who gather—There were soldiers around them, who spoke to them at the same time of their duties to God and to the Country, this return to the immortal memories of Christian France, all this worried a lot, said Tetiunger, and seemed to announce that the great nation would become itself again.

As soon as nothing more is left to command and the triumph of Gambetta and the Jews would have thrown France into the open social and military decomposition, Prince Bismarck stopped threatening us and did not even seem to have wanted to take advantage of too easy benefits.

468 JEWISH FRANCE

What happened in this soul? The Prince of Bismarck seems to have acted like these higher politicians, who are concerned not with the immediate result but with the figure that they will do before Posterity and the role they will have in the annals of Humanity.

With this gift that great men have of already living in future centuries, the Chancellor represented himself, without doubt, if France collapsed as a nation, the sentiments which would animate those who would be called to judge the biggest trial in history, he guessed that a whole literature would be based on this theme: naive France, che-Valeresque, generous, crushed by a German diplomat clever and devious.

Obviously, thinking of us, Bismarck was haunted by every moment by the memory of the curses that have pursued those who destroyed unfortunate Poland by violence and cunning. He wanted his memory to remain pure of the shadow that even such successes cast on processes.

What is certain is that his conduct was very clear. No one can claim that the German statesman has deceived France, he constantly told it the truth. When of Arnim's trial, he made public letters in ment who did Germany's business best.

Another time he recognized that the only force that existed—was still in France was in religious beliefs.
In 1883, at the time of the disclosure of the Triple Alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy, the official newspapers

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 469

German heavens proclaimed that the Republic that, by making France incapable of reorganizing itself, was the best guarantee of European peace."

In the smallest details, Germany brings this brutal, crude, but real frankness. Noting on a contemptuous tone of disgust that the German officers feel like they are in contact with Thibaudin, the man who kept his word, the Grenzhoteji, the Official Review—
The Chancellor's sky said harshly:

LWlleraagne can only wish to see General Thibaudin to keep the war wallet as long as possible.

Likewise, in fact, as the maintenance of the Republic in France is the best guarantee of European peace, likewise a a man with a background such as that of General Thibaudin must exercise—cer on the French army, — where, due to political dissensions—ques between officers, cohesion is only safeguarded by the ideas of duty and honor, — "a completely solvent. •

France, once again, was not deceived, it was free to save herself (1), she was able to have at her head, at place of all the ignoble jokers who dishonor and plunder it—slow, the most honest of men and the noblest of kings, she did not want to; she also asked for Barabbas.

Faced with Gambella's incessant provocations, he was easy to accept so as to make a war inevitable—
table, the host of Varzin, under the hundred-year-old beech trees in the shelter

(i; Bismarck did not intervene in our affairs in an active way except only once, by opposing the proclamation of the state of siege during May 16th. I believe I can state this fact without fear of being denial. One can imagine the interest the Chancellor had in the triumph of the republicans who perpetuated anarchy in France.

from which he so often asks for the calm of meditations, must certainly have considered the five or six for a long time probable hypotheses.

France could have an awakening as it had one with Joan of Arc, get up suddenly at the moment to expire, violently reject the traitors who had done it roll so low, call the King for help and win a supreme battle.

Europe could oppose total destruction and demand that there be a France. However reduced it might be summer, this nation finally enlightened, recognizing the authors of his ills, having the same faith and the same thought, was more dangerous than this enormous mass, accessible to all coming, floating in every wind, directed by a few vulgar people fidgets, where there is no longer any link to unite citizens in a tight bundle, where state secrets are secrets of all the Punch and Judy of the Chamber, of the Stock Exchange or from the street.

A France put on the chain of Jews to pay for the ransom offered another danger and Bismarck who, after 10 Culturkampf, after all, had found that he was less humilitant to go to Ganossa than to Jerusalem, did not care not to give this invasive and evil race a such tremendous power.

If the wandering Poles had troubled Europe which had so basely let the nation that had saved it be slaughtered so many times, what seeds of agitation would not carry everywhere the French now without a homeland (1)?

(1) All these great social questions, absolutely foreign \ Our French politicians are familiar with German state alliances. In July 1884, Mr. deMolike published in the Revue lilustrCe

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE

All these reasons, no doubt, decided Bismarck, IA big deal did not pass from the domain of tovà dan* that of reality.

Lacking a big affair, Gambetta organized one. small: the war in Tunisia.

You have often seen in books I traveled these African Jewish women half-sprawled on cushions hands all loaded with rings on a big belly with flabby flesh. Embarrassed by the plumpness of his slow years health is degenerated, they no longer have a passion, or even increase lie the heavy necklace of jewelry which surrounds their con puffy.

It was with one of these women, Itlîas Jfussali[^] that the Roustan decided that we should have a certain number killed of our poor little soldiers who only asked to live, to complete their time, then to return to the country, to sing again at the harvest or at the TWidanf[^]es the« joyful songs that had serenaded their children.

Is there any need to recount all these shames? They have been 'spread out one by one before the jury during the trial brought against The Intransigent. The Tunisian Marneffe receiving the prize I his complaisances towards Tamant of his woman the cross I, Commander of the Legion of Honor, the good brother formerly condemned to twenty years of hard labor, content with the officer's cross and has the right to say to our old h'<»[^]ion-« naires: € I am one of you, s the impudent men&rnjoc r?d

Vom fels zum meer {From the rock to your sea), som ce tîlre CVt.:>- die Polen, an article in which he indicated the anti-social role played by the Jaifts in Poland and their share in the ruin of this unfortunate country.

472 JEWISH FRANCE ^

Feiry declaring until the last moment that it was only to repress Khroumirs who have never existed, the millions spent in the absence of the Chambers, the malevolences, the extortions, the infamies of all nature... You know all that.

The treaty that Leon Renault had proposed was published. cynically serve the Bey in the name of some French Jews.

The Bey answers honestly: "We have a hundred thousand-lions in all gold and silver in the Regency, you me propose to issue five or six hundred million shares: or you will strip my subjects by giving them paper in exchange for their metal, or you will steal from the French which I have no reason to hold against."

– Fine! You take it like that, replies Léon Renault, we will declare war on you I – France, I know, is a great and powerful country. nation, it sometimes goes to war for a stroke of the fan, imitate the Jews of my capital who are fighting over some-some piastres.

-That's what's wrong with you. The Jews you despise so much are the masters in our house, and since you don't want them enrich yourself at the expense of your people, you will have some of my news.

All this, once again, has been said, proven, demonstrated until the evidence, despite the precautions taken by the Jew Weil Picard to buy the Bhockos file.

- If twelve French jurors declared on their honor that they believe these facts to be true, I would be the first to ask-
Mr. Roustan sat down in the dock.

Thus spoke Attorney General Dauphin in a access of virtue.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FFLANCE 473

- All these facts are true, we declare on our honorneur, the jurors replied.

Dauphin didn't ask for anything at all.

Rous*an, after returning to Tunis one last time to attend a banquet organized by the Alliance israéuniversal lite, was sent as minister to "Washing-tone, where he pockets, with double treatment, the insults that the Yankees do not fail to provide him with chathat they meet him in the street.

Do you believe that after the impact of this trial, the scandals will stop, at least for a while?

You don't know the Republicans. Cambon continues Roustan. His predecessor received bribes, he seems to have a preference for water; he makes a huge profit with the Tunis Water Company and arrests Arab advisers who want to oppose these concussions.

The history of Mustapha's property is a chapter of the financial annals of indescribable gaiety. Once landed here, this poor Mustapha, so playful at Bardo, fell into the Parisian quagmire like an old horse in a swamp full of leeches. At his wit's end, he was happy to find the Transatlantic Bank which offered him a million and he blessed Allah for making him meet such helpful people. After leaving him alone for a few – At least find us someone who will win, they said to him.

guarantee your debt.

The unfortunate man was in despair when Yolterra and Alfred Naquet came to talk to him about a philanthropic society which proposed to put into action immediately, not the terrains that she possessed in Tunisia, but those that she could– would possess one day, Mustapha confided his sorrows to these two good Jews who said to him: "We are those whom you seek and you are the man we seek. Yield we will give you your land and we will answer for your million.

4~4 JEWISH FRANCE

Definitely, thought Mustapha, Paris considers Her city extraordinary! Everything is there. He happily accepted the offer which was made to guarantee his debt, which was all the more easier for his new friends than those who threatened him to pursue him and those who offered to save him were the same, belonged to one and the same group financial.

Mustapha, however, was not at the end of his troubles. He must have seen all sorts of things with his Jews. and go through all the vicissitudes with them. As long as we needed him, he crossed the antechambers in the middle of bowing ushers, he sat in the place of honor at the council table and he was called as big as the arm: His Excellency General Mustafa bin Ismail. A little more Later, he was asked with a laconic: "What does the general Mustapha? » In the end, he had become again, as in In his youth, a simple hahhak, he was left to moping with the office boys and he was hailed from the door of a disdainful: "Hey, Mustapha!" His fez, sometimes triumphant, sometimes lamentably collapsed and collapsed like his master, recounted these various phases.

The situation, in fact, was not very clear. The fifty millions of properties, which Saddock had given to his favorite, in these hours of effusion, where one does not know always what we do, were goods hahhous, that is to say– say inalienable. Some belonged to the Sadiki college, the others constituted the private domain of the family beylical.

eager to make a deal. A former civil servant of the September 4, who had Cambon as secretary, was in charge of gea, for a reasonable price, of course, to make Mustapha Cambon's claims favorable. declared that it was essential that a person be sent to him-French political scene, heavy on influence and light on scruples, which could help him to influence the Bey.

Floquet was naturally chosen for this role and he went to Tunisia to plead this ugly trial, which had been already lost by Mustapha before the Charaa court, the alone competent in this case (1).

Cambon had the winning side. "You see," he said to the Bey, The President of the House himself is interested in this question, if you do not give in it will bring misfortune to you and you will be dethroned. You only have one thing to do, take for arbitrator an honest man, a man foreign to this matter, disinterested and pure republican... the virtuous Naquet(2). »

Everything was going well and by statutes filed with Mr. Dupuy, notary, on March 24, 1885, the Tunisian Land Company- his was definitively established, it was among

(1) The French court itself, before which the case had been carried, refused to give complete reason to the Jews. One took Ye'imreT's side to have judges who were reliable. President, Mr. Pontuis, was appointed President of the Chamber at the Court from Nîmes.

(S) Naquet, after having recognized that he had been one of the shareholders of the Tunisian Land Company and that the money had been paid for lai by Mr. de Rothschild, admits that he was detached in advance as arbitrator, but he claims that he had surrendered his shares. He does not therefore does not justify having Floquet involved in speculations on buildings in lilies.

476 JEWISH FRANCE

its founders, almost all Jews: Messrs. Gery, Thors, Jump from Beauregard, Bloch, Volterra, Rey, Levy, Césana, and Mustapha ben Ismail.

A new black spot soon appeared. official of September 4 found that Cambon had everything took for him and left him nothing and he ran to rajconler throughout, in the Figaro, these dirty manipulations. We then heard, for some time, the most amusing duet-

The Lantern imperturbably praised Flo's integrity-quet and declared that a civil servant like Cambon, who lent himself to these traffics, was the most contemptible of concussionaries. Le Figaro, without defending Cambon, affirmed, with some reason, that it was shameful for Floquet to ento put down for this Mustapha, who had been so long deliciæ domiⁱⁱⁱ, and thus to dishonor not only him-even - which was little - but - the House French, of which he was vice-president and of which he was more, late the president (4).

They were both right, one for Cambon, the other for Floquet. No doubt, under the pretext of civilization, the peoples were often cruelly ransomed

(1) See Le Figaro of July 9 and 11, 1885, which does not give the full the genesis of the case, as we do, but where speculation Floquet, Naquet and C'^ is very exactly summarized; consultfir also-the countless articles in the Lantern. These two newspapers complete on this question like the two ends of a case.
Lanterne, as we know, had challenged Cambon to pursue her and,
To avoid the trial, a commission called the 6/an- had to be appointed.
commissioners composed of Mr. de Saint-Vallier, the former ambassador, Flourens, president of the section at the Council of State, and Martin, ins-Inspector General of Bridges and Roads.

M. de Saint-Vallier was so bothered by the miasmas which were released-were so sick of this washing that he died six weeks later.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 477

barbarian strains, but never crooks fell in a country with pine trees of rapacity, we have never seen politicians to display their corruption more brazenly tion; never were facts more ignominious than those for which the press had to open a special section:
The Smells of Tunis.

What should be said is the suffering endured by our soldiers to allow the Jews to engage in these operations.

What was missing from the account of this expedition was a writer-painter, in the manner of Fromentin, recounting the unspeakable sufferings of this war made to procure money to scholarship holders. ^

Who hasn't felt their fists clench when hearing an offi-
I can describe to you this march in columns, under a sky

the desert a few steps away î On camels, we carry the necessary water which, sometimes, is three or four months late three leagues and arrives hot and stagnant (1). Suddenly, a a man speaks incoherently, he laughs out loud, he went mad 1 Another, suddenly, falls like a mass, people rush around him; he is dead A

In a hurry, we improvise a coffin with a box of bis-

(1^ It is a good Jew, naturally, ChemU who is the supplier official of the French army during the expedition. In a few months ii-wins three million. A unanimous cry of disapproval is raised against the unheard-of concussions committed at the expense of health and life of our unfortunate soldiers. In June 1883, we were forced to bring Cbemlu before the court martial of Sousse, where the io-Quencedes Tunisian gropers and a babble plea from Mr. Georges Lacbaud had him acquitted. Too bad for those who died of hunger 1

27.

478 JEWISH FRANCE

©«ite <f?it èmi% il© salaïe, that the next night will come» rfitaillèiri' - ^6scciaod^=^, tan ceriteuiæ Ibeimàllfoiireiw;. IParféiç le

(S!e^limT[BlllTlbiIBByirqfunëk and ^"«èàt hyaU la Franc-îll&gjiiMQnieKiE ytt (iii'feiittâia ;a Eatrré d'atHadaer of the chaplains at expeditionary force.

Every isolated soldier is lost; taken prisoner, he is handed over as a toy for the women of the tribes who kill him slowly pushing needles into his flesh reddened by fire. One of my relatives, who came back dying of the expedition, told me of the feeling of horror he felt had experienced in front of a non-commissioned officer of the train that one did not could recognize. The unfortunate man, his eyes gouged out, ofMlles cut, the virile parts horribly mutilated, tried in vain to write his name on the paper with a pencil that had been put in his hand! What a ttaEilcaoi for the vengeful pen of a great writer!

The Jewish general Lambert, soon to be related by marriage to the Rothschild, came expressly to walk in the streets of Tunis his general's uniform and prove that it is the Jew, so despised in the East, who now governs and command in France. This is the real Jewish war that we are talking about.

the ash with arms crossed, like its divine Master: the war, where the French are killed for Jewry, in even being the hope of another life for them.

After all, scientific documents are perhaps more eloquent than the descriptions of the most wonderful

Who has read the report on the hospitals of Doctor Lere—a friend of the government, a regular at the newspaper \\$ T^mps f No beds, no doctors, no remedies.
§Hf straw, dying people struggle in the waters—

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 479

chemars of typhoid fever as in purgatory anticipated. In a mephytic room where the genies float of Death intersect the calls, the moans and the groans. We hear all the divas clashing together in a jumble—gations and all the delusions. This one gasps and, the gorçedessé: ched, cries without ceasing: to drink! This one is no longer thirsty, he drinks in imagination the clear water of the native stream; poui savor it in longer draughts, he leans through the gorse and grasses; by one of these associations of ideas which are established even in brains in disarray, it is sees himself going back up the hill to return to the village, he sits down—sits near the old mother, he eats wheat pancakes black and chestnuts, he opens his mouth to smile

the country and without suffering he has just exhaled the last sigh. Look at the head expressing serenity... the pauvre piou piou seems to be asleep and, in his stiffened hand, holds still the small medal of the Virgin that the Brother, who gave him learned the ABC, he put it on leaving. The braided rascal who, to please the left, eliminated our chaplains military, will not have been completely successful. Yet another Frenchman who just died a Christian!

But, is it not so, that this putrid atmosphere com—starting to weigh on you? Go see Mantegnisi who is at Gamondo, Beauregard who is at Hirsch. The waves gushed—healths which, similar to those of Vaux, "are neither silent nor day or night, » the cool coppices, the thick shade, the wonders of the air of all centuries embellish existence tence. Life is beautiful, indeed; the shares purchased 125 francs are worth 500, since the Bard's treatise and the France takes care of the debt!

The pretty word was spoken by Gambetta! "After all, he said at the Senate podium with an indefinable gesture disdain, how many men died? 1500 French at most »

This time, however, he lacked stomach. If he had accused the true figure, the Jews would have carried it in triumph (1).

The epilogue was told to me by a friend of mine who happened to be—was, on November 19, 1882, on the road leading from the Gretz station at the Château de Saint-Ouen Mantegnis, property of the Levant Gamondo. "On the superbly harnessed, which transported guests from the station to the castle, says Le Figaro of November 22, were installed:
Mr. Gambetta, accompanied by Mr. Arnaud de l'Ariège, Léon Renault, Antonin Proust, Dugué of Falconry, Pignatell, Alfassa. »

What Le Figaro does not say is the fit of gaiety which took all these gentlemen, when they saw some soldiers on leave who were going to take the train.

In Tunisia! In Tunisia! cried the merry companions, to which the sight of these poor guys, who were walking along saddened brow, with their effects in a handkerchief checked, had just recalled the benefits they had realized.

Under this melancholic and rainy autumn sky, these

(1) A usually well-informed provincial newspaper, the Call to Peufille du Gers, gives a figure of eighteen thousand victims.

"Do you want to know, fathers, how many of your children have been killed, wounded, discharged or died of disease since five months for the sole benefit of the "Jeckers" of Tunisia and the opportuni-nism?

Eighteen thousand out of fifty thousand.

This is the official figure that a doctor gave us yesterday.
military doctor who did the whole campaign and that we put the government of the RF should contradict.

noisy grities, my friend told me, were sinister to en-tender.

Let us now give the floor back to Le Figaro, which is still good.
informed.

"Table of the day: 700 pieces including 450 pheasants.

"And they say there is no more game in France!"

When he raised the Rent by one cent,

The soldier can die content;
Because we have to have fun and sing and not,

Because the Turcarets must Coin with the mourning of the Fatherland,

Even if it means leaving afterwards;
It is necessary that, unleashing his fiery passion.

Such a fool who didn't have a penny
May a pig spread out in the Bois de Boulogne

In his crooked car;
It is necessary that such a fellow with hypocritical gestures,

Trapped in concordats,
May one of these mornings liquidate its bankruptcies

Arec the blood of our soldiers (t).

With the League of Patriots, Gambetta attempted a supreme effort to procure for his adopted country this war which would probably have resulted in it disappearing of the map of Europe.

In undertaking this work we had above all for aim of teaching our compatriots to exercise their intelli-agency, to bring ideas together, to reason in a word

(1) Clovis Hugues, The Days of Combit.

482 JEWISH FRANCE

as our fathers did before them. By whom? For whom?— This is the question that we must ask ourselves before everything significant leak.

So let's break down the incident on St. Mark's Street, and Let's see who's involved. A farewell party is organized—established by the German Gymnastics Society. In honor—from the first evening, will teach us.

German Gymnastics Society in Paris

PP

Due to an unforeseen incident, the meeting room is no longer fortunately not at our disposal this evening,

The farewell party in honor of Messrs. Jul. Gras and A. Cohen will therefore take place next Wednesday, August 30, and yes» We are counting on a large meeting.

Kind regards.

-For the committee,

The 2nd secretary,

Eugene Wolff.

It's two Jews, probably, and certainly one, A. Cohen, whom we want to celebrate in this society, which has for president a Jew, Dr. Mayer, and for secretary another Jew, Eugène Wolff, probably related to the Wolff, whose agency had sent, in 1870, the famous story of the insult to Mr. Benedetti.

But a copy of this circular goes astray; it is brought, by an astonishing coincidence, to a member of the League of Patriots, whose susceptible courage is moved and sees there a challenge. Is this patriot, with his sensitive freedom, one of those French of ancient date, which have preserved deep within of themselves the memory of the glories of old France? Through a bizarre encounter, this fiery patriot carries the Jewish name of Mayer, absolutely like the president beyond German company.

THE JEW OF THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 483

Who's on fire here? It's the Jew Laurent in the journal of the Jew Weil Picard, confidant of the Jew Gambetta

Everything therefore happens absolutely between Jews, and the life of Tilers of Berrichons, Bretons, Poitevins, Bour-Guignons is played on a card, in a back room neighboring the Stock Exchange, among some Israelites. It is come that the first Mayer will play the insulter, and that the second Mayer will play the insulted one, who jumps at the name of his mother

To make the coup succeed you have to find a fool good faith; D roul de is there. He is absolutely incapable, I am convinced that I received anything to play with the role of the agent provocateur. He's just a guy the current link, the man maddened by advertisements (1). having the need to always be on stage. He made himself a sort of profession of his noisy patriotism; it is in this role that the Paris of the firsts is used to seeing him, and he can no longer strip this character. He is a patriot in the city, in the

(1) Let us add that the president of the Patriots' Line is not always very scrupulous in the methods he uses. Under pretext which Mr. Rothan gave to the imperial government the warnings- the most clairvoyant and prophetic statements on the designs of Germany, Unrolled (to appear on its lists, in qu- vice-president, the former minister in Hamburg. The diplomate, who does not want to be in the spotlight with the Erckmau-Caiatryan, who declared that the officers who fell heroically at Gravelotte and Saiut-Privat were cowards or Irailre», countryside, morning, evening, at the Vari t s and at the BoulTes^ to the Little Bride and the Mascot. At the Salon, next door old soldiers who have twenty campaigns, ten Lies- sure, he gets painted by Neuville, the hood rolled up around the body, carrying in leather cases all kinds instruments, cartridges, spyglasses, a revolver. Did he really believe that Gambelta, at the Battle of Le Mans, had charged alone, shouting to the fugitives: "Turn around at least to see how your general dies!" Was- he convinced that, like John the Good, in Poitiers, the head of the National Defense government had fought two lying on a pile of dead, alone, superb, mad with pain and courage, Keeping only a section of three great swords.

■ 84 JEWISH FRANCE

I don't know; the fact is that he was talking about this Vitellius declamatory, as one would not speak of Brutus of Philippi, nor of Francis I of Pavia.

protests energetically. D roul de promises to erase his name and will not have did nothing. Finally, in August 1885, Mr. Rollian was expelled <his property of Lulteribach, in Al ce, where he composed peacefully books that could have instructed us while D roul de walks triumphantly down the boulevard, delighted to have done

The jumper appears everywhere. In October, Déroulède writes, "Whatever my personal opinions, I refused to let put my name on any list, because the cause I serve and that I do not want to give up forbids me from being the candidate of no party, » Six weeks later, he asks to be placed on the opportunistic list and, to give a pledge to his despicable friends, he outbids Goblet, who takes away the bread of poor priests of 80 years old, he asks that they also take away the right to fly, that we make them real Outcasts.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 485

No, no, they saw nothing, looked at nothing but themselves;
Their only problem is their interests.

The French state is nothing to these petty minds.
They even built his weakness into systems,
These new feudal lords of republican times

But, go on! your roll is good, and theirs is bad:
Theirs, without a common goal, leads to disarray;
In following it, one must trample or deviate;
And, for anyone who strives for French greatness,
The Obstacle, it's them! – The Rally, it's you!

No doubt, if we could lock up for two or three hours this dangerous vain man, if he could collect himself in this isolation which weighs on these natures like the silence of tom-handsome, he himself would be frightened by the danger he has caused run to his country; he would listen to the one who said to him: "Come, you are a Frenchman, a Christian, and to provide a deal with the Jews, you will have thousands of people killed who have mothers, wives, children. You know that nothing is ready, that the embezzlers and the embezzlers-House Speakers have wasted the billions we aircraft supplied for the reorganization of the army. Laisant, a man from your party, proved to you that the strength of our regiments was ridiculous, you saw Farre at work, even in a matter in which all Jewry was interested;
stay calm and do not associate your name with the ruin of your country.

Unfortunately, Déroulède probably had never found anyone to talk to him like that, when he-resumed his campaign on Saint-Marc Street.

This expedition, which was only ridiculous, could have been dangereuse if the AUetnagne, for reasons that we have deduced, had not been resolved to peace, if Paris, guessing instinctively, without knowing exactly the truth, speculations hidden there below, had not remained deeply indifferent-rent (1).

There was a Landwehr captain there whose phlegm phi-The philosophical was admirable. Imagine a Napoleon I, after 1806, who would have come to disturb his coffee? You can hear the swearing and the challenges from here. This brave captain's man, who is probably a man too brave as Mr. Déroulède, went peacefully to take his mug elsewhere.

Germany not only had common sense, it had of the mind, which is quite rare for her. Mistress of the municipalities full of Jews from across the Rhine who, as well as we said, give themselves for Alsations, she made organiser, a few days after the Déroulède demonstration, a grand banquet to celebrate Sedan's anniversary.

You can see the contrast from here. In September 1870, the French corpses littered the battlefield; captives were making their way, gloomy and dark, towards these islands of the Meuse, where they remained two days without food; amidst cheers and cheers, the regiment of the mounted guard paraded raising our flags in the air... Twelve years later, on the same date, at the same time, the Republicans were toasting champagne in the palace of the Scholarship to celebrate this happy day.

(1) We saw at the festival of July 1884, the reproduction of the same silly rudeness followed by the same backtracking. The flag German was thrown into the stream by a police commissioner Distracted with fear, a young German, Mr. Wurster, was almost massacred created by the drunken crowd.

THE JEW IN HISTORY DS FRANCE 487

On the square, the Landwehr captain, whom Déroulède had prevented him from taking his beer, for no reason plausible, laughed in his blond beard with that Barbe-like laugh-muche, particular to Germans and which sometimes veils itself of a kind of saddened philosophy.

Suppose that Déroulède, instead of being a poser and xx boastful of patriotism, would have had truly at heart of his country, what a wonderful opportunity this offered him to inter-come, to remind the modesty of these shameless bankers!

Imagine a speaker with ardent and hot speech going find workers, bourgeois, former soldiers and saying to them: "Will you allow it to be commemorated with feast a similar anniversary, that one chooses, for get drunk, the day when France was so painfully struck?

These men would have understood, we would have rushed on them revelers, the tablecloths would have been overturned, Floquet would have completed its digestion in the sewer and, shaken by the storm, Deputy Winckam, the expeller of the Sisters of Charity,
a very French name again, by the way,
would have broken all his bandages.

Déroulède did not find the spectacle of this revolting
Sedan festival and we did not hear in this circumstance:

The beautiful, tearful lute that vibrates beneath his fingers.

Under no circumstances, moreover, will you find the founder of the League of Patriots demanding a wise and practically useful measure for the defense of the country. D there is, for example, a gap in our codes which would appear incredible, after what the war of 1870 taught us

488 JEWISH FRANCE

of the way the Prussians had organized their service of information, if one were not fixed on patriotism of a Chamber which for a long time had the Baden SpuUer as oracle. Foreigners caught in our country in the act of es-espionage, are not liable to any penalty. Colonel Mazza, who had previously been accredited by the government Italian as military attaché to follow our great maneuvers, was arrested a few years later at the time where he took the plans of Fort Mont-Gilbert, in Savoy.
was content to take him to Chambéry where he was put in freedom.

In September 1885, it was the Prussian general commander in Mulhouse who was caught in Belfort.

At the fort of the valley of Servance, called the Liberal of the East, two gentlemen, followed by two young people, examined and mounted even on the escarpment; the guard noticed it and asked them what they were doing there: they replied that they were looking for the way of Saint-Maurice. The guard pointed it out to them, without ceasing to sur-

The guard, who knew German, heard:

"We could mount an assault here." He immediately warned the commander who tells him:

(Take men with you and arrest them!) They appeared surprised. The older one gave his card: It was the Prussian general from Mulhouse, his sons and his aide-de-camp. They were searched, they had maps. They were brought into the lieutenant's house—while telegraphing to the place which replied: "Recognize them to the border."

Drive them back to the border! That's all the commander of the place, whose conduct seems to me singular in this matter, is content to respond. He would have

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 4b0

could remember, however, that a French officer, attached at the headquarters of the 15th corps, and taken in the vicinity of the Col de Tende, had been sentenced to two years in prison.

An honorable merchant from Mainz, Mr. Tissot, against from which only unimportant stories could be heard, had been sentenced to five years in prison.

Why, while he celebrated Gambetta in prose and towards, did Mr. Déroulède not think of asking him to urgently pass a specific law on this subject? If, instead to have Mrs. Edmond Adam fired rifle shots, at the Vincennes polygon, he had organized a meeting and opened a petition to resolve this matter question, one would have said: "Here is a man who is not a boastful of chauvinism, but a vigilant and attentive patriot which strives to preserve us from what has lost us in 1870. »

In any case, France had a lucky escape. Jewry, moreover, had operated with less unity than customary; perhaps this was what saved our peasants. While the Mayor of the German Gymnastics Society—Whether he insulted or not, we never knew just the truth, that the Mayor of the Patriot League? was indignant, that a third Mayor, the Meyer of the Gaul. spoke vaguely about the honor of the French flag and made it clear that he would not let a fourth Mayor be touched. that of the Lantern, entered the scene.

Had he come too late? Had Gambetta distributed all onion skin intended for our unfortunate soldiers for the next war? I don't know; the fact remains that he did to bring out the astonishing ridicule that Déroulède had covered himself in.

This last Mayer, precisely, was unlucky, for once he had been honest. The poet went to slap him and, like all the abbots in the world, the abbot whom the Jews least like is still the abbot of the Sword, we had to wear* the slap in the face to the courts that condemned Déroulède. to a fine of twenty-five francs, - which seemed good light to those who had heard the bellows appeared, at the con-milking, exorbitant to those who knew the character who had received it.

490 JEWISH FRANCE

Happiness never comes alone. France, which came to escape a war which would have been his ruin, was put definitely some time later sheltered from a new one attempt of this kind. On the very day that the year 1882 ended-knows, there arose, on the side of Ville d'Avray, a little of this dust that Julian the Apostate had thrown towards the sky in the plains of Persia, crying out: "You have conquered Galilean!))God had touched Gambetta with his finger and this powerful had collapsed, like his peers, in a tragedy that remained mysterious. Quomodo this said potens...

Behind the convoy of illustrious Romans marched a slave dressed like the deceased, charged with parodying his gestures, his attitudes, his head bearing, it was VArchi-mimc, funereal and comic actor at the same time, like a figure of Dance of Death walking through a carnival, like a Mardi Gras mask that would frolic in a cemetery. Ferry was Gambetta's arch-nemesis; he was a second himself same, but with this difference which separates the valet (!;i master; he thus pleased the Republican Union and reassured almost the country. Even more Freemason than Jew, auco.i-milking Gambetta, who was more Jewish than Freemason, he was the [)redestined* executor of the infamous works of the inio-laughing, but his baseness does not rise to such blows

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 491

the organization of a European war; he does not have the kidneys to push this and his cowardly sides reassured those who were frightened by his shameless, funny manner. Without a doubt, he is fierce against all that is weak and willingly implacable against everything that is noble and generous, but at the same time-blood, and France came to regard this as a good thing,

From this moment, like the Rhine which is no more than a stream when it reaches the sea, the story of France is now little more than the history of the Ferrys and 1 history Ferry itself is hardly "just" the history of the Bank Franco-Egyptian.

It is Charles Ferry who is in charge of centralizing everything and to serve as a business name. Former flower broker and feathers before being employed at Watel, he had had everything young the vocation of commerce. Formerly he was in charge of negotiate on the quays the books that were sent to his brother, which is not a crime, but does not indicate a very prosperous situation of fortune.

This is how I bought it, in memory of the witty author Letters from a Passerby, On the Hunt, a ruled booklet in red and coquettishly printed by Jouaust which bears this dedication: To my dear friends Jules and Charles Ferry ^ Arthur de Boisaieu.

Today, Mr. Charles Ferry is a twenty-times millionaire. We see him become a purchaser, in the month of September-bre 1884, in the liquidation of the assets of General Tunihis Ben-Aïad, from the building located at 43, nie Saint-Georges, and pay him 540,000 francs!

The newspapers report the fact. Charles Ferry has the impudeny the purchase, and to affirm on his honor that he has not I bought a house in Paris. We put him in peace-

492 JEWISH FRANCE

ment before the eyes the extract from the Small Posters of the September 10, 4884.

A house has just been sold in Paris, rue Saint-Georges, 43 and 45, awarded at the request of:

1 Mr. Ahmed Bey-Ben-Aïad or Benaïad, in Paris, avenue des Champs-Élysées, 99; 2' Mr. Tayer Bey-Ben-Aïad, in Paris, rue Blanche, 49, for the benefit of Mr. Charles Ferry, deputy, in Paris, rue de Rivoli, 244, following the judgment of the auction houses of the Seine, !e June 48, 1884, for 540,000 francs.

That's all there is to it. No one thinks of calling out to this poor man. yesterday's story about the origin of the fortune he possesses today today. It is hardly so, in the face of the cries of indignation of the voters of the Vosges, Charles Ferry has the modesty to withdraw temporarily to public life.

With Marc Lévy-Crémieu, Charles Ferry organizes tou-
These are the major operations of the Franco-Egyptian.

This Lévy-Crémieu, highly esteemed in Israel, because he was everything in charge of the spoils of the goyim, was the real minister of the finances of opportunism. Master of state secrets, knowing all the events in advance, he realized in a few years of huge profits. Agree with Challemel Lacour, he had undertaken, in the French Republicçaise, the downward campaign against Tunisian bonds-his own. He was with Lebaudy, behind whom were the Rothschild, the organizer and 'preparer of the Crash' that the government facilitated with all its power. Finally, it is he who negotiated, with Tirard and Dugué de la Fauconnerie, the operation of conversion. It had begun in Marseille in the canvas trade, - then established himself in Paris and had gone bankrupt. At the time of his death, at the end from January 1886, he left fifteen million and properties everywhere, in Nièvre, in Seine-et-Marne, in Seine-et-Oise. The Gaul devoted an article to this good man where admiration for this stock market skimmer overflowed who had spent his life accumulating mourning and ruins around of him (1).

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 493

As for the Franco-Egyptian Bank, it is one of these immense Jewish machines that would have to be dismantled and analyzed-piece by piece, to realize the eco-economic, not only of France, but of the world entire.

Mr. Taine, in the last volume of the Origins of the contemporary France, which must contain a lot of statistical and financial tables, account, it seems, oc-to answer these questions, but I doubt he'll get away with it. Prou-dhon, the author of The Stock Market Speculator's Handbook, would have seen more clearly.

The Franco-Egyptian Bank, whose director is a Edgar May, a pleasant-looking Jew, who is almost exclusively primarily composed of Jews, does ordinary business, like the Didot-Bottin, where Edmond About had won a

(i) At the same time, France lost Lange, another Jew.
"Nobody," cried Arthur Meyer in the Gaulois, with a transport

He would have sold thirty thousand of the same value in a single exchange! So bankers were looking for him. A lot, and more great, made use of his wonderful temperament. He gained from it the cross of the Legion of Honor!"

There are not fifty people in Paris now who can understand how precious this sentence is as a date, which can appreciate the almost unconsciousness of this Jew who swoons with admiration before a lynx of the Stock Exchange, that the OD decorates because he placed a lot of ptimea.

28

•494 JEWISH FRANCE

part of his fortune, the Brasseries et Malteries de France, the Waters of Constantinople, the Weapons Manufactures of Saint-Etienne; she finds that we have not yet lost enough with Mexico; and warmly patronizes the National Bank of Mexico, it deals with foreign exchange, and She has a counter in Mauritius, where her agent shoots the parent company in Paris, and sells its prints in France at 33 0/0 profit; she also takes care of collections on Egypt. There she continues the system of the English Jews and Levantines, who managed to strip almost entirely-ment the unfortunate Fellahs by engaging them, by all the means, to borrow small sums; they are unable-able to return on time and they are expropriated. (1) This is always the ancient war stripping the weakest of his piece of land, and reducing him to slavery, only the war here is waged from a distance by the Jew dear to Renan, the one who dies of spinal cord injury in a good hotel padded Champs-Élysées.

(1) I have shown the Jews resettling in Paris and the surrounding area from Paris, to the very places where they were during the expulsions; After three thousand years, the Jews returned implacably to this land of the Pharaohs where they had been slaves; they raised, on these poor populations, truly monstrous tributes.

"It is difficult," says M- Gustave Lebon in his book: La Ciuiiùation of the Arabs, to establish what the European financiers, the Jews above all, have extracted money from the Fellahs in a few years. We know, by figures published by Mr. Van den Berg in 1878, that on a amount of 1,397,175,000 francs, product of five loans, the financiers had taken in VIP pots, commissions, etc., the modest sum of 522 million. Only 875 million entered into the Egyptian government coffers.

all humanity French democracy and English liberalism act-feels towards enslaved peoples, such as the Arabs and the Ludieuâ.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 49»

All these operations are hardly accessories.
big deal of the Franco-Egyptian Bank, these are the unions, the speculation, the stock market gambles undertaken agreed with the government men.

The Tonkin expedition was an operation of this kind.

Obviously, no motive can be put forward patriotic or elevated. Colonial policy, which has its reason to be for the people embarrassed by too much population, would be insane for France where the number of births is lower than that of other nations, and which is now forced to call on foreign workers its soil (i). This admirable Algeria, which is at our gates, which only asks to be cultivated, and where no one wants go, is there to show us the inutility of our possessions-distant sions.

(1) M Berlillon, although belonging to the advanced opiuiioa, had the loya'ilé He notices this elTraytiit symptom in Statistics human of France. "In the 17th century the population of France, compared to the population of the great powers, represented 38 percent. This figure shows quite well what weight it has then the will of King Liuis XIV, because he represents, all things" equal elsewhere, our economic strength and more precisely still our military strength, compared to that of neighboring states. Our king was the most powerful monarch of his time." In 1789, the France still accounted for 27 percent of the total population; in 1815, the currency was more than 20 percent; today it is by 13 percent.

The weakening of influence, the decrease in the number of those who speak the French language or who read French books, cor-responsible for these figures. It feels like a star entering the jilaceous period, whose radiant atmosphere diminishes. This is what The people should repeat this constantly, with proof in hand while the left-wing deputies, lying as usual, declare to the people that he is the greatest of all the peoples of-then S9, while it is precisely on this date that 8 begins.
decadence.

a population much larger than the French population. In the province of Oran, there are 83,000 Spaniards against 58,000 French people (1). We do 920 million in business with South America, which we have never been busy, and we only do 306 million with it Algeria which cost us so many men and so much money.

The highest figure for imported goods from France in our French establishments, in Oceania, has been of 618,567 francs! In Gochinchina, there is hardly, in fact of French, that civil servants that we are obliged to pay. We barely ship to all our colonies combined for 47 million products per year.

These gross evidences are obvious to everyone and the most limited mind perceives them. In six hundred years, the inhabitants of Tonkin, who are the most destitute people of Asia and who live exclusively from the rice they harvest, won't buy us a million worth of goods.

((I challenge, said, before the commission, the vice-admiral Duperré, former governor of Gochinchine, that I quotes a Frenchman who could win in Tonkin, in the industry, enough to pay for his passage back to France.

(1) Nothing conclusive like the report sent by the director of General Security to the Minister of the Interior on the emigration in France for the years 1882, 1883 and 1881. The three years combined give an average of 4,162 emigrants, descended to 3,768 in 1884, despite the general misery.

If we add to the totals from the agencies the figure for passenger crews, which can be considered as belonging to a similar category, we arrive, for 1884, at a total of 6,100 individuals of both sexes and of all ages, who left for exotic regions. Now, during the same year, 31,339 foreign emigrants settled in barged in two seaports for America and the coast of Africa.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 497

Mr. Alcide Bleton, who had been instructed by the Minister of the navy and colonies, from a trade mission to Tonkin and whose report was published, has absolutely nothing since one could export or import into this country. All this that we could do, according to him, to earn a little money—people, would be to build galleys for the employees Europeans and establish laundries. At the time when Germany is threatening our doors, to have our best soldiers to get to launder the dirty linen of the that.

It is no less true that we went to the Tonkin to make a deal.

No doubt, one could have been mistaken. One could hear Tongdu, even after Lang-Son, shouting in the corridors:
"I will never lower the flag of France! The honor national above all! Even if it were necessary to sacrifice fifty thousand hom-that I will not leave Tonkin!" They said: "It is excessive, but it doesn't matter, this Tongdu is a rabbit... »

Dietz-Alonin and Bozerian spoke the same language at the Senate, and the conscript fathers, struck with admiration, re-were: "These two fellows are two skulls; they are not afraid of anything. > •.,

Suddenly, Mr. Andrieux brought to the commission due Tonkin a document which showed Tongdu and his friends sôufe a new day. Here is what the text of this paper was:

CBÉ.\TION PROJECT

d'dnk large February state compagmib in the ihdo-chih";

Article 1. – I^ President of the Council, Minister of Foreign Affairs, on behalf of the State, grants the French Society 28.

498 THE JEWISH FRANK

General Assembly of Vietnam-China. represented by Messrs. XXX, gui accept:

1" The concession for ninety-nine years of all vacant lands, forests and mines of the Gochinchine, Annam, Tonkin and Cambodia^.
having a state character.

2* The exclusive right:

To establish in Tonkin, Annam and Cambodia,
"a Bank of issue of loan and discount, enjoys-of the rights and privileges conferred on the Bank of Rindo-China by the decree of January 21, 1875;

To construct and operate the railways whose
g-QuFrench government will order the establishment;

And to create and operate transport lines

ports, canals, docks and warehouses that could be necessary;

3» The –recovery in cash and in kind, con-training in the Annamite law on property tax and the cash realization on behalf of the State of the part received in kind, in return for compensation at fix.

Following this project was a handwritten note de Ferry, signed with Ferry's initials, noting that this financial treaty was submitted to him by Tondu, Dietz-Monin, Bozerian and other deputies and senators of this shade.

These things are admitted by all and hardly shock.
not. If there were once public men who did trade of their mandate, they hid, they took infinite precautions; they turned their heads away so as not to not see the bank hills or the stock packages, that discreet go-betweens like the grave pretended, at the following a hearing, having forgotten on the corner of the desk.
Often, people did not even dare to proceed in this way; they waited
New Year's Day to send to the character's daughter, who
"I was interested in your business, a beautiful doll of my

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 499

Giroux, and the doll happened to have it on her fifty thousand francs worth of diamonds. The diamonds, around of a snuffbox or a portrait, thus covered with their |sparkling pux quite a few pretty dirty compromises.

Today, the traffic in consciences is open-ment, frankly, cynically. We carry these markets to the legal experts, asking them to regularize them, in order to avoid disputes; we shelter these turpi-studies with notaries,

Whose old sign swings with pride
One hundred years of hereditary honor.

Before discovering Tondu's scam,
Mr. Andrieux had already analyzed, in Le Matin, without indi-too violent a declaration, most of the treaties relating to the Tonkin.

The entire Ferry family takes part in the slaughter. It is Mr. Bavier-Chauffour, cousin of Jules Ferry, and who married a niece of Mr. Floquet, who, after having led without success-from a bank in Bern, is responsible for going to represent

The Radical Correspondence gave the text of the treaty passed by Mr. Bavier-Chauffour with the court of Annam.

(1) Our generals, at least, have manifested their repulsion for these vile¹DS trafficking, as evidenced by the two communi- requested by the Tonkin Commission, in the session of December 1st 1855:

General de Courcy to Minister of War

"Receive letter from the Minister of the Navy, signed Rousseau. He asks explanations about land concessions in Bavier Chauffour, in Queb-Do, and the Hong-Gay coal basin. I refuse to interfere

500 JEWISH FRANCE

Mr. Bavier-Chauffour, whose status as a relative of the minister created a privileged situation, was able to buy, under the reign»» of the treaty of -1874, and without it being possible to prevent this market, the Treaty of Hue not being ratified:

<"The entire island of Ke-Bao, for a period of one hundred years: ground, basement, etc., at a price of 60,000 dollars (at 4 fr. 05), payable August 31, 1886. Deposit, $600.

2° The Hou-Gae coal basin, in the bay of AUong, in price of 40,000 dollars, for the same period, and payable as previously. Deposit, $400.

The court of Annam will levy 1 0/0 on the net profits of the basement business, and will attach a mandarin to the exploitation- tion, as financial controller.

After a hundred years, the concessions granted to Annam returned dated, unless there is a new agreement with the heirs of Mr. Bavier-Chauffour; in any case, obligation to the court of Hue to give the preference to the latter over all others with equal proposals.

Mr. Bavier-Chauffour is also granted the right to cons- build wharves, quays, railways, etc., of ce- to der, transport and sell.

The example of the men of the government excites everyone. At the first news that a treaty has been concluded, we to these fiddlings. Everything seems to me to be cancelled^ previous king and ministers prevaricators fled or deported.

"From ConRCY."

Here is the response from the Minister of War:

To General de Courcq/.

"I share your opinions on the Bavier-Chauffour affair.

"Campenon."

This explains why General de Courcy was recalled and replaced placed by Paul Bert who went to try to raise the affairs there financial opportunism.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 501

we learn that a group of traders and financiers, in headed by Jews, the Gunzburgs, the Ulmanns, the Ernest Lévy's, met at the premises of the Trade union chambers, rue de Lancry, to throw there, like said the Gaul, "the first milestones of an organization in Tonkin. »

At first glance, with bombastic phrases on the civilization in addition, the situation therefore seems to be the same than in the 16th century.

Finding gold! That was the fixed idea of the companions of Cortez and Pizarro, and the historian, alas! tells us that they did not fail to put more than one unfortunate Indian on the grill, to force him to declare where they were these mines overflowing with fabulous riches, including thought stubbornly haunted the invaders' brains.

As soon as you take the trouble to think, you are quickly convinced that there is no analogy between both cases.

The Spaniards looked for gold, they found it, they brought back some and the galleons from the Indies allowed the kings of Spain to support a fifty-year struggle against the world. If you had any doubts about this, you you would only have to contact Mr. Duclerc, the former minister foreign affairs. Under the pretext that a galleon had once stranded in the bay of Vigo, he found a way to extract fifteen million from shareholders who have never neither Philip II's money nor their own.

The circumstances this time are completely different. There there are no mines in Tonkin and we only wage war for previous companies and will ruin all those who entrust-will give their capital to the founders.

B02 JEWISH FRANCE

Mr. Raoul Duval, speaking in October 1884, with a journalist who came to question him, had the courage to tell the truth on this point; he showed clearly the heart of the matter.

A commission of engineers was loudly appointed to regulate the concession system. The clearest product of these this, you can be sure, will be to pass in the dealers' pockets the money that naive shareholders do not will not fail to give them. As for reporting values, there are no there are no mines in the Red River Delta, in which we hold the points occupied by our troops without it being possible to get out of their line unless they risk the head (1). To find mines, you have to enter the mountainous part and very little accessible which borders the Chinese provinces.

As for gold, it only exists in appreciable quantities on
Mr. Dupuis' chimerical cards, and as for other metals, you need to have very little knowledge of the current state of the market metals to imagine that mines in Tonkin, so rich that we can suppose their veins are usefully exploitable.
Iron and copper have never been so cheap. Lead is {rfas depreciated again; so much so that the mines of England, Spain-

(1) Here are the terms in which one of Ferry's journals, VlMépendant, from Bar-le-Duc, speaks of these mines:

"Gold is so abundant that in some areas, we raises ducks only to collect in their excrement, which became precious guano, the gold they swallowed while paddling in the streams.

Does this not bring to mind the conversation between the Gascon and the Mar-Seillais?

- I dropped a match in my field the following year-boast, I found a forest there.

- Hey! You fool! What a great thing, replies the child from La Canneblère;
in Marseille, you lose a bolt of pants, eight days later, you find ready-made pants.

goe and America, located at the very center of the markets of consumptions, are doing bad business today. It is really
It is sad to think that it is for such a chimera that we exhaust
the strengths of France and its credit.

This is how we always return to the Jewish system.

"We live by what we are and what we create," he said.

Proudhon, Now the Jew is a negation, he creates nothing and he wants Tarçent, he is therefore fatally condemned, inevitably condemned to go and look for it where it is, that is to say in the purses of those who worked to acquire it.

The Castilians, by dint of audacity, of superiority in the courage, were able to storm the palace full of gold of Mon-tezuma (1); the Jews will always return, with all kinds of apparent circuits, to make the same seat, the seat of the ice cream cabinet, in which the small rentier, the ouTricr tidy, the porter tightens their savings (2).

The truth is that ten thousand French people were killed in Tonkin and spent eight hundred million to find a place

(I) The relationship between these two cupidiled struck Mr. Barboux u( we find traces of it in his plea, in the rafloire of the ^uduos of Auguste Dreyfus. The Société Générale demanded from this Dreyfus, who is colossally rich, a trifle of fifty million.
first time, Judilh Grévy, to influence the judges, had not?
uaiol to come down from his seat as President of the House to come to defend a contractor. Mr. Barboux, however, did not make res-sufficiently bring out, in my opinion, the difference which exists between the act bold adventurers who will take the money far away and the tour of sleight of hand, the simple prestidigitatation of the Jews who, with the help of lying flyers, always take the money from the nth place, in our pockets.

(i) To fully understand the new form that the "Expedicious civilizers, you have to read the articles in the New York Herald on the Congo Free State and international riociatiûn, that the

504 JEWISH FRANCE

favorable to advertising on which one could display a prosfinancial emission pectus. All locations having already served, we looked again and chose the mu-China rail.

We don't have to go back over the improbable details of this war that began without ever being said why and continued for so long without having been declared. We don't understand anything about the way things are must hide all kinds of secret infamies and that the ave-

American newspaper calls it a "vast swindle, i It's the son-in-law de Rolhschild, Lambert of Brussels, who organized this affair with a number of Jewish financiers. Only a quarter of the funds intended for this enterprise were devoted to the purpose for which they had been subscribed. Details of the frauds committed, on the soulTrances endured by the naive who let themselves be drawn there-inside, are unimaginable. So we take great care, when engaging them, to make those you hire promise in writing never to say a word about what they saw.

It is to come to the aid of this State of Congo, from where the French are excluded, where the four governors are German, English, Belgian and American, that the Republican government, which had refused to authorize a two million lottery for the poor of Paris, authorized, in November 1885, a lottery of twenty thousand lions.

The Mariotti affair also reveals a whole side of these expeditions. The daughter of this poor devil is raped by the agents of the Compa-Panama genius, she dies of shame. The desperate father addresses the directors of the Company to seek justice. No one does not deign to answer him. Brother Cousin is making dis-moral courses in the Grand Orient; Mr. de Lesseps writes reports on the virtue prizes at the Academy; democratic societies for the repression of abuses do not want to get into trouble with a financial power. The unfortunate man is reduced to firing a pistol shot on Mr. de Freycinet's car so that we can take care of this affair.

LK JI'IF IN THE HlsTOiIKE OF FliASCr.

ni" >eu\ will bring to light. Everyone is meddling in the negotiations, except those that it concerns. We disavow eî disgiacieM. Bourée, who had obtained, before the commen-cement of all hostility, more than the Treaty of Tien-Tsin gave us after so many men sacrificed, and we are charging a naval officer to negotiate on the basis that we have refused to accept. The Times publishes this singular treatise and we see that it contains precisely the opposite of what Mr. Jules Ferry claimed to find there. The inept Millot makes our soldiers ego-ger at Bac-Lé, for not having taken the most elementary precautions. Jules Ferry solemnly exclaims-mentally: "These things have to be paid for" and, after having re-claimed two hundred million, he had an Englishman conclude a treaty where there is no question of the slightest compensation and by which we leave the Pescadores Islands, the only one point that was useful to us in these parts, the only one where we die by the thousands from bullets, typhus, cholera, climate; hospitals are full of sick people and empty of medicines. Finally, to crown the building, the unfortunate Herbinger loses his head at Lang-Son and our frantic flight from the Chinese ends up taking away the French army what little prestige it had left (1). The mind is baffled when one considers that all these

0) We do not have to dwell on this distressing episode. The fact even from drunkenness it would be true that he would not attain the honor of the French army. 11 are in the German army and in the army English drunken officers, only the Minister of War is a man who does his duty, who understands the cnacuu file and who ensures that never one of these officers can be charged This mission requires composure. For me, the internal side ressalt, trisleiueut i.itercissant for the observer, it is always the

29

80) The Jewish Frank

extravagances are history, that men are actually dead by the will of such puppets, that an Assembly approved all this. Perhaps nothing gives a better idea of the endurance of poor humanity, of the way she endures everything. The wretched, who have taken away life to so many human beings, quietly enjoy their millions. Barely recovered from an initial terror which, it is true, had been strong, Jules Ferry, at the time when Ton discussed the Lang-Son affair, laughed out loud at his bench with Raynal who, it seems, amused him a lot by telling him—so much the hideous mutilations that are inflicted on our people there prisoners of war. One would not believe such cynicism if the minutes of this meeting were not there.

Mr. Clemenceau. — All debate is over between us. We do not want— We don't want to hear from you anymore, we don't want to discuss with you anymore. you the great interests of the homeland. (Applause.) We* we don't know you anymore; we don't want to know you anymore. (More applause.)

On what you have said or done up to this time, I want today lift the veil of oblivion. (Various movements.)

These are no longer ministers that I have before me, they are accused. (Applause from the right and left.)

rnensôoge of these republicans, the system of deceiving opinion, in an article from May 31, 1966, in the French Republic, it was stated: "The t-fance would have to entrust the most difficult of commands that it could make a better choice than to hand it over to the Lieutenant-Colonel Herbiuger." She added: "Those who saw him at the work know that there is in him the spirit of a Kléber. " Do you see the France having confidence in Spuller's newspaper and asking, in a war against the Allegiance that we entrust the most difficult of commaiideuieuls at Uerbmixerl

THE JUI? IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE .^07

Voices on the left and right: These gentlemen are laughing!

Mr. LB President. – Please, gentlemen, nursery silence.

Mr. Raoul Duval. – There are indignations that cannot be contained, Mr. President of the Council! (Applause–ments on the right.)

M^ Clemenceau. – Yes, those accused of high treason, on whom, if there is a principle of justice and P>ance, the hand of the law extends–will be here before long. (More applause from the left.)

Mr. Gaillabd (Vaucluse). – I see that Mr. Jules Ferry is laughing. again. (Noise.)

Ferry's fall is a page of history to look back on, and this date of March 29, which saw the collapse of man decrees. Worth stopping at.

Under the emotion caused by the news of the disaster of Lang-Son, this society, suddenly awakened, showed itself as she is like one of those old women you meet the Eve, still elegant under the makeup and who, with the cries: to the tey! rush down a staircase and reveal this that they really are, horrible to see, wrinkled everywhere like old, cadaverous apples.

The Paris we saw at that moment offers us the image saddened by what the capital would be like after a first defeat, however insignificant, in a war with Germany Magne. There is no more authority, no more government, there there is nothing left, everything is on the ground.

A single word of truth is enough to strike down this oppo–Tunisianism which had constantly lived by lies, which had erected the imposture into a system. This truth, how Did Ferry say it? Why didn't he hide this hurry–how he had hidden the previous ones? He was afraid. This sinister lawyer, who killed more men than a conqueror, siege, which was settled by courts martial in 1871, which killed

SOS iA ri'vA.\ci: jtJiVR

by Tunisia and Toiikin is obsessed, like a fan-ghost, of the fixed idea that he will one day fall alive between the hands of the people and that he will pay for all the evil he has done. received the dispatch he thought he was lost and he gave up everything.

The masses seemed, that day, to have been disarmed. by disgust. It is in these nervous hours, when everyone city movement is on the Forum, where journalists, composers, mechanics, stitchers, merchants of newspapers, chat pell-mell in the middle of the printing houses, that we see how many beautiful sides the people have retained. He has a sudden intuition of true responsibilities. workers had not read the Times, which noted that it was _ the Rothschilds who had taken charge of the Chinese loan and had thus provided weapons against us. Spontaneous- However, groups form from eleven o'clock in the morning. morning, at the corner of rue Laffitte and rue Lafayette. is indignant, there is loud discussion, people shout: "At Rothschild! at Rothschild!

"Fortunately," said the Gaul, "other people intervene and dissuade the crowd from putting this project to execution. "

Without sharing the opinion of the Jewish newspaper, it is necessary to note this almost instinctive manifestation which is like the cry of the public consciousness, a lucid moment, and that the day-nals fall asleep very quickly.

What source of patriotism still exists among this people? who only reads newspapers where it is declared that the Fatherland is just an empty word! How these proletarians commune truly in thought with our unfortunate lost soldiers thousands of leagues from France, surrounded by hordes countless, drowned in waves of barbarians! What poignant voice we ask the journalists that we are ima-

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FFLVXCE Sf»P

I don't know anything! I can still see, with its spots freckles and her gray eyes, kind and sad, a humble worker, one of those sickly beings, badly dressed, beaten by the husband, barely eating to give their share to the children. In what an anguished accent she said: "We gave away the army's treasure, what a misfortune! Do you know

The army's treasure! What did it matter to him?
to this poor woman, who had perhaps forty sous
in his filthy purse to get through the week, and our hearts sank despite everything, when she told us repeated: "Do you know if the flags were saved?"

We recognized the plebeian of the seat who, by the harsh winter, chattering teeth, queuing up as soon as four o'clock in the morning at the bakery doors, and laughing all the same in the cold wind, mocked Bismarck and cried: "How furious he must be to see Paris defending itself like this! »

Flags! What we call high society, don't worry about it was making fun of a lot. A real fever of parties and balls coincided with the news of the misfortunes that struck the Country.

Easter week, as usual, announces Le Figaro, is a true worldly revival.

Tuesday: White ball at the home of the Duchess of Maillé.

Wednesday: Ball at M^{re} de Chateaubourg and at the Countess's from Ferronays.

Thursday: Morning dance at the home of the Duchess of Treviso.

Friday: The costume ball at Mr. Gaillard's.

Gentlemen, party conductors, to your posts!

All the financiers rush to this Gaillard, who finds—(was the opportune moment to dunk a masked bull in

ril0 LA FRAXPR .TUIVR

a hotel that he had the strange thought of building on the same plan of the castle of Blois.

The Jews open their salons wide, Grflud bal at the Baroness de Hirsch's who, no doubt to celebrate the victory of the Celestials, placed a garland of laurels in her hair. The dress is of naive green satin or—green on a silly faille skirt all studded with pr.

"The Duchess of Bisaccja is in brocade dress retinue of gold and silver. Duchess of Maillé in lampas Renaissance.

((^rr-o jjenry Schneider: lovely Empire dress in white crepe with a long belt of poppy ribbons,

"M'" Salomon Goldschmidt: lilac lampas dress, the front all embroidered with fine pearls, with large lapels and purple velvet bodice.

All the Rothschilds are on deck. The ball of the Baroness Adolphe is more select, but that of the Baroness Solomon is more brilliant. The entire aristocracy parades in the hotel on rue Berryer, and the enumeration of the great seigniors and great ladies, who are having fun while we die there, holds two columns in the newspapers well informed.

Lang-Son, in fact, had been an unexpected boon for the Jews, and the Stock Exchange had regained its former glory days.

A writer whose uneven talent sometimes has glimmers superb, Mr. Octave Mirbeau, has painted a striking picture of this world who does not dream in the face of such a catastrophe than pleasure and money.

It was the Stock Exchange that had to be seen, the Stock Exchange at the spectacle of the spectacle that the heart was lifted up, of deciduous. Each time that the Krance is in danger, every time blood flows from its flanks, the tears from his eyes, there are thousands of men of prey who beat on her, who rush to collect this blood and cease tears and, hideous alchemists, transform them into gold. From the depths of which dens, which banks, which prisons, which ghettos—Had these wretches run to you, unleashed?

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 5 HOURS

Mouth twisted, arms flailing, eyes ablaze with plunder, they ran, crushed, stepped on each other, and an immense clamour rose, more barbaric than the cries of life. The steps of the large building were still black, of this teeming and grimacing crowd, which seemed to carry, on his shoulders, the enormous, eyeless monster, from which one hears—would come out, like sounds of collapse—the collapse of the fortune of France. And one wondered if France was not not there, lying in this tomb, beautiful, pale and dead, and if all these greedy hands, like octopus tentacles, did not approach her, did not land on her, and, slowly, eulacant with their thousand suckers, with their thousand suction cups, do not pour—do not pay for the hot blood from his open veins.

core, the defeat more definitive. They invented the new sin-very, as if reality wasn't already painful enough, and the rather dark mourning. It was not enough for them that, over there, our little army was perhaps lost and that perhaps not one of those who fought did not return to the country that mourns them, they did the rumor that there was a riot in Paris, that people were cutting each other's throats around the House and on the boulevards.

If they had been able to learn all of a sudden that the Fatherland was collapsingduct, that there were only ruins, that from Marseille to Lille, From Nancy to Bordeaux, France had become a field of horror.
what carnage, what cheers and what frenzied hurrahs! E\, as the prices collapsed, as our income, under the effort of these united brigands, were lost in panic, in the de-road, we saw the joy tighten on these faces, like those of these sordid Jews who, on the evening of battles, among the gun carriages of broken cannons and twisted rifles, will strip the wounded and rob the corpses.

Yes, I swear, I wished for a moment to see the cannons

SL2 JEWISH FRANCE

and the machine guns sweep away this band of jackals and bring down one by one the stones and columns of this cursed temple which stands up impudently, like a perpetual insult and a trahison to the Fatherland.

And meanwhile, while the men of pleasure rush to pleasure without pity and that the men of the meadow are punished to shameful prey, our heroic little soldiers, without a second thought.
without hope, perhaps awaiting death in these bristling defiles-of ferocious enemies; and perhaps their mutilated corpses, the face facing the distant country, they litter the rice fields and the stinking swamps, their testicles in their teeth I

In the midst of all these shames, only the glolaughing and pure figure of Admiral Courbet. This stoic who, slave to duty, sacrifices his life to obey orders of men whom he deeply despises, seems like the incarnation of military France; this great Christian who wears around his neck, like the last of his sailors, the medal blessed by the Holy Virgin, appears as the living antithesis of the persecuting and fiddling Freemason person-unified in Ferry. This France, for which he died, the heroic sailor still serves her beyond the grave, defunctus adhuc loquitur. These letters, where such contempt overflows for the Republicans in power, these letters which are like so many breaths on those infamous cheeks, revived-a last spark in the souls, and, when the who still dare to admit to being opportunists.

Jewry only slightly regretted the opportunity-nism, she had gotten all she could out of it.

The agreements with the railway companies, (pie the Jew Raynal had made the vote, had pledged France among the Jews. The new law replaced the Jews in the State, carved out for them an immense economic fiefdom in the open ground French, made our masters, no longer in fact, but thanks to an authentic title (1).

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 513

What bribes there were, what shameful innuendos, of unmentionable underbelly in these treaties with the paths of iron, no one can say.

From this point of view, the discussion which took place at the Chamber, July 3, 1883, about a fantastic path of Senegalese iron, will still be a valuable document for the historians who want to really see, outside of any party declamation, the functioning of the Republic Jewish in France.

First, we take a few million from the country under pretext to build a railway in the middle of the sands, in a region periodically ravaged by fever
YELLOW.

After a while, sixteen kilometers were built—and spent sixteen million, the government admits, twenty-seven million, says Mr. Blancsubé, who must be competent since we wanted to make him a minister of colonies.

Is it sixteen million? Is it twenty-seven million? Per-

(1) The House was so determined to deprive the country of all its control rights, that she refused to accept an amendment which simply asked that the mechanics, responsible for driving the military trains in case of war, even if they were French!

Not a single MP thought of taking advantage of the opportunity to impose on the... Companies organizing a special service to establish in case of mobilization. After so many billions spent on the budget of the war, it seems unimaginable that nothing was planned in the hypothesis of a mobilization; however, it is so. The employees of the large companies tried to draw the minister's attention to

:i9.

?>li TA FRANCR .TI?1VR

sonne doesn't know anything about it. The sixteen kilometers, which return SL a million one by one, the rails being probably Are they even made of gold? We don't know at all. I) it is very possible that this railway will be like of the Memphis to Pacific Railroad, for which the shareholders paid enormous sums, on the return—even from which some dividends were distributed and which never existed. What is certain is that three governors of Senegal have successively boosted their resign rather than associate himself with this theft.

Someone other than Ferry would have been content with this pretty result, but, with his usual impudence, the president of the con—he told his close friends that he felt it was important to extract a few more million. Charles Ferry, in the discussion, gave of his person and demanded the vote, "Without doubt there "there is some leakage," says Maurice Rouvier in his beautiful language, "But where aren't there any in our time? We voted...

By a truly unheard-of misfortune, he arrived at the accounting documents, with which the government hoped to respond to accusations of embezzlement, the same accident as in the government accounting documents National Defense Administration; they disappeared into a fire at the very moment they were no longer necessary. "There are truly astonishing coincidences—nants I a cried the i\|a(m, recounting this lamentable event—nement.

The redemption is just and Jules Ferry (had to cruelly suffer upon learning of this disaster.

Have you visited Thiers? Nothing is as picturesque as this small town buried at the bottom of such a deep valley that, from the railway viaduct, one can barely distinguish the cnhutes I cutlers, who crowd to the edges of the Darolle. All around are huge black rocks, debris of volcanic revolutions, rise up and seem to touch the sky. Sometimes, during the summer, you can see up high like a yellow carpet that almost blends in with the sky of the firma—ment. It's wheat that grows there.

THE JURF n.VNS t/history of FRANCE 515

How was this wheat sown on these ridged blocks? liveliness that seem inaccessible? How are we going to achieve it? harvest? It's a mystery. The heart is moved, however in front of this effort of man, who knew how to use this scrap digs it up to try to stick some bread back on it. The eye will workers from below who, from morning to night, make small knives that we pay a ridiculous price for, for these peasants from above who risk their lives to obtain a sheaf of wheat.

These are the ones, and the miners who vegetate at the bottom of the airless galleries, and the poor ploughmen of Ceiiainea countries that feed on porridge, which, through taxes, pay all this money which benefits the Ferrys and the Lévy-Crémieu, while the left claps its hands, without knowing exactly whether it is sixteen or twenty-seven million.

The Jew costs us dearly! It is the thought which, I believe, will come to Ctiacuan after seeing me read.

We have now arrived, in fact, at the end of this picture, incom- necessarily complete but accurate, we think, in its lines essential, which shows the role of the Jew in France.

Those who have followed us through so many years and so many events have already, without a doubt, formulated the conclusion! sion which is suitable and which is summarized in this axiom: <(When the Jew rises, France falls; when the Jew decline, France is molding.

5t6 JEWISH FRANCE

Until the 14th century, as Mr. Albert Kohn recognizes, There are 800,000 Jews in France, they do not pay any service, and, through intrigue and attrition, force the pro- owners of the land to chase them away. From this time on, the prosperity of France takes on a magnificent development They returned behind Freemasonry in 1790, and become the absolute masters of a country they have detached little by little, with prodigious cunning, of all the tra- conditions that made its greatness and strength.

The striking aspect of this situation is the helplessness absolute authority of the Jew to do anything with a power that he conquered with undeniable skill over beings easy to deceive with words. With the Semite, everything starts from Stock market, everything comes back to the stock market, all action is summed up in a speculation. ,

"Found financial companies!" This is the first Christ! Persecute those who worship him!" This is the second maxim.

It is clear that such a design, applied to a large Christian state, can only lead to the situation where we are, to this chaos that the Talmud (tractate Hagguiah) calls the Tohoii-va-hohou

Would our unfortunate country have a chance of escaping to this collapse?

Yes, no doubt, if the oppressed would agree to react against the Jew who is their common enemy (1).

(1) Oa will certainly not accuse Sébastien Mercier of being a representative—many retrograde ideas. From the Directory, however, this writer to the mind so curious, to the insights sometimes so iivtp.« avijt [ir'Wn qi.e le Semitise would become a dani^er \nn\v rKuru»-^; who would be obliged

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 517

Who is the current regime bearing the brunt of? the revolutionary worker and the Christian conservative. One is affected in his vital interests; the other is wounded in his most cherished beliefs.

For the worker, the social revolution is a necessity to sustain a fierce struggle to defend itself. The chapter consacred to the Jews, in the year two thousand four hundred and forty. Dream if he ever was, has the character of a true prophecy. *

"The worn-out politicians," writes Mercier, "had not been able to foresee the unfortunate consequences that the sudden explosion of a population could have* numerous and inflexible in his opinions whose ideas, conlrastaul strongly with those of other peoples, became cruel and fanatical—of their law and the pompous promises that dated back to the origin of the world, because the earth belonged to them and the other peoples were in their eyes only usurpers.

"The Jews, regarding themselves as a people prior to the Christians and created to subjugate them, gathered under a leader to whom they attri—suddenly drank all the marvelous made to shake the imagina—tions and arrange them at the largest revolutions and the pins ex—extraordinary.

t He then composed, in Europe, a scattered multitude which could rise to twelve million individuals, and the Jews spread throughout

America's leading cities running or sending help, the first
The first invasion was violent. Political invigilance had to be repaired.
of previous centuries and we needed wisdom, cons-strength and firmness to break down this ardent fanaticism, to to calm this dangerous fermentation and reduce the Jews as formerly to earn their living in absolute tranquility.

"They had worked in all centuries and in all moments with the thirst of greed and the ardor that carelessness gives for any other object, always greedy, always happy in speculations low or self-interested, eternally fattening their purses. Their enormous riches had given them a fanatical audacity and!
title of King of the Jews, given to an ambitious man, had caused political storm whose shocks did not leave us alone worry. We didn't want to shed a lot of blood, and this people of his city were ready to renew all the horrors qaulfre his story and of which he was the agent and the victim.

r>tS THE JEWISH FRANCR

a})3o1ue. Convinced now that there is nothing beyond the land, bending under the weight of an exploitation that the exi-agencies of capital make it more and more harsh, it looks at itself like a disinherited person of life; he wants to possess the tools industrialist, like the peasant, before 89, wanted to possess the land, he demands socialization, expropriation for his benefit work tools.

All the reasoning that one can oppose to these claims, which have force at their service, can be excellent, but unfortunately offer only a very limited value philosophical and literary.

Basically, in these questions, Good and Evil have only one meaning of convention. In 1792, many brave people owned fields, woods, houses which had nothing feudal about them, which came to them most legitimately-ment of the world by inheritance, which were the fruit of savinggene of five or six generations, who belonged to them same title as my watch belongs to me. They guillotined the owners and the property was taken. As early as 1817 or 1818, when the Restoration had passed over it, the spoliation was an established fact; the former owners sometimes greeted the passage those who had robbed them. Today conservatives, Christians enjoy without any remorse from the result of their grandfathers' theft, and sometimes make a very profitable use. A gentleman, who would own five one hundred thousand pounds of land rent, from the purchase of National Goods, would be infinitely better received, in the Faubourg Saint-Germain, that a gentleman whose raëi1l belonging to a spotless family, would have only twenty-five hundred times in his pocket.

It is therefore a question of knowing not so much whether the workers have reason to propose this IMT, than to see if they have a chance to achieve it under current conditions. I am convinced, for their part, that they will not succeed; they will put very easily take control of Paris, but they will not be able to seize of France.

THE JEW IN HISTORY PK FOWCE RIO

The difficulties that will stop the workers are not in themselves very considerable, but they will be sufficient to make their business fail.

In 1792, the peasants were on the ground; they did not that to take possession of it in a definitive manner, and like wheat, wine, fodder are productions of first necessity, they only had to continue what they previously did by simply becoming farmers owners.

The workers are also in the factory. They count, from now on, among them quite intelligent men, said skilled foremen to operate everything, from so that the boss's disappearance is not noticed not even. I'm sure they just have to want it, given their current organization, to seize All.

Unfortunately for them, a revolution like that there will stop all the factories, and in the meantime, the bourgeoisie will rally, find a general who will drown in blood the proletarian revolt.

If the French bourgeoisie does not do this, Germany will do it for ^Ue, will seize this opportunity to intervene and will be supported by the terrified bourgeoisie.

This goal, which the workers pursue, and which they do not have wrong to pursue their point of view, could he not pat be reached peacefully? Why a Christian prince, a leader with firm and broad conceptions who, instead of seeing

520 THE JEWISH FRANCISCO

questions through commonplaces, would look at them with the resources thus created, would it not allow the workers to experiment with their theories on exploitation collective and direct from factories and establishments industrialists? Most owners would lend themselves very willingly to this amicable expropriation, as soon as they would be adequately compensated. One could judge, by the results, advantages and disadvantages that pre-fer, with their different constitution, the unions purely secular workers, and the unions formed on the model of the Catholic Workers' Circles.

In such matters it is important not to be under any illusions- sion, and to predict what one can count on.

Jews own half of the circulating capital on the land, or the fortune of France, which pays a budget of nearly four billion (1), can be estimated at one hundred and five-

(1) The ordinary budget for 1886 is three billion thirty million six hundred and twelve thousand three hundred and eighty-eight francs. The extraordinary budget is one hundred and sixty-nine million eight hundred eight thousand two hundred francs. The compensation of five billion paid to Germany is not the cause of this insane increase, as Republicans enjoy making the naive believe it, since the The 1876 budget was two billion five hundred and sixty-nine thousand lions in which 200 million were included for depreciation. The squandering and embezzlement of those who govern us alone explain the gap between the 1876 budget and the current budget. "For the seven years you have been in power," one MP said. Republican, Mr. Amagat, to Gambetta's henchmen. You have de- thought more than seventeen billion, you have increased the public debt of more than eight billion. Opportunistic squandering has been more disastrous for France than the war of 1870.

The deputies have managed to no longer discuss this formidable budget. ble. We vote five or six hundred million in an hour, in the last- last fortnight of raun(''p, in front of bins, with a hundred a hundred billion (i), of which the Jews own well four-vinirls billion. I estimate, however, that with the me-obligatory operations, with the ease of distorting the va-their (2), an operation like that would not produce immediately more than ten to fifteen billion and I accept the number ten as a minimum.

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE 12\

representatives at most in the room. We don't even have time provisional elevenths, to allocate a billion to the government to do what he wants. The right to control the tax, which existed at the origins of the monarchy, ceased even to be exercised.

All these words: floating debt, consolidated debt are fiction. pure, prestige similar to that of the magicians of old. The government, being right in the Jewish system, which consists of take the money earned by the worker to support him to hold the paper, seized the 2,300,000,000 francs deposited at the Savings Bank and replaced them with annuity securities which, in case of panic, would have no more value than the assignats* revolutionaries.

Mr. Leroy-Beaulieu showed, in V French Economist, that the amounts due from the State, either immediately or in the very short term maturity, amounted to more than three billion francs, and that the encash that he could have available to respond to these enormous requirements barely exceeded one hundred and fifty million francs.

In other words, the government finds itself in the situation of a trader who would have assets of 150,000 francs and liabilities of 3,000,000 francs.

It is clear that at the slightest serious alert, it means bankruptcy. forced.

(1) A deputy, Doctor Vacher, estimated this fortune at two hundred sixty billion, Mr. de Foville, head of the statistics office at the Ministry of Finance, stops at two hundred and fifty billion; but these are purely theoretical figures.

(2) It would be a complete mistake, however, to believe that the for-L-rael's tune is exclusively on paper. The Jew, absolute king, had France, not only exercises the sovereign right to issue shares which are genuine banknotes, with this exception almost that they are not guaranteed by anything; he still mints money, he can send ingots to the Mint to be struck and profited of the benefit. It is not a privilege, they say, and everyone can

r)^2 JEWISH FRANCE

With five or six billion in cash (1), we expropriate—would certainly have enough factories, without harming anyone again, to allow workers to experience—to ly their social doctrines in conditions of all the more better than any violent revolution that has ever taken place no unemployment would occur.

All this, I do not fear to insist on this point, accompaniess—would accomplish without jolts, without outpouring of sanctity, by sim—

to do the same; Mr. de Ureda responded vehemently to that objection: "Yes, all those who have ingots in abundance, but gold and silver materials and cash being concentrated in the hands of the Jews to such a degree that the word monopoly would have no nothing exaggerated; it follows that they are the ones who have monopolized up of the most lucrative sovereign rights.

This cash monopoly is, in reality, the real strength of the Jews; it is because Mr. de Rothschild has, not by credit, but in an effective manner, of the major part of the gold in circulation in France, that he can impose his will on the government.

(1) The disorder was so great, the theft so general during the Revolution that it has always been impossible to know what it was, at the fair, the value of national property. In his report of 25 germinal year III, in the name of the committees of Public Safety, of legislation and of finances, Johannot declares that these assets constitute a fortune effective figure of sixteen billion. Louis Blanc adopted this figure in his History of the Revolution. Lavoisier estimates these goods at two billion eight hundred million. Cambon gives a total of 1,840,740,159 pounds,

To this figure we must add the property confiscated from emigrants and the condemned to whom Koland, .Tohannot. Gnmbon attribute success—initially a value of five billion, then nine billion. Pans I9 table that he presented, on this subject, in the year IV, to the Council of Five Cents, Eschassériaux gives a total of ciuqbillions in melal value—“lique.

In his learned work. The Finances of the Old Regime and of Revolution, Mr. René Stourm pronounces himself in favor of the figure of five thousand-1.5 liards, which seems a little weak to me and which, according to him, breaks down as follows: three billion for the assets of the Clergy and the Couroime, two and a half billion for the assets of emigrants and condemned.

THE .TUF OANS the hIRTOTRK DK FnVNCB 523

one of those crises from which foreigners take advantage. The administration Confiscated Jewish Property would operate as it didtioned the administration of National Property^ and I do not see not sure how we would attack the legitimacy of this act since there is no inclination of the materials, which we put between the weeks of youth, does not risk a blame against the confiscations revolutionaries.

The advantage itself, if we were to compare, would be for the transfer of ownership that we propose. No one will seriously contest, in fact, that Jewish wealth essentially parasitic and usurious, it is not the fruit of the saved labor of countless generations, but the result of speculation and do); it is not created by work, but extracted, with marvelous skill—'euse, beyond the pocket of real workers, p;irdes societies financial companies that enriched their founders by ruining them their shareholders.

Do we not see, moreover, every day, the days—Jewish people and at the same time people who are proclaimed willingly free from all pecuniary traffic, like Mr. Prisson, declare themselves in favor of the confiscation of the assets of these con"gregations in which each member has one in the other for his part five hundred francs per year? What does the abbey of Vaux de Gernay, which is the property of M'''' de Rothschild, would it be more respectable than an abbey where religions? raise poor orphans (1)?

(1) The franpa-maçoQf) and jqifs newspapers warmly applauded the vote of the House of December 1884, which "placed under a personal trust the property of the relatives tions; they declared that this was only a route to» li

^^

' 524 JEWISH FRANCE ^^ ^ ^' ^^_^^

The causes, which will perhaps prevent this operation from ^ 1;:., public safety which would replace France, for two or three ' a hundred years ago, under normal living conditions, are \ of more than one kind.

It must be noted, first of all, that at the same time as a ^ decrease in physical strength, there is in Finance a dimi- f "l nution of intellectual strength, an obvious weakening faculties, like a beginning of softening of the brain common to the working classes as well as to the high classes.

The workers, accustomed to the artificial atmosphere of novels 1 that we tell them, victims of words, accustomed to unable to see reality, to grasp the relationships of ideas together, to have an overview.

The Jew, moreover, is very clever; to destroy the old society which rejected him, he placed himself in the sheet metal of democratic action. The Karl Marxes, the Lassalles, the main Nihilists, all the leaders of the Revolution cosmopolitan are Jews. In this way, the Jew imprints on the movement in the direction he wants. (We saw it clearly under the Municipality where not a single property has been touched Jewish).

If a speaker, in a public meeting, indicated the solution that I have just presented, and which is excellent, a Jew would immediately divert attention, which would show up untimely-co-taxation; they therefore admit that it was enough to be the strongest to not respect the principle of property. Under these conditions, the The system I propose has nothing that could shock received ideas; it has the advantage of being fairer and more profitable for the

""'^"- C^^ ^^Jc^ ^^-ty-^ - ^*^^^^ -'^^ - ^

'- ^i; 0X.^ , ,J^ ^>^t^--^^ -^~V:^^ /'^^■/'■^

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE ^23

pestively on Mr. de Rothschild, recounting that he met countered a Capuchin who walked barefoot and who looked defeated by someone who is fasting. Walking barefoot! Fasting! What a crime! this poor people would cry out without thinking that it doesn't bother him at all and he won't be richer when he will have prevented this Capuchin from walking barefoot and ';!To fast.

^^ However sad you may be about decadence

c^ mental of this people, who allow themselves to be fooled by those . \^ who enrich themselves at his expense, we must take this into account

\ fact that the union, which has always been the strength of Jewry.

- serves wonderfully in this circumstance. The Jews

\ from below are supported by those from above and the Jews from below

""^ theirs who lead the insurrections,

It must be added that members of the upper classes do not have ^ hardly a clearer vision of the situation than the prolesilent. In their country, the Christian resigned to persecution in which he finds an opportunity of merit with God, takes too much precedence over the citizen, who, born in a country that his fathers have cleared, expanded, civilized, intends to defend its 1 rights and does not allow anyone to treat him as a pariah; they do not do not realize this, that the one who goes to look for the persecution in China or Japan is a hero, while %v' whoever patiently endures it at home is a coward.
- - No one protested when the Jew Stern said, at the Circle of the rue Royale, this word that the newspapers quote complacently-at least once a month: "In ten years,
I don't know how a Christian will live.
Among the representatives of the nobility who made up ^"■^ this circle before his misfortunes, he did not find himself a man brave enough to take up this insolence, to

5^6 THE JEWISH PHANCE

say: "But finally, Jew, why then do Christians not Would they not eat in their own country?

These obstacles are considerable, but they are not insurmountable. It may arise, from the ranks of the people, a man of French origin, who has the magnificent ambition to attach his name to the peaceful solution of this problem of the proletariat, which has already cost so much blood unnecessarily plebeians and who will cost them even more if they follow another way.

There may also be an officer who is brave, deeply struck by the degradation into which his country and who risks his "life to raise it up.

In the current situation, in the presence of a govern-despised by all and cracking on all sides, five one hundred determined men in the suburbs and a regiment surrounding Jewish banks would be enough to achieve the greatest fruitful revolution of modern times.

The whole thing would be over before the end of the day and, when we Would see the posters announcing that the operations of the Fund Jewish goods will begin in a few days, all the world would embrace in the streets.

Thus the beautiful words of Peter the Great would be fulfilled.

etiani invilis ipsis, divitiæJitdea'UDi

BOOK THREE

GIMBETTl AND HIS COURT

The dericatuM Toili reanaai..

A Jewish Emperor. – Origins. – The Gamberlé Family. – Youth.

– Morny's Obsessive. – Barbey d'Aurevilly and Voiture. – The journey to the Orient. – The Qualre-September and the Coraniune. – THE National Defense accounts. – The new layer*. – The Jewish claim. – Our illusions. – The Augustiani. – Henri RocheforU – The aiUi-gambettlisle campaign. – The meeting of Saint-Biaise Street. – The Opposite Fortune. – The Situation criticism of Gambetta. – The Rous in exile with Daudet. – Death.

– A word from a woman of the people. – The brain of a tenor. – The Gambetta's vocabulary. – The hatred of intellectuals. – The me- taken from the bumauilé. – A coronation at the Grand-OrientU

AMONG so many portraits, is there a single one that gives a complete idea of Ihomine whose incomprehension-possible and extraordinary fortune will be a perpetual subject of astonishment for the story? I don't think so. Is it so that this book requires penetrating analysis and subtle of a Carlyle or a Taine? Certainly not. Despite his tricks and his subtleties, this being is too coarse for not be relatively easy to grasp. It is only necessary see the two elements of which it is composed: it is a Jew and he is an Emperor; a modernized, crusading Jew and mixed as you like, an Empe- temperament reur dii Twist the most vile and the lowest, I grant you, but in the end it's both.

When Rome conquered the world, the world conquered Rome, Rome successively had Spanish Emperors and African Emperors; it had Gallic Emperors who ate an ox for their supper, and Emperors Thracians who struck down the leaders of cohorts that displeased. She had a Syrian Emperor, the sixteen-year-old Heliogabalus, who, constantly dressed in woman, her arms laden with bracelets, presided, in her long trailing Phoenician dress, at the wedding of the Black Stone with the Moon. Although the son of Soemias was for a moment this Emperor. He is not a demoted Caesar precisely, it is a forgotten Caesar who had missed entrance and which took its turn in the chance of an inter-reign.

30

t>'.H) L\ FRANCR JUIVI'J

To understand this well, we must imagine a way of Barabbas, Barabbas pardoned, became prefect of the Praetorium one fine morning, in the middle of a fight, and making himself to award the purple by dint of gift of the gab.

This sort of late reappearance of a distant type is curious and worth examining the evolution of the character.

Lightning does not rumble around this cradle on the day of birth, but the origin is interesting. Gambetta does not is not born of foreign parents, because, after all, being foreign.- to live in a country is to have a homeland somewhere; it has for fairground generators. Following the movement peoples by the French Revolution, certain Jews, as well as we have explained, began to travel around Europe, looking here and there for a place to settle. A Württemberg Jew, A. Gamberléj settled in Genoa at the time of the continental blockade- tal, traded in coffee and smuggling, married a Jewish woman from the country whose parents had been hanged and Italian- then changed his name, calling himself Gambetta (1). The son or the grandson came to France, settled in Cahors, and we gave the great man who never had absolutely nothing of French, not even the style.

Is he Hebefi, Genoese, Illyrian, Dalmafi,

Italian, Bohemian, Hellenic or Prussian?

Where does he come from? Between us, he himself doesn't know.

(1) See on this subject a strange volume which we have already spoken about, Judaism in France, published in Stultgard in 1872, almost completely untraceable, the Jews having made all the copies disappear, which contains very curious information on the movement Jewish in France, and particularly on the role played by Mf Bauer.

The AtxUiie^ lyruéliies have preserved for us a pretty word from the prince of

So sang the amiable rhymers of the Hundred Sonnets a par a lilac blackbird." He himself didn't even know the date exact date of his birth. At the head of the graduate thesis of this licentious, thesis relating to mortgages, we read: • The act public on the following matters will be supported on Monday 19 January 1860, at two o'clock, by Mr. Léon Gambetta, born in Cahors (Lot), April 11, 1838. » However, the birth certificate which It was published that Léon-Michel Gambetta was born on April 3, 1838, at eight o'clock in the morning.

In Paris, whatever was said, the future dictator did not no more effective than many mediocre people who are agitated licaucoup without anyone looking at them. He did not exercise on his contemporaries the serious influence that very young people have exercised some men. Member of a small group, which made part Hebrard, Dépret and some others, and who meet-knows every week at Brébant, he tired his friends, one of them told me, of his deafening din, that he did not strike with his eloquence. "Shut up, you loudmouth!"
was the usual word used with him, which does not imply, it will be admitted, any kind of prestige among the one who was thus called to order.

These are the pieces of a cabinet of Brébant where the cenacle had arranged to meet for the occasion, that Gam-Betta saw this convoy of the Duke of Morny pass by, which takes place in the Nahab as a parade of the imperial world. No one

Bismarck about Gambetta. "I am surprised," said the Cham-elier
h his passage in Berlin in 1880, that the Jews of the Municipal Council of Berlin have not yet been named honorary citizen of Berlin Semite Gambetta; it is perhaps out of consideration for Marshal de Moltke and for me; but they are mistaken, the Semite Gambetta nou« would use as much as coucilo>eu d'houiienr. h

532 JEWISH FRANCE

suspected for sure that the screamer would occupy the palace
the great lord who, at least, hid, under graces of patrician, a less complete absence of moral sense, certainly, than that of his successor; no one foresaw that, seventeen years later, I, the noisy declaimer of the time would have a funeral almost as solemn as those of the dandy statesman, who had harnessed himself to the shining chariot of his fortune the politics of love and the love of policy.

Perhaps the vision of the Palais-Bourbon already haunted

Morny's obsession with people who were young people in 1852 was very lively, and Alphonse Daudet has well translates this impression. Henchman, man of the world, stockbroker, art connoisseur, this voluptuous unscrupulous killer was an ideal for many of men of this generation closed to any superior.

Each took from this complex role what he could bear. ter and played it with the means at his disposal.

The man of prey was embodied in Raoul Rigault who, most likely, when he spent his evening at the Délassements, the day the street battle began, pen-knows at the Morny of the Opéra-Comique.

There is a reminiscence and like a charge of Morny-Patrons in Proust organizing lotteries and makeup-ignoring works of art that appear in a portrait by Manet, worthy in every way of the original, strapped in an indescribable frock coat.

The finance man is Gambetta. Be convinced. that in organizing the Tunisia affair, he was very proud of plagiarize Mexico and that he was very happy then to pose in front of his gallery of freedmen for the maker without scruples.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 533

Those days were still far away. At Gambetta's, lawyer, we sees no appreciation for his profession, no love of good reputation acquired through merit and hard work vail.

Barbey d'Aurevilly charges trainee lawyer with trial press. The cause was piquant, the case good for a beginner. Gambetta thanks, then disappears, does not prepare nothing, comes to find Barbey the clever one of the audience for him ask what to say and finally, to amazement deep of the court, he compares the author of the Priest married... to Car.

"You pleaded like a cab, sir," he said to him. d'Aurevilly with that accent we know him for.

Compare Barbey d'Aurevilly to Voiture! This thought could only come to the inventor of fiery steeds but do you not discover there a manifestation moreover of this nature so anti-artistic and so anti-French, so delicate and so fine in everything that concerns questions of interest, so obtuse and so resistant to all nuances intellectuals? This ludicrous comparison must have come quite naturally to the spirit of this evil learned like him came the inappropriate epithet, the metaphor which makes you laugh and the prudhommesque phrase where all the words scream to be together.

The future dictator's means of existence was, in this time, to serve as a company man – of bad company of course – to a kind of very active mercantile-actively involved, as Crémieux's secretary, in all the Jewish affairs. He was a guy again, this Lau-

^4 JEWISH FRANCE

laugh, and Jules Vallès was, up to a certain point, right to write: u This little man, without a chin, without lips, with the head of a weasel and also of a linnet, is one of the heads strongest of his time, the Machiavelli of his time, – a grumpy, blabbering, searching, lively Machiavelli, then – that he comes after Tortillard, Jean Hiroux, Calchas and Game, »

It was always the Orient that this Semitic world aimed for. was to make such handsome profits there. Laurier went to feel the field with Gambetta in Constantinople, passing through Vienna to consult with the Jews of Austria. On the way he explained to his companion what was being prepared, introduced him to Israel's dream of a government French-Masonic and financial, which would make France sweat all the gold of his savings, the opera of a few superstitions honestly republican" that he could still have, showed life as Vautrin had shown it to Rastignac, in the Vauquers boarding house; on his return, he placed his disciple near Crémieux. Near the old man, Gambetta found himself in full kitchen of the Temple of Solomon, in the heart of the Grand Orient, in . full 4^Israelite Union. i)e that day, he was famous. The Jewish press exaggerates the merit of the speech at the Baudin trial, made his thing of the success of the orator.

Well warned, remaining in a semi-reserve, Gambetta was the man for the job when the war broke out 1870, the Jewish war, To see him leave for the province, in "in the company of his inseparable Laurier, he seems to see in action a fable by Berakhia Hanack: The lynx

'^^,0^^ This debauchery of five has been recounted many times
'/ month, this eluding orgy, this regulated cutting of the

û f mo

<^î.^^^^' ^^Z^ ^^i^^ ^ J>j:i'2^jH,.^i^

A , y û. r ? '^ . .J a. J^^

GAMBRI^TA AND HIS COURT 5^3

France by all cosmopolitans, from SpuUer to Garibaldi, from Bordone to Steenackers.

Achilles, at the court of Lycomedes, betrays himself by rushing on the sword hidden under a pile of fabrics and jewels;
the son of a Jew, if any doubt had remained, would have quickly revealed upon his arrival in Tours. Putting aside all swords loyal and shining in the sun, he cried: where is the forest? where is the stock market hit?

The loan was the main thing, the war was only one-secondary question; she had the advantage only of made the Fiançais to make room; she made some, and The Commune did even more.

We were talking about Gambetta's role during the Commune, one day at Victor Hugo's.

– Ah! replied the poet, I received in Brussels a very significant letter from him on this, he was absolutely agree with Thiers.

– How? they asked him.

– Yes, he added, the Commune was made by those who took advantage of it.

He was about to say more when little Lockroy turned away quickly the conversation with some nonsense.

Only the future will know the more or less considerable played in the Commune by Gambetta, represented by Ranc, the oblique Jacobin who slipped away as soon as the affair was engaged. Historians of the future will have on those of the past this advantage, which we give them, from now on, the broad outlines of all the maneuvers of that time and Quiet in San Sebastian, and feeling well what was in question, Gambetta refrained from saying a word in a one way or another.

516 JEWISH FRANCE

Sulla was calmly offering a sacrifice to Fortune when— that suddenly loud cries resounded around the temple. It's nothing, he said to those around him, it's thirty a thousand Marianists being slaughtered. He too is sheltered in the Temple of Fortune, Gambetta showed the same impassiveness bility before and during the May days, with this difference— that it was not his enemies who were being slaughtered, but his friends, his voters, these illusionary plebeians who, in good faith, had believed in him. Not very brave by nature, he is said to have had a crisis upon leaving Spanish soil. His fate, indeed, was in the hands of the majority; it seemed truly— It would be foolish to hope that this majority would not ask no accounts to a man who, without any mandate, e— was constituted the master of France.

This insane hope, however, came true. Never did the acts of the government of National Defense were not discussed. The most improbable stories were accepted that Gambetta liked to tell; the legend in particular accounting documents that we would have chosen the time of March 18 to send to Paris, and who would have were destroyed in the fire at the Ministry of Finance; the account of the second fire, on the railway, this one, of other— three pieces that were also hastened to be sent to Paris. ratified the payment of a sum of 75,138,978 francs for for which no justification was provided, absolutely none. We didn't even think of saying: c(There are people who paid and others who received, that they provided— feels like a duplicate of their accounting documents.

This abandonment, by the majority, of the interests of France and of the rights of justice, would seem improbable, if the report of the Court of Auditors (Ju 31 August 1876 was not there to demonstrate that this is history.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT R37

The fire at the Ministry of Finance, this report says, detained documents relating to payments made in Tours.

Those relating to payments made in Bordeaux had to, on execution of the government decree of April 25 <871, èln—found.

Both payments included, one to the treasurer's account-general paymaster of the Rhône, the other to the account of the treasurer-payer general of Seine-Inférieure, and both relating to advances for the service of the Armaments Commission, remained destitute of justification.

As for the payment of two million charged to Chapter XVI from the extraordinary budget of the Ministry of the Interior {execution artillery batteries in the departments), and resulting from a order issued in the name of the President of the Armaments Commission, on the central paymaster's cash register, for the price of thirty bat-artillery shells purchased in America on behalf of the departments, this payment was not justified.

Only one member of the right, Mr. de Lorgeril, seems to have protested with indignation against this absence of any supporting documents that concealed shameless thefts; he was replied, laughing out loud: *. (that these pieces had without were probably included in a convoy of three burning wagons between Bordeaux and Versailles. >»

The Ferrand markets were more scandalous, if that. possible. Here again it is necessary to cite the report of the Court of accounts.

It was paid to Ferrand, at the end of the financial year 1870, in various mandates, 1,005,039 fr. 50 by the treasurer-payer of Ille-et-Vilaine; by proxy, 96,897 francs and by the treasurer-payer of Maine-et-Loire, 400,000 francs.

No justification of employment was produced in the accounts for this^j fiitrépiites sums.

•*)3S LA FRANCR .îUIVR

The same applies to various advances amounting to 1,913,400 francs issued by three general treasurers to agents beyond the Ferrand house.

Memoranda, a number of markets have been attached to support for expenses amounting to 4,590,480 francs i% centimes, paid directly by three general treasurers-paymasters, to suppliers or contractors.

But if these justifications, certified by Mr. Ferrarid, were such as to establish that the supplies had been delivered to him, they could not, to any degree, provide proof that the state, which had borne the expense, had been put in regular possession Gambetta's complicity with Ferrand was flagrant. Protector of Ferrand, who had already gone bankrupt, commanded-edited by Ferrand for the French Republic, host of Ferrand to Lesnavar, even warning of his next arrest this wretch who had robbed dying France-health, Gambetta was not even worried.

From this time on, Gambetta was relatively tranquil. No doubt, he still had what one could call venettes, but that came from his character essentially coward. On May 24, Léon Renault, a business gambler like he (1), worthy of being a Jew, if he is not, betrays the government-which he served without believing in it, for the benefit of the government-that he fought with the certainty that he would triumph,

(1) We have seen the role played by Father Leon Ben«ult in the affairs Since then, we find him as administrator of a company went bankrupt: Lt grande Compagnie trassuranres. Mr. Beaugé, the k^yudic, reveals the most serious irregularities in management: an operation of four million which does not appear on the books, active dividends 00l were dislrilmés. "The bankruptcy," concludes the s^udic, "is due to the iuob-

Gambetta and his court

and kept Gambetta informed of everything. On May 16, he hesitated a minute and was quickly reassured as soon as he saw that all the ener-The company's saviors' strategy was to hinder the sale of the Petit Journal in the departments. We gave penknife blows instead of saber blows, according to the expression of Admiral de Gueydon. We were going to see what The Jew is capable of audacity as soon as he has stopped trembling.

We have already shown how, following the events-ments of 1870, a whole flood of adventurers had rushed to the France. A new world was born, or rather, had grown. like a harmful mushroom on the ground deep stirred. Gambetta saw this boiling manure and the successive layers which rose above it, it continued that something could be done with this and pronounced in Grenoble, in 1872, this famous harangue on the new new layers, which is the only speech of his where there is a idea, the only one that corresponds to a true situation.

gcrvalion of the statutU and the combinations iuveDtéeâ by several perâouues to enrich themselves at the expense of society.

How can one explain that a government, which bore this title of government of the Christian Order, would have left such a personage to the head of the Police Prefecture after May 2nd? How did the idea did it not come to the politicians, who had assumed such a burden? task, to take either a man like Maxime Du Camp, who con- born in Paris and the revolutionary staff, either a brave provincial, honest and One, accustomed to dealing with the peasants and who would have been as malicious as the Parisians? Mr. de Vitrolles, who was the main, the only author of the Restoration, had not (.anointed dragged into this junk which ('foams forever the notion of Good and of Evil, he raised sheep before getting involved in politics and from These first steps proved more skillful than all the schemers who surrounded the Princes.

540 JEWISH FRANCE

Have we not seen the appearance, since the fall of the Empire, of a new generation, ardent yet restrained, intelligent, clean to the courts, in love with justice, concerned about general rights- rates?

Have we not seen appearing all over the country – and I absolutely want to highlight this very new generation of democracy – a new electoral political personnel, a new- personal calf of universal suffrage?

Yes, I sense, I feel, I announce the coming and the presence in the politics of a new social class which is in charge of- then sometimes eighteen months and which is far, for sure, from being infer- lower than its predecessors.

At the time, no one understood anything of this speech, and many, even today, are not far from seeing there one more manifestation of the usual verbiage of this mad- beggar, talker of nothing. What, one wonders, is Celtic new layer that the speaker was talking about? There is, in our democratic society, that a new element which can to gain access to public life, to make a place for oneself considerable in the government of the country, it is the People- ple, the fourth State, according to the expression of the socialists. Now, Gambetta's hatred for the worker is known to all, the workers' applications which, logically, would have had reason for being under a radical Republic, have been al- days fought by Gambetism; since 1870, not one No worker, apart from Brialou, arrived in the Chamber.

The new layer, we have said, really existed; she formed a ready-made staff for whom- would use it. The new layer consisted of beau- coup of Jews with a complement of Freemasons for the-

of unscrupulous shopkeepers, like Tirard, of makers

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT •''41

of dupes who had brushed with hard labor, like Constans, of bohemians and tavern pillars, like Lepère and Cazot, of disgraced generals, like Thibaudin, of debris of 48, doctors without clients, health officers, veterinarians-rinaries, of students who smoke pipes, retired in province and who, under a regular government, would have quietly finished falling into childhood while caressing the girl and the vial.

It was, with the added Semitic element, the eternal greedy and shameless peat of which the Greek poet speaks, has the small fry of foreigners who would only have had to invoke Jupiter whipped, of slaves, of people of low birth and worthless hardly better, arrived yesterday and which Athens would not have even wanted in the past for expiatory victims.

To all these equivocal citizens, a true Frenchman could have address the apostrophe that Scipio Aemilianus threw from on high of the Rostra one day that a crowd of slaves and freedmen interrupted the second African: "Silence, false son of Italy, you can do whatever you want, those I brought garrotted in Rome will not frighten me, however loose they are NOW ! "

The pact was finally signed with the Jews when Gambetta had formally promised persecution in this word that made him almost a king: Clericalism is the enemy.

Do you hate Zophar? It is a ram's horn. curved at its lower part and which announces joyfully, with its two alternating rings, the Tekiah and the Terouah, the Rosh Hashanah celebrations.

In ordinary life, as in the Temple, the Jews are wonderful Zophar players. They trumpet you a name of a writer, a singer, ie cabotin oudecabolic

31

^^^ (jjin/i'r^ JEWISH FRANCE

"^ until you have your ears full; they are the most prodigious claimants that exist.

Manin (1), and transformed this mediocre lawyer into a species of character, they surpassed themselves for Gambetta. Never The staging was not better organized and one cannot defend with admiration before the incomparable way in which This personality was first cleansed, then posed, advocated, glorified, idealized, apotheosized.

This art, special to the Jews, is completely modern, since the .press plays the main role there, and, nevertheless, recalls these evocations of the Middle Ages, these phantasmagoria which made appear before the gaze of beings who had forms human, who walked, who spoke and who, however, does not speak of realities. There is a kind of mixture of artimagic tricks and processes of contemporary puffism, in what they have of most cynical and most skillful, of most coarse and more cunning, – as a collaboration of the great Albert and BarnUm, like an alliance between Merlin, the old Celtic enchanter, and Goudchau the Jew, today's clothing merchant.

(1) Like almost all revolutionaries and a^^i'a'.îurs, Duiiel Manin was of Jewish origin. His father, say the i4rc.^:V)?s isméUtei (vol. 3G), belonged to an Israelite family named Fonseca and was baptized towards the end of the last century; he had then taken, according to custom, the name of his godfather, brother of the reigning doge Luigi Manin.

The fact is mentioned in a book published in 1872 in Venice, under this title: La vitaet i liempi di Duniele Manin. Nunazione du yrof. Alberto Errera and aw Césure Fingi correluta dai documenti ineDiti dejositi nel Museo Correr dal general Georç/io Manin.

There are also some details on this point in a published book by Rudolf Goltschal, iWoù– </'6<a/ØM(?ie eu Italy. The author says that ModIq himself confessed to him that he was of Jewish origin.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 543

We know what the phenomenon of suggestion is. Some doctors put a few straws under the noses of some unfortunate hypnotized people, in their saying: "Smell this bouquet of roses!" The unfortunate women swoon. 4 What beautiful roses! What a delious! Truly, all the scholars will affirm to you, They smelled roses. The Jews, thanks to their newspapers, made us feel the laurels of Gambetta in the same way. They took this man, who had done nothing but foolish things and dishonest acts during the war, who had smoked exquisite cigars while the others fought, who presented it to us, imposed it on us as the archetype, '^^'^^ of the patriot, the hero of Defense, the hope of Revenge ""^

It happened, in broad daylight, in broad sunlight, in broad ^ freedom of the press, without any of these circumstances of it.
mystery and distance, which help a person to grow
ality that we do not see. Y^

Who was fooled by these maneuvers? you might ask. Everything the world and yourself. The obsession with a name, constant repeated, is such that the most skeptical and the best informed, cannot defend themselves from a kind of hesitation.

0

Thanks to the sound of these sonorous syllables, constantly renewed, Gambetta ends up haunting the minds of all, friends or enemies; it was taken as support for the patriotic dream that everyone caressed. Credulous France, in love with fictions, let himself go to make them like the hero of his romani. Wasn't it a lawyer, Juarez, who had delivered Mexico? Who knows if this man, still so young, and who,
in appearance, seemed called as if by an invisible predestination, did not keep deep in his heart
the secret bitterness of defeat?

544 THE JEWISH FRINGE

Admit that all of you, more or less, have experienced this feeling. I judge others by myself. Suddenly Of course, I didn't expect any service from Gambetta; it's hardly if I dined two or three times with him in houses literary, and I was struck above all by the significance of his hooked fingers, which had such a singular eloquence from the point of view of the revelation of the lower appetites.
Despite everything, I found myself talking about him, at the com-beginning, when his name came up by chance under my pen in an article, with relative deference.

unwitting accomplices of this comedian. There was a moment in his favor a kind of silent conspiracy as it was organized in Italy during the domination Austrian, a general conspiracy to which everyone was affiliated. Everyone imagined they were in on the secret of this Brutus, who pretended to be a madman to better deceive the jealous looks of this stubborn revenge-brooder, who long into the night, it was said, they took turns talking with old generals and young colonels. Each was waiting for the moment when, bringing together all of France in a irresistible momentum, pushing Charette into the arms of the com-Munards, throwing the priests into the arms of the free-sisters, mixing Bazaine's soldiers with the companions of Faidherbe, he would cry out: "The time has come, our coffers are full of money, our arsenals are overflowing with weapons, the France has silently remade itself, Europe is ours favorable, forward (1)! »

(I) Gambella, in later years, never accepted iuvii-heels for dinner on Friday. While the poor romantic of France forged for himself an ideal of a dreamer of revenge, the irreconcilable

GAWBETTA AND HIS COURT 845

The veil began to tear when generals, like Ducrot and like Bourbaki, were driven out of the army of which the incapable Farre became the leader. The charm, however, was not completely broken until the time of the campaign of decrees, while we saw our soldiers putting backpack and bayonet on rifle to snatch from their home of the elderly and harmless religious people, French citizens expelled from the courtroom, and the infamous Cazot to declare with a sneer that there were no more courts, and that his whim was the only law. Behind the false Gambetta, to whom so many things were forgiven, the Jew was seen, which, to satisfy ghetto hatreds, unleashed on the country, which had welcomed him so well, the scourge of religious wars-gieuses. France disenchanted, awakened from its dream, cured of her novel, had only one cry: "Oh! the miserable! T>

It was then that we thought of looking at the surroundings. It was the most heterogeneous assembly that one could imagine, a bouquet of Jews, a real selam of youtres of all countries and of all colors. All the Jews of the world, old enough to travel, were there, they had gathered together at the Palais Bourbon like the molecules at the center of a cup of coffee. Some came from Spain and were born in Hamburg, others came from Austria and were liable enemy of Prussia dined every Friday with Proust and Spuller at Païva, who became Countess Henkel of Donnesmarck; he sat at the table of the first governor of Alsace Lorraine. Curiously, it was Spuller who was the first to be put off going there.

I carefully checked this information, which seemed untrue to me. similar. If Déroulède, the singer of patriotic Gambella, desires it, I will tell him who I got it from and he will have no doubt about his exactness.

f;46 JEWISH FRANCE

born in France. There were Porgès, Reinach, Arène, Laurent, Lévy-Crémieu, Jean David, Reynal, Strauss; there were Dreyfus, who was born in Germany, Etienne, parent of the Stephen of Austria, Thomson, whose family was English, Veil Picard who had just arrived from Besançon. All this was fiddling, speculating, gambled, denounced, ad-milk; all this had as its common motto the word of the Narcisse and Pallas: Hoc agamus ne qui» qiiidquam hàbeat!

Nero had his Aiiigustiani who, for a treatment of twenty-five thousand sesterces, accompanied everywhere the divine Emperor to clap his hands frantically in all the theaters where he made his voice heard without equal, and to denounce the wicked guilty of having yawned at the spectacle or not having attended a sacrifice offered for the singer with a cold. Gambetta had his young Jews who shuddered with admiration at every word of the master; they sang his praises in chorus in a confused gibberish, where Teutonic was mixed with Castilian, where the Levantine dialect fraternized with the slang of the little girl Boulevard Exchange. They had faith in him, moreover; he there was no doubt, for them, that in the cabinet of you-letter of the Jardies, where the interlopers were hastily adjusting themselves visitors who came to talk to the master of the affairs of the Tonkin (1), had not this golden statue of Victory been placed, who only left the Emperor's bedside when the Empe-

(1) One must read the published documents about the beginnings of this Tonkiu affair by all the newspapers and ioliiniuiel>ar the Reform, which has long belonged to Waldeck-Rousseau, that the me()ris public has been given the name of Yaltesse-Rousseau. LU tclaireut successor, telling the centurion to go and ask for the word order to Marcus Aurelius.

This corner of the Jewish empire, suddenly appearing in full France, will be 1 wonder of the future that will never be seen again nothing so extraordinary for a long time. Without the ignominy of this government which sends a hero to death like River to salicify the fancy of a courtesan.

A first report had been sent by Mr. Valteese. It was thus designed:

M To carry things out here, we would have to rely on the king Tii-Duc, who is greedy and vain, put him in distrust against the China and Spain (wrongly, missions were allowed to be established here) Spanish naries), if it were possible, provoke on the part of the Chinese from Yun-Nam an attempt at action on Tonkin, offering the king shelter of the French flag and impose the protectorate.

"September 1880.

"Valtesse db la Eigne."

Gambella replied to this lady:

Paris, September 14, 1880.
Madam,

a I thank you and I am very grateful to you for thecommnicalioa that you were kind enough to make for me. I find it excellent in form and substance, and you should have it published, if you want do not prefer that I have it published myself.

"I count on your good promise when the person returns well informed, and I will receive it with great pleasure.

"With my thanks, receive the assurance of my best eeulimenls.

c Gambetta. »

Later, many interviews took place in Ville-d'Avray between Gambetta and this interesting person to advise on the means to make some profit from the blood of our poor soldiers. Celait Laurier who had started this whole thing, but he parked. He had to be withdrawn, not finding it advantageous enough. It was on this occasion

no doubt all these coriiginni came from certain person—Balzac's swims, they were linked to the Andoche Finol, to the Werbrust, at du Tillet, these cormorants that the author of the Human Comedy shows us "hatched in the foam of the Parisian ocean." A hint of sectarianism, however, mixed in them with the absence of all belief and of all prejudice. By collecting small pieces of paper everywhere, collecting the writers' copies from the printing houses, to later make false letters, they do not not only served a man, they served a cause; they sometimes found a shadow of talent to insult religious saints or the Little Sisters of the Poor, of the same pen that had just praised the actions of a company new.

All this little hateful and greedy group truly believed, in at one point, that France was conquered. The excursions—sions in the departments recalled the famous journey in Achaia that Nero undertook when he judged Rome indito applaud him. After Gahors, it was Lisieux; everywhere scenes of indescribable gaiety mark these peregrinations. The platforms collapse, the speakers roll their on top of each other; the clique slams, we slam the clique. Arnaud de rAriège, who wants to make us forget, through exaggeration of his zeal, that he is not of Jewish origin, threatens the

that he wrote this famous word: "Mr. Dupuis finds that the deputies are too expensive." Prices, it seems, have since fallen.

I may add that it is to Mr. Gai, the amiable director of the Liberté, that Ms. Valtesse had first come to confide her plans for colonization. Gay, who is from the South, but from the South flu, wisely dismisses—the visitor, saying kindly: "Go see Gambetta, My child, you will find everything you need there.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 5*9

hand a reporter who, coram populo, corrects immediately—ment the cuhicidarius. The electrified music, which believes that it's in the program, energetically attacks the Mar—Seillaise, while Spuller, all bruised from his fall from the platform, suddenly begins to start a speech in German

The disorder is such in France, the drive towards servitude so irresistible, the love of an authority what that it is so deeply inveterate that it makes spontaneous—sovereign honors to a man who has no more upright than the first deputy who comes along.

If there had been a shadow of organization in the country,
Do you think that we would have kept in the army framework?
general who, commanding at Cahors, allowed himself, in contempt of all regulations, to make the garnison to form the hedge in front of a citizen who was no longer same President of the House, since the session was close?

Why was this general doing this? Quite simply, because he was ready to obey anyone.

At the time of the vote on the list ballot by the House, Gambetta truly exercised the Imperium. He reigned behind President Juditb, who had only been killed because of his name, and who, after having broken the crucifixes in his youth, looked smiling, in his old age, at others break them for him. Invitations to the legendary lunch-Trumpet ners were as sought after as would have been were invitations to the Palatine: the earth, at eighteen hundred years old from a distance, saw again this strange, degrading and very thing crazy also which had been the lower empire. There was, in fact in everything Gambetta did, a fanciful side, unexpected, extravagant, histrionic, contemptuous of have.

SSO JEWISH FRANCE

riiumanity which is particular to the imperialate and which the royalties, even the least reasonable, do not know paint.

Antoine had given a city in Asia to his cook for reward him with a good meal. Gambetta had fits of similar generosity.

One day the master was given a taste of the beer he found excellent.

—Who made this nectar? he asks.

— He's a Jew, his name is the biblical Hagar.

— I name him prefect. This brewer will brew business

Prefect, this was not yet the account of this disciple* of Gambrinus, who asks to exchange for a place of general treasurer in Cahors worth 80,000 Ir.

French, that no one thought of asking who title this man, without administrative background, was promoted to these high offices, to the detriment of old servants who had been working in modest jobs for twenty or twenty-five years. When Gambetta's star declined, we however, took away from this over-favored brewer that big sinecure, and in exchange he was given a position as an inspector-water company in Aix, which only brings in around ten of a thousand francs; but, at the time, this choice did not scandalise a person (1).

These monstrous authorities of Emperors had for

(t) Today he has become a simple receiver of the coulriLulioiis, h IMliiviers', I believed.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 551

counterbalance the dagger of a Chereas, it was the pen of a journalist who killed this barely nascent Empire.

Mr. Henri is a singular figure indeed.

Rocheport, and to get rid of this guy, you have to hold account of the innumerable varieties of beings and ideas, which have sown in this country so many regimes, invasions, pairwise men of nations, of different human incarnations, let-from their seed. Similar to those trees that come back to life after years have passed, in a corner of the forest, because that a germ of themselves, deposited on the ground, has been preserved and developed, certain forms of distant beings return sometimes suddenly in all the first originality, Rocheport is the feudal lord.

It is not the great lord, the marquis, the gentleman-fallen man; he is the feudal lord, not a believer, devoted, with a childlike and pure soul, but the feudal lord possessed by the devil, the blasphemous feudal lord as we saw in full centuries of faith, saying, like Piaoul of Cambrai: "You will plant my tent in the middle of the church, you will make my bed in front of the altar, you will put my falcons on the golden crucifix. >

He has a way of disobeying that is unique to him, or rather he claims its primary rights against all authority. For him. Napoleon III was only a man of little birth, which the idea could not come to a descendant of baron to submit. As for Henry V, it was not him as well as a usurper and, while taking into account his seniority, Rocheport, who regarded himself as also before him like some recent nobles. The pamphleteer, in fact, descends in a direct line from Guy the Red—red has remained in the family,—the lord of Rochefort, a fighter, a snarler and a bad sleeper to whom

BS! JEWISH FRANCE

Louis VII offered his daughter for his son, in order to have in his areas some tranquility and peace.

This being, deeply atavistic, absolutely foreign to what we have agreed to call modern ideas, has hardly, I am convinced, read more books in his life than a knight of the 12th century. He did not understand, he did not remember, he did not quote only from Victor Hugo, because the verses of the author of Burgraves have the sounds of Chanson de geste. Join to this some fragments of pieces heard, and you will have all his literary education.

What does he need a second-hand supply? He beats currency like its ancestors of the nobility of the sword or of the nobility of the pen, like Joinville, like de Retz, like Saint-Simon, he has a language of his own. Like the feudal lords of the past, he launches every morning from his newspaper as well as a burg, hits randomly and comes back.

He is unconscious, he is savage, he is damned, I would say, if a Christian had the right to write, about of one of his brothers, this word which would seem to doubt the mis-God's record, it's all the bad things you want, fatal, irritating, but he is not a Jew (1)...

For the Jew, Rochefort feels little more than the feeling—almost physical repulsion of the Middle Ages. Figure—Are you a blessed Israel caught on a road and

(1) When, on the proposal of Crémieux, the members of the government of the National Defense who had declared that "they were not in Thoinneur but in the pain, » allocated themselves an indemnity which represented fifty thousand francs per year, Henri Rochefort energetically refused to receive this treatment, he also refused—to publish any newspapers during the siege, day not to agitate opinion and divert it from the enemy's thinking through struggles interiors.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 553

taken to some castle to distract from a—

This will give you an insight into what became of the Jew Gambetta in the hands of Rochefort. Every morning it served as a new entertainment, sometimes it was pulled his hair, sometimes his beard was pulled out; one day his head was transformed into a Turk's head and the next day the editor-in-chief of V Intransigent tried elsewhere the strength of his foot.

. Someone other than Gambetta would have preferred a duel to the death to all these outrages, he endured everything, but we were no longer thrilled.

From this he suffered relatively little, although he had eff-terrible furies, not from the point of view of honor, to which he was insensitive, but from the point of view of the dom-caused rage. But it was the domesticity that had to be seen! This little world of Reinach, Laurent and Veil Picard, born of hams or usurers and consequently very respectful, not of what is worthy of all veneration-tions: virtue, glory, genius, but of the situation acquired, possessed money, had white anger in thinking that a simple writer could speak like this about a man who had carried out the Bône coup in Guelma.

As for the Christians, the native French, they should admit, if they were sincere, that they owed this unbeliever of Rochefort the only satisfactions they had-felt for many years. A mysterious law-laughing had wanted this man, by the sole fact that he was of French race, avenged these poor people on foreigners religious people who had no nails to defend themselves.

How many times have workers and men of the world been reconciled? by the same feeling of contempt, exchanged a look in the street, noticing that they were reading the same day-final!

354 JEWISH FRANCE

Almost every morning I walked along the sidewalk in front of the presidential palace, the former Lassay hotel, which I have recounted the vicissitudes of old, and there is not a day when I did not see a passer-by, wearing a blouse or a frock coat, wearing a cap, hat or kepi, throwing a number V Intransigent over the j^rille along which hollyhocks raised their spears in form of this. The owner of the place, who liked to cement to walk around ten o'clock under these greens full of the memory of Morny, had to go and take his of V Intransigent under his feet.

This French race which, deceived, perverted, abnegation, still keeps this quality of not being Jewish,
he was to find her deep in a suburb of Paris.

Who has not yet seen this street scene?
Saint-Biaise and this banal shed in which took place of these episodes which sometimes decide the course of a century?

With the rain pouring down outside, the assistants trampling in blackish mud and sometimes plunged into the darkness, sometimes brutally lit by projectors-tions of electric light, this site, which served as night battlefield in the fight for the throne, had a half-fantastic aspect. It was indeed the kingdom of down, where the statesman, emerging from nothing, was going to ask for a new consecration to the lower powers which had created it. Before this Caesar in representation in some dive in Suburre, we would talk again at those times distant places where the investiture of Royalty was given to song

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 55.1

organs, to the sound of pious hymns rising towards the sky, by the light of valiant swords drawn from their scabbards.

Here is the rhetorician before the crowd If he triumphs, he is the master of the future Chamber and, as he said the representative of democracy. So it's war, the mad war, the ignoble war rather, where French blood will flow to turn into gold for the Jews.

He's about to begin. He's already sketching out the gesture we know about.
How topical this gesture was! The fingers were not raised, like those of a Buddha, to signify peace and harmony, the right did not extend like that of a leader for command. Brought back, palm up, towards a point centrally located at the bottom, these hands inclined and rounded-gradually knew. Greedy and in love with lucre, these hands seemed to caress and to grope on the tribune a small pile of coins....

He opens his mouth and in less than a second, a

A torrent of whistles and boos sweeps away the dictator and the dicnature

Carmelite.

Who shouted that? Who whistled first? No one knows knows. Those who, the day's task completed, came to Cliaronne accomplish this task of justice, there will remain unknown to history. Deep in these somber suburbs—bres, where they lived, they will perhaps be, in one of these days when vertigo is in the air, actors in some as.^ssinat like that of the rue de Haxo; they will fall perhaps along a wall victims of reprisals implacables. It is worth saying that they were useful and great, to congratulate, in the name of the Fatherland, this anonymous and impersonal: the People, who, among so many objects and shame, had a flash of indignation, a surge of generous anger.

5S6 JEWISH FRANCE

"Draw the curtain, the farce is over!" the new Augustus, if he had had the strength to speak, during that the faithful were hastily pulling a door which was to protect his escape. But the master had no mind to remit—classical origins. Taken by an accident, usual in Cléon, if we are to believe Aristophanes, he soiled the cushions of the beautiful coupe that ran at full speed on the hard cobblestones of popular streets. He went, he went the coupe and the lanterns Crystal threw, in passing, on the black corner of a wall, on the windows of a suspicious cabaret, on the girl standing nearby from a terminal, sparkling lights, fast as the furious gallop of the thoroughbred. Sometimes one could hear the conveys guttural and unintelligible sounds. It was Spuller who, as in all great emotions, had started speaking German and who did not interrupt his German lamentations that only to cry out in French: "That's not low! That doesn't smell low!"

Caesar, that day, did not go as far as the Gemonies and did not did not think of asking some Epaphroditus to appreciate how one killed oneself; he was no less wounded to death (1).

(1) A few days before this evening, which was fatal for him, Gambetta "He had a word which well characterizes the degree of pride in which he was arrived.

We know that the former constituency of Belleville had been divided—split in two. Gambetta shareholders held a meeting general to know if he should present himself in both sections

The master's supporters voted for both sections: success assured, certain apotheosis, etc. A far-sighted voice rose ce-

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 55"

Have your eyes ever stopped on a curious etching by Rembrandt: The Fortune of the Cross? The long from the shore a heavy horseman, a Vitellius with a laureate head, puffy and bloated, degreased, has just rolled off his head-valley. In the distance we can see statues of Hermes. On the left, the crowd rushes towards a temple whose columns are somewhat reminiscent of the Stock Exchange. On the right, a Fortune standing, stretches the sail of a boat which moves away with the wind in the stern. Absolutely naked, this Foi tune shows her buttocks to the unhorsed rider who, lying in the dust, throws in vain towards the goddess a supplicating look. This allegory brutal has always seemed to me to be a poor way of summarizing, by his very cynicism, the end of this destiny which remained so low despite such incomprehensible luck.

This grotesque rider is neither a thunderstruck Titan nor a hero struck down by fate, it is even less 'than Vitellius, It was a wine-addled Bazochian who wanted to show himself to the Wood and which ridiculously tumbled.

Above the battlefields, where just succumbed

'Napoleon's dream of power or the dream of freedom' of a Brutus, we see hovering, serious and slowly flying away, winged Fortunes who seem respectful of those during which he will advise caution and declare that Gambetta for-would be beaten by Tony Révillon. Naturally the clairvoyance was booed; but Quentin, who led the chorus of enthusiasts, Siastes was directly challenged by the far-sighted man who said to him:

– Come on, Quentin, you yourself told me that: Is it the truth?

At this word, Gambetta rises, all inflamed with anger, and cries out:

– Ah! The truth! The truth! I've had enough of the truth! Isn't that quite a Roman emperor's word?

nans, nor in los Gapitoles, it is in the museum of Naplcs that Fortune lives here, obscene Fortune who, ashamed of the favorite she had chosen, for a moment of error, shows him by moving away the less noble of his two faces.

The situation was difficult for Gambetta. He had gorged his creatures without being able to satisfy them and faced with the deficit, which was already threatening, we had to close this liquidation account—donation which, escaping the control of the Court of Auditors, allowed the most brazen squandering.

One fine day, a deputy, named Baihaut, came . smilingly proposing to the representatives of France to ap—prove both the expenses of 4870, amounting to two billion five hundred and ten million six hundred and twenty—one one thousand fifty-seven francs ninety-three centimes, plus expenses incurred on the same budget, up to the closure of the liquidation account and fixed at two thousand four hundred and forty-eight million six hundred and sixty-seven liards sixty-three thousand five hundred and forty-nine francs twenty-nine cents, plus still expenses to be paid amounting to sixty-one million nine hundred and fifty-seven thousand five hundred and eight francs sixty-four centimes. All this to arrive at not being able to put a regi—ment on foot at the time of the Tunisian war and write to Colonel Grand-Clément; "we do not have army.

The House, servile as usual, had voted this a trifle of a few billion without a single discussion, without asking for a single explanation, without looking for what that he must have committed irregular acts there. and fraudulent.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 559

This Baihaut, moreover, who guaranteed on his oil that these enormous sums had been honestly emb—folded, was not a novice in financial matters; former office manager at Crédit Lyonnais, he had contributed to the foundation of a Fisheries company whose shares, issued at five hundred francs, are now selling at the price of paper and he would happily repeat in the corridors the word he addressed to the disgruntled shareholders: Go and do not sin more! 9

By milking poor France, the blood, however, began to come to the udders of the unfortunate beast. Gam—Betta knew it, he foresaw bankruptcy, he felt above all trailed behind him.

Like thieves who set fire to hide their exploits, the makers ardently desired war; The Jews were crying out for it, but France, we said, did not want to hear about it and Gambetta, after his failure at Belleville, was no longer in a position to impose Nothing.

There were quarrels and recriminations. To com- Sadly, Gambetta had fallen out with Rothschild. On June 10, 1881, an intimate supper took place, at which all the newspapers spoke, and which was attended, besides Gambetta, Alphonse de Rothschild and Gallifet, some great lords in charge of entertaining: the Marquis du Lau, Kerjéti and the Marquis de Breteuil. Gambetta had joked a little the baron quickly asked for all the money he had earned since then. a few years.

Despite a vigorous slap on the stomach which underlined the friendly translation of the remarks, Alphonse de Rothschild, who had his neurosis that day, took it badly. The baron doesn't like to be treated so familiarly when there is drawn people.

560 JEWISH FRANCE

Was Gambetta abandoned by the Jews, who forgot all previous services, when they believed that he was no more good for nothing? Was he ordered to leave the ministry to accede- to leer, by a parliamentary and almost governmental crisis- mental, the catastrophe of the General Union? It is difficult- It is difficult to decide, because everything that has brought back the ephemeral Gambetta's ministry is still very little known; the pro- ninth work published by Reinach on this subject, in the Revue politics, has only made obscure what appeared clear.

Physical decay, always prompt in these races, had come early, moreover, to this man's house who had asked existence for everything it could contain pleasure,

The last time I saw him was while reading the Kings in exile, in Daudet. He was already lost, he had this sign of marked people which hardly deceives the eyes experienced. Crimson, aged, gray and red all at once time, the flesh swollen with bad fat, he does not could sit and, leaning against the door of the office of only. Although deeply sad, he seemed follow Coquelin carefully. Hearing his actor favorite to read this play, where one ridiculed all these scepter-bearers of old, all these descendants of other-gustes families who had ruled Europe, it seemed say :

– It's my turn now 1

And behind him one could have seen Death who already had his icy hand on the shoulder of this favorite of Chance, of this mai-

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 561

very useful to a few whose every move was watched with complacent looks.

Charçot, no doubt, who was walking in this full room of lights and flowers this marble face of Aesculapius, this thoughtful and benevolent face despite the sarcastic con-lip traction, probably knew, from that time, what to expect. What bitter and deep joys philosophical must have the lay confessors of the penetration of that one, which circulate throughout the world, knowing the invisible wound of so many intelligences, the delay brief sometimes assigned by Destiny to certain ambitious people who do not set limits to their hopes when life has already taken its toll on them!

He might have returned to power to push for cel war to which people around him so aspired; but God judged that he had done enough harm, he touched him with his finger and he did not live to see the new year. Through a singular encounter, this adventurer, who is so much like Balzac's heroes, died in the very villa of the author of the Comedy Jiumaine. Balzac, who foresaw the greatness of Israel, had the Jew as a replacement in all the houses he occupied. It was Ganibetta who sat under the trees that had planted the painter of so many presidents of the council, great lords and great statesmen; rue de Monceau, M°>« de Balzac had barely expired when M"" Salomon de Rothschild sent to claim the keys to the hotel she had bought. In the fields, Balzac was succeeded by Gaudis-sart, in the city, he had Nucingen.

The Sunday Gambetta died, we were reading at the service of day:« Canvas p̄xerum and matrem ejus, defuHCti suntenim quiquærebant animam puer/. Take back the child and the mother, for there are fewer who wanted to harm the child's soul."

I thought of this word as I walked once more in front of the palace where the corpse of this man had just been brought back almighty.

At the same time as me a woman of the people, with the air honorable and very French, passed by with his gar-and looked, she too, at this residence that Paris knew,

"Why did Gambetta die?" asked the child.

— Because he wanted to prevent little children from doing their prayer.

This humble worker had simply translated Scripture

Jewish Freemasonry, with the skill of putting into scene that characterizes her, spared nothing for the funeral of the man who had served him. BicJiofTsheim put up a flag black at his hotel. Camondo rented an entire floor of the Hotel Continental, to see the procession pass. Peixotto, president of the B'nai, B'rith (Sons of the Covenant) and vice-consul of the United States (1), declared to the world that he was inconsolable.

(1) This PeixúLto, to whom the simplest conventions should have to say to take sides in affairs and to declare oneself in 'favor of a lion who had shocked the beliefs of so many French-
French, has always played a considerable role in Jewish politics.
The Isrué/ites Archives show us him intervening in the following way:
more bold in the affairs of Romania. The general convention-B'nai B'ilh conference, held in Chicago in 1874, which called upon all the lodges in favor of the so-called Romanian mission, a
The sum of 3,153 dollars was collected and sent to Peixotto with the order to remain at his post; he then contributed to the proceedings multiplied near the council of Berlin in the service of the Israelites Romanians.

In 1884, when Lasker, driven from Allt-magne by disapproval universal, he went to die of indigence.—tiou in .\mé!ii(U'>, the Jews tried to do what Pei.'iolto had fled for Gaïubetta; they

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 563

Simia showed, for three columns, a face flooded with tears. Aristide Astruc, honorary rabbi of Brussels, was dithyrambic, to the point of appearing joker; he affirmed

signature of the Fatherland itself, which Gambetta inscribed against anti-Semitism, thus leaving us teaching. that the regeneration of men, whether outside or inside inside, is accomplished by freedom, common law and the brotherhood, n

Freedom of education, the common law of religions-gieux, the regeneration of men through financial manipulations- You can see that from here. What aplomb! is the word that must always be repeated.

Eugène Mayer was a joy in these sadnesses. He came to cry, too, at the Palais Bourbon, and Déroulède, without respect for the place, threatened to beat him again.

– Not on the same cheek, shouted Mayer, at least change aside

Before this interlude, a burst of laughter, at first discreet, then unable to control himself," took the audience, waved joyfully the funeral hangings of the sacred place, made stir the draperies of the catafalque and the dancing flames that were burning in the streetlights. The municipal service was stifling laughter in his uniform, and one saw how undulations of backs that laughed in the deputation of sent an address to the Prussian Central Committee in which they declared that this Jew was the greatest man of humanity; but Germany is not strong enough to match France's strength; Prince Bismarck took the address with his fingertips and placed it delicately on the desk of the President of Congress, through of Mr. Eisendecher, telling the Jews to use this paper as it would hear it.

ô64 JEWISH FRANCE

members of the left, who marched gravely, mixing with patriotic lamentations of various assessments on the gold mines of Tirard's Uruguay, which were still worth two crowns, and the fisheries of Baihaut, which were not worth only twenty sous left, all wet!

The vision of the Place de la Concorde, in the broad daylight of the funeral, remained in my eyes. A March time, with threatening showers more than January weather, a sun drenched in rain, the riders returning from the Bois stopping their horses at the bottom of the avenue, women from all the worlds, in their morning clothes, climbed on circles full of curious people, in the distance the facade of the Room with its large black veil, – theatrical decor which did not shock and suited the man and the circumstance.

The impression, from one end of Paris to the other, was the same. A certain pleasure at being rid of it, but no hatred. Gambetta's death did not inspire hatred, it was not discovered not in him the basely ferocious sides of Ferry, who tastes a personal pleasure in the misdeeds he commits. Opinion unanimous, anticipating the judgment of history which begins– I already felt very well that this man had been a instrument, a delegate of the Freemasons, who had offered the glass from which Luther had drunk, a responsible business of the Jews, who had placed on his shoulders a man–temporary Emperor's chair.

The Prince of Hohenlohe, who came a minute ahead the House and who, naturally, refused to follow a civil burial, simply called on the Pont de la Concorde to a lady whom I could quote: "You don't have lost a lot with Gambetta, but he is a great "Unfortunately for you, the death of Chanzy."

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 563

The weight of the brain indicated the lack of intellectual depth. that there was in this noisy man like everything that is empty. Byron's brain weighed 2/238 grams, that of Cromwell 2.231 grams, Cuvier 1.829 grams, Dupuytren's 1.436 grams, Gam–'s brain betta weighed only 1,160 grams. It was a brain of tenor and indeed there was tenor in this great leading role of the politician who remained an actor until the marrows.

Tenor certainly, artist never. Nothing is more interesting. and more instructive, in my opinion, than the study of this talent. We have laughed out loud at these now legendary phrases: "Havrais, I know your needs, I also know your means of flow Bold couriers, rush– you on this sea which calls you before Yours applause does more than crown my past they illuminate my possessions"

I find there is more than one occasion for laughter in the spectacle of this unfortunate who cannot happen pro–pronounce two correct sentences in a row; there is a teacher–to draw from the inability of this foreigner to speak a language that is not his own.

Isn't this radical impossibility striking, absolute, of a man who possesses certain gifts, to bind two ideas in a regular form? Gambetta met instinctively ridiculous and annoying reithèle, like Lamartine met the beautiful image, the vibrant comparison and just, the eloquent evocation of the native wood, of the river, of the sea.

– Yes, I conspired with the Revolution, like the Lightning rod conspires with lightning! Thus cries the tribune from 1848.

32

500 JEWISH FRANCE

Imagine Gambetta having to express the same idea, He is said to have said: "Yes, I have had ties with the parties advanced, as the Ocean is involved in the actions of the lions who roar.

Why did this virtuoso always slip his tongue? so skillful as an executor? It is that he had absolutely no fiber by which it held to the ground, that it did not actually denied with any of the living feelings in the French soul (1). He did not have the exact sense of words, born in his absence while his own people chanted—said Hebrew in the ghettos of Germany, that he had no tradition of these magnanimous thoughts or these innate notions, in a way, which also prevent the French to hit the weak than to say that Bouvines is a defeat.

The words, unrelated to each other, used almost in chance, wonderfully indicate the man who does not care about nothing, the political which is not connected to the past, nor to Tave-nir. The sentences here are neither the flowers whose roots plunge into the earth and which we see forming and developing—lopper, nor the flowers which, picked, still keep in their calyx and in their stem a freshness which lasts for some^5 days. – It is the bouquet, sewn with coarse thread, attached with straw, surrounded by white paper, which is given to the girls in night restaurants, or thrown into the circus in the concert cafés; these give way to a bou(iue—who passes it on to another until it is swept away

(1) "Between the language and the character of a people, there is a link just—paeut Leibuilz, there is the same mysterious reality as the moon and the sea.

GWIBETTA AND HER COURT 56"

in the stream. This bouquet is expensive, it represents the money without being worth anything, it makes an impression, it is like the noisy sign of false enthusiasms, it has not however the poetry of the humblest plant that expresses an emotion or true passion.

From the spectacle of this man, who was able to become a moment the master of France, without managing to pronounce never a French sentence, which could steal our scholarship, and could not take our style, we must bring together the native, spontaneous, frankly accused aversion that they have tested for this intruder all the lettered, refined, elevés. Republicans and conservatives, Catholics and free-thinkers, all agreed on this point.

Listen to Georges Sand, the old republican, who mauls and mocks Harlequin dictator at the same time. To hear the indignant reproaches that she launches from the depths of her Berry, where she is a witness to the madness of the war in the provinces, lively person who, to prolong Torie further, has massacred our poor mobiles, does it not seem to hear France earthly woman crying for her peasants?

Here is Alexandre Dumas completing as a philosopher this which, in Georges Sand. was above all a movement of the heart swollen with disgust. From 1872, he drew on this tireless declaimer a horoscope that came true from point to point point and which attests to a singular power in the writer forecasting.

Gambetta, he says, only appeals to instincts, he does not rally a soul and he always finds himself back at the starting point. He will pass his life to start over. He locked himself in the little black box of atheism; he gives it great blows of the head believing to burst the sky; he only manages to blow the lid off like a toy enraged. He will never get out of it: his feet are stuck in what is death. In order not to submit to a principle, he riveted himself to a system. It is spring-loaded and immobile; it is frightening and empty; it is devilish and good-natured. What a contradiction! He claims to be the master of those who no longer want to have any; he believes himself to be the god of those who have none. Nothing to fear, and what is more sad again, nothing to hope for from this man. He is purely verbal. He will die from a flash of truth like his ancestor the Cyclops Brontes of an arrow of Apollo.

568 JEWISH FRANCE

But listen. A whole room is clapping its hands, a room^ which contains everything that Paris has to offer that is famous, acclaims this spirited and bold work, which, at least,
avenges us a little with laughter: Rahagas.

How accurate is still the portrait of Daudet, the first,
the real, the good, the portrait before the retouching! Like the Gambetta, President of the Chamber, remained the Gam-Betta from the hotel table on Rue de Tournon!

What a train it was—in our time—at mealtimes! II
There were a dozen southern students there – but they were nasty ones
Noon – with rosewood beards, too black, too shiny, a shrill accent, disordered gestures and large, drooping nosesbants who made them all look like horses. My God!
These young Gascons were so unbearable! What a commotion!
in the void, what silliness, what aplomb, what turbulence I A of them especially, the most shouty, the most gesticulating of the group, is to me remained particularly in the memory. Jo always sees him coming-worm in the room, back hunched, rolling shoulders, one-eyed with that and the face all inflamed.

As soon as he entered, the other horse heads would stand around him from the table, and a tremendous neighing greeted him:

Ah 1 ah I ah I here is Gambetta!

They said Ghâmbetthdh, these monsters! and they had plenty of them the mouth.

He sat down noisily, sprawled on the table, fell over on his chair, pontificated, banged his fist, laughed until the windows melted, pulled the tablecloth at him, spat far away, got drunk without drinking, tore you away-

GA.MBETTA AND HIS COU a i.C9 washed the dishes with his hands, the words with his mouth, and, after having talked all the time, it went on without having said anything! Gaudissart and All grass together, that is to say what one can imagine of more provincial, more noisy and more boring. I remember-come just once" I had brought to our table a little employee of the City, a very cold boy, very eo inside, who had just started at Charivari and signed Henri Rochefort theater articles of a prose as sober and as reserved as his person. Gambetta, to honor the journalist, took him to his right, on the side of his good eye, and watered him all evening with his eloquence, so well and .-•i long time, that the future director of the commission of barrierscades took away from my dinner a magnificent migraine which cut short to our relationship. I have since regretted it.

dug deep, is of a strange relief.

The very vulgarity of Charonnas serves his vogue. The banality of his fund of ideas is the fertilizer of his talent. Calotin to the end claws, he doesn't take a minute of vacation, doesn't hang on no coat rack, no bourgeois salon, no wedding cafe, no cabaret louches its ulsteren lion skin – always Dantonnes– that, even at the table, kid in bed 1

He read that Danton, before sneezing into the sound, declared that he did not regret life having been very thirsty with the drinkers, well nboté with the girls; and he plays the hairdresser, the drunkard, the Gargantua and the Roquelaure.

This mixture of drunken libertinism and tribunician eloquence fills the little ones of the Mole conference or the failures with admiration from the Madrid café who leave shouting to the crowd:

–Huh! Is it a mile?

Hamster! Hamster 1

It would be unfair not to mention, alongside these apprecia- violent relations, a very good study by Mr. Amagat, very moderate, very fair, fundamentally right with I don't know of the Auvergne roundness. We feel in these pages the sadness 32.

570 JEWISH FRANCE

of a republican who thinks about what this man could have done do for the country, if, instead of dividing and corrupting, it had tried to unite, if instead of having the ulterior motive of destroy France, he had the generous ambition of save.

No republican school, says Mr. Amagat, will demand Mr. Gambetta if she exercises a healthy criticism on him.

The parties, whose morality is not very strict, will perhaps spare him. being, not distinguishing well through its variations where com- friend begins where the adversary ends. Serious history, we dare affirming it will not absolve it. Serious history will not be wrong on his deleterious work.

What did he do for his country? Demagogue in the elections of 1869, he has awakened those furies which periodically break out in our history, from Saint-Barthélemy and Ligut) to the Terror does not give an hour of rest to the government that repairs the evils of the homeland, and the enemy is still camped on our territory. An agitator in 1776, he provoked this guilty party with his violence. May 16, which almost threw us into civil war and which plunged into the political disorder in which we are struggling. In-schemer and corruptor during his long presidency, he tries to corrupt to break, in order to better enslave it, this noble country of France that the vilest despots have indeed possessed it for a moment, but that they are not never managed to debase and dishonor (1).

Gambetta made the same impression on everyone.

One day, Goncourt was leaving the exhibition of the Decorative arts; a fat man, at the door, clings to Burty, and all three roll together to the square of the Concorde.

(1) Mr. Gambetta and his political role. Review of the Deux-Mondes May 15, 1888.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 571

— What is this brown broker you are dealing with? were you talking? He's a Jew, isn't he? Goncourt asks Burty, when the other one moved away.

— Ah, my dear, replies Burty, you make me to set down

— No, who is it?

— But it's Gambetta!

— Ah!

This is the feeling that a delicate and a attentive observer among all, seeing for the first time times the great man.

The last time I met Paul de Saint Victor, he spoke to me about Gambetta, that is to say about Cléon. of the Two Masks, of which he was preparing the second volume.

— As it is, this Paphlagonian, with hooked fingers, who says: "When I devoured a piping hot tuna and drank there-over a large glass of pure wine, I mock the généra-raux, from Pylos."

—That is it, my dear master, and that is not it.

is a demagogue, but he is not Jewish, he is not concise, as Aristophanes says elsewhere when speaking of another character; finally, he took Sphacterie, and he died while fighting. I believe, between us, that Gambetta does not will not die this way

-Venus sometimes hurts, Saint Victor told me laughing, without suspecting that he was a prophet

This distance for him from everything that was intelligent and honest was, moreover, quite indifferent to Gambetta. He had Jewish ideas on the press, he saw only one trade like any other, and did not admit that one had a conviction; it seemed quite simple to him that a newspaper would change his mind as soon as the price was paid.

572 JEWISH FRANCE

When he wanted to seize the Petit Journal and France^ It did not occur to him for a minute that the editors-tors could have an opinion of their own, and that he was disloyal, by the brutal force of money, to force workers-their intellectuals to choose between their acquired situation and their conscience.

He had no secret of conquering, of seducing, of to win, to rally, he did not corrupt with caresses, like Morny, he bought and, by a phenomenon which seems strange but which is nevertheless easy to explain, he did not estimate not those who had refused to sell themselves. "The deal was good, he said, if they didn't do it it's because they are fools, consequently, they would not have been to me useful.))

It is only through contempt for man that he closer to Napoleon I. The contempt in him was intangible, immense, deep, as if he had spent his life in front of his mirror.

The rapprochement, of course, is only relative. If Napoleon had despised the wealthy Jacobins, the regicides became chamberlains, as Gambetta had the right to despise the Nodilles, the Choiseuls, the Montebellos become-naked his complaisants and his flatterers, the great Empe-The author had always respected this sublime and generous mass. reuse, this military people to whom he owed his victories; he paid his veterans for their dedication by growing them in their own eyes, speaking to them in the most magnificent way language that has been spoken to men. When these obscure murderer, he took off his little hat and watched them go by bareheaded. The flight dismayed even those whose enthusiasm-naïve and childishly sweetened siasm had raised him to power, he loudly displayed the hope of having those who had escaped the Commune; he had them counted in this unphilanthropic goal and, when they had murmured in front of him, he threatened them with his cane like a guard-drunken galley slave.

GAMBETTA AND HIS COURT 5"3

This despiser of all ended up despised by all. He had arisen in the end of an Empire which already resembled a Republic blique, with abjection, sacrileges and persecutions in less, he disappeared in an end of the Republic which resembled-much to an Empire, with bankruptcy on top. It was himself like a caricature of an Emperor, an Empe-Jewish leader, we said at the beginning; he would have pro-thrown, if only outside the dream of a senseless war he pursued some definite plan, to install a Jewish imperialism within the framework of old French society and to be crowned at the Grand Orient of rue Cadet, in some burlesque ceremony. The Freemason's apron would have taken the place of the bee-strewn coat, and the trowel It replaced the scepter and the hand of justice...

TABLE OF CONTENTS

FROM THE FIRST VOLUME

Introduction

BOOK ONE

The Jew 1

The places coniiimina on the Jew. – The true type. – The Aryans and Semites. – Absence of any ideal and any es-took the invention. – Renan's variations. – A conference before Alphonse de Rothschild. – The oppression of the Jew. – Contempt for the Goy. – The Fivilized Jew and the Natural Jew. – I Schlossbcrg. – the power of the Jew to understand what was raised. – The ignorance of the Jews in the Middle Ages. – The physique. – The Portuguese Jew and the German Jew. – The voice of the race. – Daniel Deronda. – The lost tribes. – The Woman

Falashas. – Coningaby. – The solidarity of the Jews. – The peeping-elements of the Jew. – Pacifico, [.tvy of i'EnCda, little Mortara, Victor Noir, Li()mann, Selikowilch. – The Duchess of Berry and Deutz. – A case of conscience judged by Créraieux. – The es-Jewish espionage. – Jewish criminality. – A passage of Maxime of the Camp. – The celebrities of the flight. – The associations of Jewish thieves. – The Peschard affair. – Almost impunity absolute granted to Jews today. – The great hoarders-remements. – The Jewish kings. – The rehabilitations. – Lcvy Bing. – The Ronhograph Revolutionaries. – The Jews and the death penalty. – Jewish prostitution. – The hieroglyphs. – The Jewish women. – Influence of religious prescriptions. – The figure of the Jewish population. Figures and documents contradictory. – The Jew from a nosological point of view – The ioimuikiléâ of the Jew before the peete. – The Jewish smell and Victor

576 TABLE OF CONTENTS

Hugo. – Jewish neurosis. – Its particular character. – Romantic existences. – M"» de Païva. – MiJhat pasha. – Naquel. – The politics and regeneration of the scalp. – Article 1965. – The Jewish drama. – The degeneration of the race. – Jewish sadness. – The crises religious beliefs of Judaism. – The question of the Messiah. – Israel the hare of nations. – The modern Jew according to Renan. – ^ The anti-Semitic campaign. – What must be done will be done, f

BOOK TWO

THE JEW IN THE HISTORY OF FRANCE

I. – From the early days to the final expulsion of 1394 139

The Jews in Gaul. – Delicate Religious Feelings and Mr. Renan. – The Jews in Brittany. – De arrogantia Judeorum. – The Jews in the Middle Ages. – The lies accreditities. – Schools, rabbis and poets. – The Jews driven out of Spain. – Abu Lkak, the patriotic poet. – The Kacida eu noun. – The Jewish Quarters of the South. – The War of the Albigensians. – The yellow wheel. – Social safety measures.

– The trial of the Talmud. – The elegies. – The auto-da-fé of Troyes and the Lantern. – The Jew according to Michelet. – The Templars and the Jews. – The Order of the Temple, corrupted by money, becomes an instrument of the Jews. – The sacrileges.

– The Templars and Masonry. – The lepers. – The social war in the 14th century. – The Semitic movement.

– The final expulsion of 1394. – The greatness of France.

II. – From 1394 to 1789 187

The Jewish meditation after the expulsion of 1394. – The great silence. ~ The Kabbalah. -- Reuclilin. – The impression of the Talmud. – The Reformation. – Nostradamus. – Coucini. – Lopez

– The Jews in Holland. – The World of Rembrandt. – Lts Jews in England. – Cronivell and Manasseh. – The drama of Victor Hugo. – The four Jewish families of Paris
Louis XIV. – The Jews of Metz. – The protection of the Drancas.

– The Jews of the Comtat. – A good piece of advice from a rabbi. – The Avipapal gnon and Mistral. – The Jews of Bordeaux. – Mon-Taigne and Alexandre Dumas. – The Princess of Baghdad. –
The Maanas. – Efforts of the Jews to enter Paris.

– The request of the merchants and traders of Paris. –

TABLE OF CONTENTS 57'

The Jewish Golden Spider, die judische guldspinn. – Voltaire and the Jews. – The two agents. – Voltaire the financier. – The iguo-race of the 18th century on the Jews. – The Jewish colony of Parii. – Peixouo. – The first Jewish cemetery. – Louis XVI and the Jews. – The latent Jewish movement. – The Franc-Ma-nonsense. – The expulsion of the Jesuits. – The Jews in disguise:
Law, the Count of Saint-Germain, Caglio^lro. – The hatred of the Jews against Marie-Antoinette. – The Jew Angelucci and Beau-walked. – Marie-Thérèse and the Jews. – The Col- affair bind. – Illuminism. – The lodge of Saint John of Candor.

– The Duke of Orléans, Grand Mallre of Freemasonry, is allied with the Jews. – The Possession of Louis XVI. – The Academy of Metz. – Abbé Grégoire. – The Jews and the Coustiluauale.

– Emancipation. – The old regime and the current regime.

– The new Sinal

III. – The Revolution and the First Empire 289

The Jew during the Revolution. – David and Marat. – The Flight of the Furniture Repository. – Jewish manipulations and the Directory. – Na-
Was Poleon B' a Semite? – Euripus and Freemasonry.

– The great Sanhedrin. – The noble homage paid by the Jews to the Papacy and the Christian Church. – Ingratitude of the Jew as soon as he was master. – The insults to Pius IX. –

The Jewish invasion. – Repressive measures. – The decree of 1808. – Obligation imposed on Jews to take a qoqj.

– Jewish names. – Mayer, Meyer and Maier. – The census– Jewish men under Napoleon I''. – Marshal Ney and the Jews. – Break of the Jews with Napoleon. – Rothschilds after Waterloo. – A mistake by Michelet.

IV. – The Restoration and the July Monarchy . . 33i

The Liquidation Account. – The Rise of the Rothschilds. – The Restoration remains foreign to any sense of justice and of foresight. – French bankers conspire against themselves. – The Orleans family and the love of money. ~

. Rothschild is the real minister of Louis-Philippe. – The chief-work of Tuussenel. – The Jewish kings of the 5th era. – The Saint-Simonism. – Financial philosophy. – The brothers Pereire. – The death of a shoemaker. – The last protestations of the Aryan spirit against the Semitic invasion. – The theatre and literature. – The Chre'liennes of Pétrus Borel. – The Duke of Orleans' contempt for the Jews.

33

^T8 table of contents

V. – The Second Republic and the Second Empire. 361

Crémieux and Goudchaux in power. – RoliischilJ saved from the bankruptcy. – France changes its Jews. – The reign of the Jews of the South. – Pereire, Mirés and Solar. – Return of the ofteosive German Jews. – The organization of the war. – The tempter tempted. – Mgr Bauer. – The German Jew is everywhere at the end of the Empire. – The Wolff agency dispatch and the declaration of war.

VI. – The government of September 4. – The Com– mune. – The Third Republic. • • • 381

The Jews of the Government of National Defense. – The austerity of the Picards. – The continuation of the war. – SpuUer the Baden and Steenackers the Belgian. – The two sovereigns Jews. – Gambelta and Crémieux. – The intervention of a third Jew.–Jewish spies during the war.–The Jews hanged siege. – The entry of the Prussians into Paris – A Stock Exchange in a camp. – The Parisian worker. – The Commune. – Simon Mayer and the column of the Grande Armée. – Like men of the Restoration, the conservatives of the Assembly of Ver– sion is both implacable and unjust. – The talisman of the little ones papers. – The morals of high democracy. – The catholiquens foolishly make themselves the instrument of men's hatreds of September 4. – The Duke of Broglie and his authority of the reality. – The Jewish slaughter in Germany and France. – Paris, depopulated by the Commune, is repopulated by Jews.

– The false Alsatians. – The Jews take the direction of the republican movement. – The manifesto of Parisian commerce-his own. – The Casti ies and the Sina. – The ideas of Count d'Ar-iim. – An insolence of the Baroness de Rothschild. – The embarras of Mr. Decazes. – The restoration of the Monarchy.

– The Count of Chambord did not want to reign. – May 16.

– The government's lack of energy. – The will Fourtou's policy. – Waddington, ambassador of the Jews.

– The Congress of Berlin. – The Jews in Romania. – The France driven from Egypt. – The reign of Gambetta. – The Jews are preparing a new war against Germany. –
The Great Affair. – The Altitude of Prince Bismarck. – lioustan enters the scene. – The Tunisian expedition. – Our poor soldiers. – The Tunisian Land Credit and the fez of Mustapha. – The virtue of Floquet. – Or search again quarrel with Germany. – The affair of the rue Saint Marc. –

TABLE OF CONTENTS 579

The dangerous madness of Déroulède. – The festival of Sedan. –
Gambetta disappears. – The arch-mime Ferry. – Tonkin. –
The search for gold. – Always the financial companies. – Lang-Son. – The convention with the railways. – The Senegalese railways. – Absolute impotence of the poli-Jewish tick. – The Talmudic Tohu goes to the bottom. – The solution of the social question.

BOOK THREE

Gambetta and his court 527

A Jewish Emperor. – The Origins. – The Gamberlé. – The youth. – Moray's obsession – Bar'jei J'Aurevilly and Car. – The journey to Orieat. – September 4 and ia Commune. – The accounts of the National Defense. – The new diapers. – Jewish advertising. – Our illusions. –
The Augustiuni. –Heari Rochefort. – The Anli campaign Gambetlist. – The meeting on Rue Saint-Biaise. – La Fortune contrary. – Gambetta's critical situation. – The Roù in exile at Dau'let's. – Death. – A word from a woman

betta. – The hatred of the intelligent. – The meoris of the huina-nity. – A coronation in the Grand Orient.

%

5^

V <

DS

135

F83D77

tl

Drumont, îido\iard Adolphe
Jewish France

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

f%

. >^-i V ■

i^ V^^'

>>

Cîf-t

^'

■< '.,>■

!;-V-:«^

;r»

4^%'

Pw;:-,

iî^'

French

English

Full text of " Jewish France; an essay in contemporary history "

See other formats

'm

m'^.

^j

^■:^

kJF ...■■

>ri\'3J>

JEWISH FRANCE

Essay on contemporary history

WORKS BY THE AUTHOR IVIÈIVIE

bookseller: baschet

The National Holidays of France, 1 vol. info with engravings.

LTBriAlRIE CHARPENTIER

My Old Paris, 1 vol. iu-18.

PALMÉ BOOKSTORE

The Last of the Trémolins, 1 vol. in-18.

QUANTIN BOOKSTORE

Unpublished papers of the Duke of Saint-Simon.

(Leitres el dispatches from the Spanish Embassy), 1 vol. in-8".

The death of Louis XIV (Journal des Anthoin^).

1 vol., deluxe edition, small octavo.

TO BE PUBLISHED SOON:

Zephyrine Mondray known as Convenience.

(Scenes of contemporary morals)

IN PREPARATION:
JEWISH EUROPE

All reproduction rights reserved. For translation, contact the author.

ùol

EDOUARD DRUAIONT

THERE.

Jewish France

ESSAY ON CONTEMPORARY HISTORY

SECOND VOLUME

Thirteenth Edition

PARIS

Ø. MARPON & E. FLAMMARION

EDITORS
26, RUE RACINE, NEAR THE ODEON

BOOK FOUR

CRÉMIEUX AND THE ISRAELITE ALLIANCE UNIVERSAL

"The Alliance is not a French Alliance"
she is Jewish, German or English,
she is nniTerselle, that's why she walks,
You know why she succeeds.

Crémiedx.

Gordon and Reinach. – The mountebanks. – The role of Crémieux. – The more Judaic oath, – The democratic galtes. – Gre-better, on December 2. – The emancipation of the Algerian Israelites. – The Jew in Algeria. – Usury. – The patriotism of the Jews. – The Algerian Insurrection. – An Arab Hero. – Moki-ani. – Lei Crémieux decree before the Assembly of Versailles. – Fourtoui shirks. – The Jews and French law. – Tirman and his project of expropriation of the Arabs. – Justice is the best po-politics. – The Jew Merguich and the poor. – The so-called civil-modernization. – The English in India. – The Russians in Asia. – Anti-Semitism in Algeria. – The Algerian press. – The Crémieux monument. – U Alliance israélite universelle) its organization, its power. – The Jewish press. – Jews of Germany and Jews of France. – The Bulletin of the Alliance. – Voluntary contributions. – Schools of the Orient. – Maurice of Hirsch and Biscoifsheim magnificent at our expense. – The will-Crémieux's ment. – What is capture and threshold dementia in a Christian is an act of intelligent and thoughtful generosity at a Jew's house.

He

Gambetta's Reinach recounted in the Revue poW tic and literary, his meeting in Egypt with Gor-Don, the soldier-apostle. No doubt the Christian hero will smell it.' first this young Jew with disdain, and wondered, on seeing him-it is worth in these parts, if he were going to put the cataracts of the Nile in actions; but one bonds quickly on a journey, and the English talked with Reinach; he did not hide from him what he thought of Disraeli and other rulers of his kind whom he calls-milk the mountehanks, the acrobats.

The word perfectly describes the class of statesmen, to which belong Disraeli, Gambetta, Lasker, the Gremieux. The policy of the Richelieus, the Golberts, of the Bismarcks is simple; the policy of the Jews has always the air of a fairground performance; it is both Roman-nesque and basely, greedy. One invariably finds there a grand display of pompous principles of liberty, equality, of fraternity, a program of progress that is never held and which quickly reveals the financial matter, a sales pitch of emancipation and improvement which translates always by the most intolerable persecution and extortion of sums of money. Bankers and bankers walk together.

Among these mountehanks^ Grémieux occupies however a special place. Gambetta, with his inexhaustible eloquence and his Mangin-like appearance, was hardly more than a character lift your biceps while swinging your chest.

JEWISH FRANCE

Here comes the snoring donkey skin;
Come in, nannies and soldiers!
Pockmarked men will not pay.

Crémieux, himself, was in the hut, or, to be more precise, to say, behind the canvas. He was the true impresario of the contemporary comedy in France. We are too willing to see in him only the puppet in the yellow dressing gown who, sitting near a blazing fire, appeared from time to time in front of the regiments parading under his balcony in Tours and in Bordeaux, and cried: "Brave soldiers, go and do yourselves kill I The exercise is good at this time; I return to to heat up. » The bells of the Punchinello have made us forget too much Isaac Moses, the repository of the wisdom of Israel, worthy of to wear like an ancient Gohene-Hagadol the miszenophet to white veil, the mehil fringed with scarlet and decorated with bells gold and the khoschen enriched with twelve fine stones on on which the names of the tribes were engraved.

Beneath this grotesque, there was a Jewish Nazi, a prince of Jewry which exerted the most profound influence on the evolution of the predestined people, and led from the front, like a Prime Minister, foreign policy and politics interior. There was a man of admirable devotion who, leaving to Gambetta the material enjoyment of power, the satisfaction of coarse appetites, to the Rothschilds satisfaction of foolish vanities, accomplishes its work in a discreet half-tone, like a Joad who would act half hidden in the folds of the veil of the Temple.

Sovereign Grand Master of the Scottish Rite, President of V Universal Israelite Alliance, important leader of the demo-French cracy, Crémieux embodied the Masonic revolution- than in what it had of most complete. He contributed, more than any other, to confiscate the French Revolution for the benefit of Jewry, will give rise to a movement which had been mixed on the one hand of ideal, of generous aspirations, of dreams of a better organization, a strictly Jewish character: it prepared and he announced loudly, in the last years of his life, the messianic reign, the era awaited since so long as all nations will be subject to Israel,

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 5

the race blessed by Jehovah.

From the very beginning, Grémieux was inspired by a single idea. The Jews had to give up living apart, differentiating themselves from the rest of the nation, to merge with the community of in any case, to momentarily disregard, in the be- care, of customs that were dear to them, even to bear the sight of the abhorred symbols of the Christian religion. only in this way could they act effectively, and destroy what they hated so much. First enter the common law to force others out, such was the instructions imposed on his own by Gremieux.

It seemed as if it was inspired by the canticle of the Fen- Masons deurs (1).

Air: My father was a pot.

Depending on the wood, a good splitter

Save his address.
Some want stiffness.
Others of flexibility.
Always on the straight line
Put down your tool,

(1) Ritual of Forest Masonry containing everything that has to do with at the Charbonnerie and at the Penderie followed by an analysis of fourteen secret political associations^ by FM Ragon, former Venerable.

JEWISH FRANCE

If YOU want to split,
The well-soaked corner,
Well put together, well struck,

The wood will have to split.

If you split a young abalone,

Take care of the corner;
Wisely, with the chisel,
Arrange the opening;
Gradually
We open a shed
To the docile instrument;
If we rush too much,
Often the gallop
Hurts the fragile abalone.

In 1839 already, he was struggling like a devil, or rather like an evil devil, to abolish the oath more judaico.

We know how this little-known event happened.

In May 1839, a lawsuit was initiated between a woman Wolff, residing in Lixheim, canton of Phalsbourg, and a resident of Drulingen (Bas-Rhin), district of Saverne, regarding a debt that he claims

The judges gave the Wolff woman the oath more Judaic.

Mr. Isidore, then rabbi of Phalsbourg, and since great rabbi of France, was invited, by stamped document, to administer the oath. On the day indicated by the summons, the litigants and witnesses arrived before the temple, and found it closed. Mr. Isidore clearly stated that he refused his assistance.

—It is only as a rabbi, he said, that I can to take this oath in the temple, before the book of the Law,

CR1^ . BETTER AND UNIVERSAL ISAXELITE ALLTANCE 7

the sanctuary opened. Today, it would be an oath exceptional, I refuse. The more Judaico oath carries attack on our rights as French citizens.

At present, when a religious person wants to defend his rights of French citizen, all the Jewish newspapers overwhelm him insults, call him a rebel, defame him on all tones. No Catholic then insulted Mr. Isidore.

The Saverne court, before which the debate was brought, declared himself incompetent and, the influence of the Rothschilds already With the help of the all-powerful, the Council of State ruled in favor of Mr. Isidore, following a very skillful plea from Crémieux (1). We know that after having started to ask take the oath like everyone else, the Jews Lisbon, Moyse, Camille Dreyfus undertook a campaign for prevent the French from taking the oath, as they do were used to.

Crémieux does the same for teaching. The Jews had an understandable preference for schools where children were taught the Torah, Christ" who sanctifies our classes, caused them a feeling of horror. Crémieux insisted anyway that the young people be sent a session at eV Alliance israélite, have in your home the small piece of wood consecrated with the name of God (a mezuzah), have your children kiss it in the morning at their getting up in the evening when they go to eat their meal at home, but send them to secular schools."

(1) The more Judaico oath was reestablished in Alsace-Lorraine since Raonexion. It is lent to the Israelite recruits on the unrolled sepher, in the presence of the rabbi.

8 JEWISH FRANCE

The old Freemason knew well that after some time, with the pressure from the Lodges, we would not hesitate to to sadden the souls of millions of Catholics so as not to offend—to be some little Jew whom the sight of the crucifix might irritate cer (1).

Gremieux, in fact, had a quality, master; one would have could apply Bismarck's words to him: this The true politi—that, like private matters, is done as much with con—birth of people's character than with that of their inte—interests.)) He was convinced that with the French one could dare everything and that they would submit to everything docilely.

One day when I was talking about the decrees with Dumas, he told me simply said: "Catholics are cowards!" What—

A few days later, my colleague at La Liberté, Joseph Cohen, who has published two works of real value: the Deicides and the Pharisees, repeated to me: "The Catholics—They are cowards! If someone had wanted to do this to us what we do to you, we would all have lain down in front of the chapels and the troop would not have dared to advance.

Catholics endure everything. Those who can save—sell their children, but they quietly let them deprave the other children, before their eyes, without even daring to refuse the money they are asked for for this harmful work.

Gremieux had a clear idea of the weakening of energy and national intelligence. He was certain that with a few words, we can play with modern French

(1) See on this subject a curious brochure by Mr. Aristide Astruc: Teaching among the ancient Jews (discipline, program, secularism, obligation), in which the author, full of admiration for Ferry, iuotre that the plan of current education is identically the

as one wishes. The naive confidence that the people had in This man is absolutely unheard of. On December 2nd, the workers, convinced that this joker democrat loved them really, came to seek him to put him at their head. Crémieux who, with Fould and all the Jews, was then with the Empire, was naturally very embarrassed. But it is to Mr. de Maupas that we must borrow the story of this anecdote spicy.

On the morning of December 2nd (1), I received a visit from a very kind woman whose husband, a famous lawyer and mountaineer had not been arrested on occasion. It is against this omission that came to protest Ms. G... "I am in despair," she told me; "my house is invaded by the most sinister figures. A swarm of bandits ask my husband to put himself at the head of the resistance- tance, to provoke a riot; he still preaches patience to them, but he will be forced to give in to their obsessions; they will lead him to the barricades and will have him killed. There is only one way for me to find some peace and quiet, to save my husband's life, [and this means is available only to you, Mr. Prefect. » And as I seemed to be wondering what kind of service M'»^ G... wanted to appeal, she added: "Oh, that's good simple, Mr. Prefect, have him arrested. I know very well that you will not harm him and his abominable friends will not be able to less go and get it in Mazas."

But the peaceful mountaineer had done nothing yet, at this hour, to motivate the rigors so ingeniously dreamed of by M'^ G... in an excess of conjugal devotion. I did not want resort to the heroic means that was asked of me. I promised only- I asked my visitor to keep a close eye on her husband. kept my word, and I was able to see, what I had never doubted, that the most threatening speeches were often only a debt

(1) Memoirs on the Second Empire,
II

10 JEWISH FRANCE

paid to too demanding friends, and that in the day of danger one leaves<5- knows the thorny task for the fools and the brainless of the party, those whose job is to get themselves killed for the greater profit of some ambitious people.

Our Republican lawyer remained within the healthy and traditional dignity of party leader, gave much advice, did not shrink from no extremity in his words, exhausted himself even more than the platform in protests of love for freedom, for the people, for democracy; but there came a time when his ardor for language upset the agents in charge of monitoring him. What It was not my surprise to receive a report which announced the ar- remains of the fiery mountaineer! Had my agents taken him to serious, or, happier around my subordinates than she has- had been near me, Ms. G... had she finally obtained from them that they lent themselves to her prudent sollicitudes? She was able to sleep in peace; she finally saw the favor she was asking for come true: her husband was under lock and key (1).

There is such a hammy side to the Jew, such contempt for public that Crémieux, in the trial of a lady Ronconi, that he was pleading before the court, recounted in detail what he had endured the coup for the cause of freedom. This which is quite nice, is that he brought into his dis- M'^ Crémieux runs, despairing at the thought of what suffered her unfortunate husband plunged to the bottom of a dungeon. "Mr. Crémieux," said Compère Frédéric on this subject Thomas in his Little Famous Causes, inherited the privilege- Montaigne's legion who knew how to speak of himself without oflusqueï nobody." Mr. de Maupas must have laughed.

(1) This is the counterpart to the story of Lockroy going to get arrested in Clamart, in 1871, to escape his auuid beyond Coumiuue.

He

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE COVENANT 1 I

Isn't Gordon's mountebank quite complete?

This did not prevent the country, when the soil was invaded, from take this old Jewish lawyer to organize the victory.

Never did the Jew, perhaps, assert himself more odiously indifferent to everything that concerns the Fatherland, more implacable- concerned about himself and his race, that in the decrees then issued by Grémieux for remancipation Algerian Israelites.

The Government of National Defense, let us note first of all, had no right to modify the regime of Algeria; by seizing power he had, by a remains of modesty, the care to declare that he only took it

ment the Algerian organization, Grémieux therefore committed a usurpation within a usurpation. But these scruples do not are not among those who arrest a Jew, and Gremieux does not issued no less than fifty-two decrees on the colony apart, of course, from the appointment of civil servants.

Was Gremieux any more unaware of the troubles he was going to to excite, in a region where everything commanded us to maintain-hold of the status quo, so as not to weaken our evil further-happy country powerless to resist the enemy who pressed it on all sides? He was, on the contrary, admirably" informed of the situation, he knew the hostility that reigned between the Arabs and the Jews (4); he had been many times

(1) This hatred was such that Mérimée, whom I suspect of having was a little Judaizing and who, in any case, had never been baptized, tells in his Letters to Paniziyy that to animate the turcoa against the Austrians during the Italian campaign, or had only had to tell them that they were Jews in front of them.

12 FRANCE JUTVE

to plead in Algeria and he had witnessed fights that occurred between Muslims and Israelites regarding religious holidays. By taking advantage of such a moment to issue the decree which naturalized Algerian Jews, he therefore purely betrayed and simply France to serve the interests of its race.

In 1871, this measure had a particular character-ly odious. The Arabs had heroically done their duty during the war. These "black devils," like the called the Prussians, who jumped under the grapeshot, had amazed the enemy at Wissembourg and Wœrth. Albert Duruy, who, in order to go straight to the fire, had committed himself among these Algerian riflemen, told me many times the almost fantastic effect they produced with their cries savages, their joy in hearing the powder speak, their way to rush forward like tigers. For this comrade, whom they called "the son of the vizier," these fierce people had to both respect and affection. When, in Wissembourg, the riflemen scattered, kneeling, in the hops-nières, received the order to hold until the last moment to protect the retreat, Duruy involuntarily lowered the head under the hail of bullets. Suddenly, he feels a hand of iron that falls on his shoulder icaAs not for! as not for/ a Turk shouted at him, pointing, as if to laugh at the danger, his white teeth shining on his coppery face.

It would only be half surprising if the government of the aunt to those heroic Arabs who, after having fought so long-time against us, defended us in the hour of peril (1).

(1) General Bosquet was one of the first to foresee the services that native troops could provide. In a letter, written on January 30, 1856, to General Randou, then govern-

CREAMY AND UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALUANCE 43

Rome emancipated the slaves who had fought for it during the Social War, and some proclamation, honoring those who had shown themselves of the title of French citizen worthy of the name, would have produced a considerable effect in Algeria.

But the men of Tours did not consider the things like that. Besides the Arab who fights, there is in Algeria an abject race that lives only on shameful trafficking, which squeezes to the point of bleeding the unfortunates who fall under his claws, which enriches itself with the remains of others. It is to this race that had acquired all the sympathies of the Government of National Defense, and more specifically-Crémieux.

What the Jew is in Algeria, nothing of what we see here cannot give us an idea of it, because Jewish usury, which has reached in certain countries, in Alsace in particular, proportions, is nothing compared to Arab wear.

The Emperor's letter on Algeria cites in this order one fact among a thousand (4):

In November 1861, two douars of the Djebela tribe (Aghalih of Mostaganem), affected by several bad years consecutive, had no seed grain. The main members of these douars, their caïd at the head, had recourse to a Israelite from Mostaganem. He agreed to deliver barley to them at neur of Algeria, he said: "One day France will find among the Arabs, its Arab legions, as Rome once found them its colonies in Spain and Gaul, and that is a good question to ask prepare, I believe, as an appendix to the recruitment system general of our army... »

^1) Letter on French policy in Algeria, addressed by the Emperor to Marshal MacMahon, Duke of Magenta, Governor General of Algeria.

\TO JEWISH FRANCE

exorbitant price of 36 francs per hundredweight. This sum was to be returned at the following harvest, not in money but in kind, at the price current markets. Now, in August 1861, barley was worth 7 francs. the quintal and the people of Djebela had to return nearly six quintals rate for one, that is, they had borrowed at 600 p. 0/0 (1).

Thanks to these methods, the Jew enjoys contempt in Algeria that we understand. He can enter at any time under the tent and in the house of an Arab, the women do not cut themselves will not even take off their veils, for them the Jew is not not a man.

An Arab would feel dishonored if he killed a Jew.

In the case of the caravan of Guefsa^ in 1871, one of the accused, Ben Ganah, usually impassive, had as it were an explosion of fury when he was accused of the murder of a Jew. "Me," he said, "kill Jews! I killed Hammama, I was avenging my father, but you don't kill a Jew, you don't don't kill a woman. If I had killed a Jew, would I have come will offer me your justice? I will not dare show in my tribe.

Never, says Mr. du Bouzet (2) on this subject, never a rider of the

(1) In a republican newspaper, and certainly not hostile to the Jews, France, M. Hugucunet wrote on July 3, 1884, to, the occasion of the senicunic troubles of Algiers: "The wear is really dreadful. Here is an example: The Turcos and the Spahis, at the the day before receiving their pay, borrow a franc to pay back two the next day, that is to say 3,650 francs for 100.

Thomson, the deputy of Orau, and the Jew Etienne who, unlike to the law, is both inspector general of railways and de-whore, would have had a great opportunity to praise the virtues of Israel other's sympathies to those who serve France.

(2) /.(?To the native Israelites of Algeria, petition against the decree of October 24, 1870, by Mr. Charles dn B'^nz'^t, former prefect of Or^n, former general commissioner in Algeria.

CRÉMTEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 15

Nemencha will not admit that the son of the great boss Ganah could have killed a Jew, recognizing him as such. The last of the shepherds of the tribe would be ashamed of such a murder. A bandit will murder a Israelite isolated to eliminate the only witness to his crime. But be born so that their lives may be spared.

We could not do better, moreover, to show who were the interesting protégés of Crémieux, that to reproduce the portrait full of color and movement— that Mr. de Maupassant, in Au soleil, traced from Arab Jew.

In Bou-Saada, we see them squatting in filthy dens, bloated with fat, sordid and watching the Arab like a spider watches for the fly. They call him, try to lend him a hundred sous against a note that he will sign. The man senses the danger, hesitates, does not want; but the desire to drink and other desires still ti- mock: a hundred sous represent so many pleasures for him 1 II finally gives in, takes the silver coin and signs the greasy paper. At the end of six months he will owe ten francs, twenty francs at the end of one year, one hundred francs after three years. Then the Jew sells his land, if he has any, or, if not, his camel, his horse, his donkey, all he finally owns.

The chiefs, caïds, aghas, or bach'agas, also fall into the griffons of these raptors which are the scourge, the bleeding wound of our colony, the great obstacle to civilization and the well-being of Arabic.

When a French column goes to raid some rebel tribe, a swarm of Jews follows her, buying at a low price the booty resold to the Arabs as soon as the army corps has moved away. If one seizes, by example, six thousand sheep in a region: what to do with these beasts? Drive them to the cities? They would die on the way, because how to feed them, make them drink for two or three hundred kilometers of bare earth that we will have to cross?

And then it would be necessary, to take and keep such a contoi, twice as many tioupesque counts the column. So the kill? What a massacre and what a loss! And then the Jews are there who ask to buy, at two francs each, sheep worth two francs twenty. Finally the Treasury will always gain twelve thousand francs: we gives in to them. Eight days later, the first owners re- took their sheep for three francs a head. French revenge doesn't cost much.

i6 JEWISH FRANCE

The Jew is master of all the South of Algeria. He is hardly of Arab, in fact, who does not have a debt, because the Arab does not like to ren- He prefers to renew his ticket at one or two hundred for hundred. He always thinks he's saved when he gains time. He must- would require a special law to change this deplorable situation.

by all means as unfair as possible, and the real ones traders are Mozabites...

We can complete the picture with a few words that a writer, who will certainly not be accused of being a supporter of the Inquisition, dedicated to the same characters in the ou-book entitled: France, Algeria, Colonies.

Algerian Jews, says Mr. Reclus, were naturalized en masse, by decree, while we fought against the hordes of disciplinaries of the evangelical people. They certainly did not deserve it, occupied as they were only with banking, commerce, brokerage, peddling and usury; none of them holds the plow, water the gardens or prune the vines, and there are very few tradesmen among these great-nephews of the supplant-Esau's son. Not one of us had died under the cannonballs. from the North, like these Berbers, these Arabs, these Negroes, who ferment among the heroes of Reichshoffen; and if they did not defend Algeria against us, from 4830 to 1871, they will not defend it either more against our enemies.

Had these Jews at least recommended themselves by their love for France? They had limited themselves, according to their coutume, to make money in both camps.

"At the beginning of the conquest," said the captain

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE COVENANT 17

Villot, they served as spies in turn for the French and for El Hadj Abd-El-Kader, standing in an attitude usually neutral, until fortune had decided in our favor."

While the Arabs fought for us Jews, on the contrary, applauded our defeats with the greatest indecent cynicism. Captain Villot recounted the scenes which took place in Constantine at the news of the disaster of Sedan. All this cosmopolitan population, "really drunk with joy, » stamped his feet with happiness and gave himself up to the streets to vile dances. There was, however, one detail touching. The bust of the Emperor had been thrown onto the pavement; some natives picked up the debris and took it away. They were. Isn't it moving, this sovereign who possessed the most beautiful empire on earth and which no longer has any faithful followers that some Arabs, who remember that this vanquished man is came to visit them once in all the splendor of his power ance, that he was interested in them, that he prevented their de-possession? *

that by rushing, with the Spaniards and the Maltese, on the unfortunate General Walsin-Esterhazy who, still suffering from a wound and unable to defend himself, was overwhelmed with mistreated, beaten and forced to replace himself to barge (1).

(1) Here is the significant certificate issued by Mr. Warnier to the captain Taine Guichard, who had courageously defended his general.

"I, the undersigned, Prefect of Algiers, on the date of October 28 and called by General Walsin Esterhazy to accompany him from the palace of the government at the Admiralty, where the triumph of the Commune revolutionnaire forced him to embark, certifies, as an eyewitness sharing the dangers of General Walsin Esterhazy, that without the as-

1^ JEWISH FRANCR

Algeria was then the scene of unheard-of episodes, to which this element of impudence and pitiffism is mixed together, this side acrobat, says Gordon very well, who entered the public affairs following the Jews. The officers' affair left: free, on condition of no longer bearing arms against the Piusse, seems a chapter of Tartarin of Tarascon, a history of Cannebière.

You know what scum the cities of Algeria. Since the opening of the campaign, all the thunderbolts of war, who ranted against our generals, had spent their time making absinthe in cafes during that the others walked under the burning sun, suffered thirst, hunger, fought one against ten. When our unfortunate officers, overwhelmed with fatigue and most of them wounded, arrived from Sedan and Metz, these jokers refused to let them stay in Algeria, as a pretext that the sight of these flower heads, that is the name that was given to them, offended and defiled the sight of the patriots. Perhaps, these officers would have been better advised not to sign the setback, but frankly this military susceptibility, of the part of people who did not fight, is it not the assistance of Captain Guichard and the men of the 2nd battery of artillery of the militia of Algiers, which he commanded, we would have been exposed to all the anger of several thousand Jews, Mal-silent, of Spaniards, misled by some French lunatics, and that, if the insults we have suffered have been limited to insults and insults, we owe it to the energy and dedication of the escort of the 2nd battery of the artillery of the Algiers militia.

certificate to serve as such.

"Warnier,
"deputy for the department of Algiers."

CRT^.MTEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE!9

The height of comedy? Isn't that from Erokmann-Chatrian?
African?

Behind this apparent patriotic delirium, there was everything just a few German agents who distributed money to the leaders of this international crowd for prevent our officers, by returning to take their place in Algeria, do not make other officers available, including there was a great need in France.

These proofs of devotion only strengthened Crébetter in his design. He was, as he himself says,
"all to the joy, one of the greatest of his life, of giving to thirty thousand of his coreligionists the title of citizen French." He prepared these decrees without consulting person who was aware of the affairs of the colony; he had been given all the files concerning Algeria and he took care when he withdrew to steal the main ones parts (1).

On October 24, 1870, the Defense Government pubb'a
the famous decree.

The Government of National Defense decrees:
The native Israelites of the departments of Algeria are declared-French citizens. Consequently, their real status and their sta-personal tut will be effective from the promulgation of this decree regulated by French law; all rights acquired until day remain inviolable.

Any legislative provision, any senatus-consultum, decree, reg-any regulation or order to the contrary is abolished.
Done at Tours, October 24, 1870.

Ad. Grémikux, L. Gambetta, A. GlaishBizoin,

L. FOURICHON.

(1) Nothing could be found of the documents with the help of which the decrees of October 24 were prepared. (Report of Mr. de la Sicotière.)

This decree, we understand, excited in Algeria a unanimous indignation. On this point, we refer our readers to the Parliamentary Inquiry into the actions of the government of National Defense and the admirable report of Mr. de La Sicollière, which is a true page of history. conservative majority of the Assembly limited its action to document; she will bequeath the most interesting materials to the future, which will not be able to understand how, enlightened to this point on the crimes of the men of September 4- In September, she hesitated to pursue them, how, convincing cue of the misfortunes that the Republic had brought upon the country, she did not have the courage to make it disappear from following. Meliora video, deteriora sequor, that was his motto.

Listening to the testimony of witnesses in this investigation, by reading everything that has been written on this question by those who were well placed to judge her, it is not possible to doubt that Crémieux was the main author, the only one responsible for the Algerian insurrection.

For me, said Admiral de Gueydon, the assimilation decree was the 'the determining cause of the insurrection, the Muslims were extremely wrinkled.

Hatred of classes and races, interests hurt, says the captain ViUot, jealousies and resentments, such were the consequences of this unfortunate decree. The Muslim natives were disgusted by to see their security enemies raised to the dignity of French citizens laries, people they consider cowardly, servile and mevaluable. "Why then this preference," they said, "is it (lue The Jews, like us, shed their blood in Crimea and Italy, in Mexico; do they have ten thousand of their prisoners in Germany ? "

Mr. de Presbois, retired squadron leader, former representative of Algeria, in 1848, was more severe Again

CREAMY AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE COVENANT 21

At the time when a so-called Republican or defense committee obtained the mass naturalization of Jews, that is to say of the part less interesting of the Algerian population and certainly the more derisory from the point of view of defense, the insurrection of the Arab and Kabyle populations responded to it.

When they learned of Mr. Crémieux's decree which naturalized the Jews, their exasperation turned into deep contempt for the Jews of Bordeaux to request their assimilation into a me- race prized. Then the first symptoms of uprising appear- For those who know these indigenous races, proud and warlike, it is obvious that their pride was revolted to see themselves me-born to be subordinate to the Jews. The French in their eyes descended to the level of the Jews.

Thus, Jews naturalized for electoral maneuvers, after having caused us a lot of embarrassment since the day of the conquest, were to put the colony in danger.

General Lucrot wrote in 1871 (The truth about Algérie): "The decree of Mr. Crémieux on the naturalization of Jews set fire to everything.

M. Serre {The Martyred Arabs, Studies on Vinsurrection of 1871 in Algeria):

- Without the naturalization of Jews by the Crémieux decree and without the events of the Commune, the revolt would not have acquired the terrible and universal character that she showed.

Akhhar said on its part, on November 15 1872:

The naturalization of Jews was one of the main causes of the insurrection; it threw insult in the face of the Muslim people by proclaiming the supremacy of the native Jew over the Arab and over Kabyle Island.

The insurrection broke out when the Muslim populations saw, at the end of January 1871, the Israelites doing the func-lions of jurors. "Only then," says the explanatory statement of the draft repeal, these populations, who had not been struck by the declaration of October 24, understood that el- could become subject to the jurisdiction of the native Israelites. And if this interpretation of the facts were contested, we report- would shove that the Kalifa of the Medjana, Si Mokrani, in returning the officer's cross of the Legion of Honor, made knowing that he would rather die with weapons in hand than to tolerate the affront made to his race, by placing the Israeli- yours above her. The granting of the right to sit, made to the latter, is therefore both premature and dangerous; It was, at least, one of the causes of the insurrection.

^2 JEWISH FRANCE

In front of the oblique Jew like Crémieux, who betrays the country that has entrusted itself to him, it is necessary to place the noble and loyal el Mokrani.

Mokrani is the most complete personification of these great Arab lords, such as Fromentin, took pleasure in show them to us under the finely toned skies that he paints so well, to tell us about them in his colorful books.

Passionate about beautiful weapons and beautiful horses, superb on their stirrups in the brilliant fantasias, grave and dignified at the threshold of their tents, wishing for the welcome to their guests, lavish when they treated our officers, these leaders, after long resistance, had been fascinated and seduced by the bravery of our soldiers; they were proud to wear the Legion of Honour on their burnouses neur, this flower now withered, this emblem henceforth prostitute who, in the past, meant courage, talent or virtue. Terrible enemy, sincere friend, Mokrani was worthy of life at the time of Yousouf-ben-Ayoub-Salah-Eddyn and com-

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE COVENANT 23

fight with crusader knights (1). Guest by a fact of arms worthy of heroic times, in a single combat—to say that he had won the officer's cross, by killing with his own hand, in the middle of his supporters, Tagitateur Bou Barghla

When a French officer transmitted to Bach-Aga the Crémieux's decree, he spat on it and returned it to the envoyeur by simply saying: <j: I will never obey a Jewish 1 y>

This man who had all the generosity did not want attack France, which was struggling with Germany. He waited chivalrously that we may dispose of all our forces to fight. It was then that he sent back his decoration—to General Augeraud and that by courteously thanking him—in recognition of the consideration he had shown him, he addressed him the declaration of war which ended with these words: "If I continued to serve France, it is because it

(1) He claimed, as we know, to be descended from a Montmorency who, surprised by a storm, would have settled in Algeria and, by more than one point; the destiny of this intrepid leader, victim of the feelings more "raised and pushed as if in spite of himself to a rebellion which his heart secretly protested, recalls the tragic fate of the vanquished from Casielnaudary.

The Jewish press, to dishonor Mokrani, maintained that it was the embarrassed situation of his affairs which would have pushed him to the re-about. Nothing could be further from the truth. Mokrani's own debts had he had, with his usual magnanimity, borrowed considerable sums bidérables to give wheat to the men of his tribes. The Maré-ichal Mac-Mahou had given him his word that if he was not Repaid on time by its debtors, France would pay it [what he had put forward for a public service on the additional centimes-tribal councils. The Defense Government, which wasted money to enrich suppliers like Ferrand, refused, naturally, to honor the commitment of the Marshal and one said to Bach-Agha: "Get out of there as best you can."

24 JEWISH FRANCE

was at war with Prussia and that I did not want to increase-lie about the difficulties of the situation. Today, peace is done and I intend to enjoy my freedom. y>

Mokrani fell as a hero; he got himself killed, not wanting serve dishonored France, nor fight any longer a country he had loved, a country where he had been a guest in the festivals of Compiègne and Fontainebleau. For to be more sure of dying, he left, him, the rider without rival, this horse which perhaps, in a desperate impulse, would have snatched his master from danger. "It was in Oued-Zeloun, he met our zouaves who were crowning a hillock, he could pass, he attacked and how? He came down from horse, he, the great lord and, on foot, at the head of his hesitant troop, he climbed the hill and marched forward until-until a bullet hits him in the forehead. He hoped that his death, announced by him several days ago, puts-a fine line to the insurrection (1). »

Sidi Mokrani, in any case, had not obeyed Jews. Among the French officers that the fatality of the times when we were reduced to the sad necessity of putting their sword in the service of those who lived on usury and theft, many wept and perhaps envied the fate of the Sheikh without weakness and without fear.

A funny detail, in fact, and which is very Jewish, it was our poor soldiers, our sons of Christian mothers who were obliged to get killed to ensure the rights of citizens to usurers of Algeria, who did not even deign to defend the privileges that had been granted to them.

(1) Plea for Bou-Mezrag before the Assize Court of Cons-Italian (April 27, 1873).

Except for very rare exceptions, says M. du Bouzet, the Israelite in-
A native cannot become a soldier: war is not in his nature.
morals. It takes him three months to learn how to fire a shot-without falling backwards. How much more to hear whistling the bullets without fleeing! Now, you are not unaware, gentlemen, that in the event of an Arab insurrection, all French people in Africa must lend active support to our soldiers. Will an exception be made in favor of Israelites who have become citizens? This privilege would be unfair.
Will they march with the true French? Their spirit so little milisilence will be a dangerous example. Finally, whether they fight or flee, their presence in our ranks will be enough to shake the loyalty of our Muslim auxiliaries and to exasperate the enemy.

The Explanatory Memorandum leaves no room for doubt about this point :

During the Arab resurrection, the Israelites did not lend themselves with extreme reluctance to military service. All the everyone knows that in Algeria, apart from a few very few exceptionsbreuses, the temperament and morals of the Israelites refuse absolutely to useful incorporation into the ranks of our army.
Those who did Marohé, in small numbers, were unable to accommodate themselves to the ordinary soldier in the field, for the reason that their religious law-gieuse opposed it. They had to be sent back all the more quickly because the Muslim riflemen and the men of the goums could not accept the idea of shooting their coreligionists Arabs sending Jews into our ranks. So, for reasons-sounds which are specific to them or which are linked to their relationships with of other races, the Israelites are incapable of military service.

The Jews were afraid; they were merciless.

Arabs, who had surrendered to the formal word, to the written word from our officers, who had commitments signed by generals Lallemand, Bonvalet^ Augeraud, were executed without our officers daring to protest against these infamies which degraded them themselves, which
II 2

26 LA. FRANCE JUÎVR

destroyed forever the fine reputation of loyalty of our army.

At Rebal, an unfortunate Arab had kept on him the letter d/amaii signed by our generals and, naively obs-never to his commitments, he handed it to the officer who commanded the firing squad. The other, instead of obeying the voice of honor and to have some Jews executed at the place of this vanquished, had the sad courage to command the his head, as if in a sort of silent protest, the lie written by a Frenchman.

The poor Arab fell while lifting above

What is even more striking is that the Arabs were carefully excluded from the amnesty; amnesty was granted to French people who had murdered and burned, there was no mercy—ble for these men who were also excusable for having wanted to regain their independence that we would be to revolt against the Prussians if we were conquered by them (1).

(!) In the day of the event, Aurélien Scholl, almost alone in the press, took up the defense of these unfortunate people to whom he consecrated two or three eloquent articles.

The Arab question was the main cause of Tam's rejection. In February 1886. We know that Henri Rochefort had taken the initiative of this proposal, which Crijanowski failed, better known under the name of Sigismond Lacroix and who, in his capacity of Poles, would have been almost excusable to seek to restore freedom to Berezowski. The pamphleteer took advantage of the opportunity to execute his colleague from the extreme left whom he convinced, evidence in hand, in the issue of V Intransigent of January 8, 1886, to be an agent provocateur. It is rare, when two Republicans explain together, that we do not learn some truth.

All this point out to study the evidence. Nothing curious as

CRIMIEUX T?r L* ALLIANCE ISRAËLITE UNIVERSELLE 27

What is interesting is to see how this question ended in front of the National Assembly. You believe perhaps, among these Catholics who form the majority, a man will stand up and slap the fanatic with his contempt old man who, in the interest of his own, unleashed the bride—vaunted insurrection which cost the lives of so many French people. You assume that at least one voice will be raised for pay tribute to all those Arabs killed in the war the anger of the Jewish deputies who are beside themselves at the mere thought of amnesty for these Arabs, prisoners already for long

he cries, that they burned farms, women and children?
Thomson states that these captives cannot be freed because took advantage of the circumstance to steal their property and that it would be necessary give them back. Camille Dreyfus speaks out strongly against the proposal.

Henri Rochefort, who never thought, is, in this particular case-particular, by his sister's inclination to be independent, a very political provident. This is not the time for us, in fact, to abandonner The species of new law which admitted that the peoples subjected by force'^defend their independence. France is, or rather was, before falling into the hands of the Jews, a country of pure sentiment-ment; Germany, a country of reasoning, on the contrary, is keen to to be able to formulate a theory to support one's actions. The refusal to all forgiveness, the implacability shown to revolted patriots, the right, crudely asserted by Thomson, to seize the property of insurgents, are precedents that Prussia carefully records-ment and which would serve him, on occasion, to exercise all the violences against the Alsatians-Lorrainers who would like to shake off the yoke.

Russia also wanted a Pole to deny this right.
to the insurrection that Poland has so often claimed against its oppressors, and she used Cryjano-wski. All this, yet another times, is useful to look at, from the point of view of the evolution of ideas, clearly shows the end of the legend of revolutionary France, emanating chieftain of nations, generous, quickly forgiving even those that she was forced to back down. There is nothing left but the interest of the Jew which affects our French Assemblies.

2^ JEWISH FRANCE

from Germany, for the defense of a country which had took away their independence.

You don't know Catholic conservatives well; they are clever above all, they do not dare to displease Rothschild, proclaim the truth, show things as they are.
They were already smiling mischievously at that time, and seemed-seemed to say: "Let us do it!" Encouraged by the success of their skill, they still smile today and, different from the good people of the past who died in stating their opinion, they will smile even more smarter on the cart that will take them to the sup-accomplice. "The thin smile" of a conservative politician! What a poem !

The real clever one is Crémieux; it's a pleasure to be-tender to explain to his brothers of the V Israelite Alliance, in the session of May 12, 1872, how he went about it prevent the decree from being repealed; it seems that it is being listened to Simon. Planks, that's what we call letters.

in Masonic jargon (1), are actively exchanged.
when Crémieux was preparing to leave for Algeria, Bar-Thélémy Saint-Hilaire warns him that Admiral de Gueydoa

(1) In Masonic slang, a work is called an architecture, a coin a brick, a feather a pencil, a chan-its a hymn^ a report a column. In terms of table the tablecloth is a sail or a large flag, the napkins are flags, the plates of the tiles or the turntables, the forks of the picks or tridents, bottles from barrels, knives from swords, the glasses of cannons. To eat is to chew, to drink is/fire a cannon.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE COVENANT 29

has just arrived, he gives him his address (1). Crémieux writes to the admiral to ask him for an appointment, but first Having seen him, he asks him for permission. What is it?
It's to tell him that he is an admirable man. You see.
from here the soft, caressing, enveloping Jew.

Fourtou is in turn surrounded. We hear, without attend the conversation of the head of cosmopolitan Jewry, who debunked this little lawyer from Ribérac who became an in-fluent, who explains to him what the High Bank is, who survives everything, who distributes the handsomely paid placesfogs of railway administrators (2). We see-sees the eyes of the Périgourdin light up. "What is "What was I going to do? My God?" he cries, and instead of pressing-to discuss the project for which he is the rapporteur, he pro-puts it to delay.

The repeal decree was filed by Mr. Lam-Brecht, Minister of the Interior, July 21, 1871.

In charge of the report, Mr. de Fourtou had been very affirmative.
and very clearly, he said in particular:

To break this balance between Jews and Muslims, call the Israelites have a privileged place in Algerian society,
Is it not inevitably to awaken hatreds against themselves?

(1) "I was about to leave for Algeria when a happy incident stopped me. I learned that Admiral de GueydoQ was arriving. Mr. Barthélémy Saint-Hilaire wrote to me: My dear friend, the admiral arrived yesterday evening, he lives in Paris, 9, rue d'Aguesseau. I have already given him your

(2) "Mr. de Fourtou made a report whose conclusions were even worse than the proposed law. But, the conversation that I had with him at Versailles ended with words generous and by the promise that he gave me not to rush the update the agenda for the discussion of this project that I feared at this moment. >-

H 2.

30 L\ JEWISH FRANCE

still asleep, kindle against us implacable anger Thus throwing into our colony a seed of uprisings and revolts T

.....The ^naturalization of Jews has become one of the texts of predication ii with the help of which it was possible to produce, maintain and develop for the insurrectionary movement. To exalt religious fanaticism^lieus of the people, the instigators of the revolt said to him: the Jew will be "soldier, and he will be able to fight alongside a Muslim; the Jew will |>part of the militias and he will be able to apprehend a Muslim in person.
The Jews will now be the masters, and this is the reward.
of our blood shed in torrents for the cause of France, on the battlefields of Europe!

2nd speeches inflamed souls; and when, in fact, the Muslims saw the Israelites being included on the jury lists, the French authorities were reduced to this, in order to appease their fury, to explain to them that the Jews, always rejected by the minister-public or by the defense, would ultimately never be called to judge them. The Muslim leaders therefore preached in a kind of holy war, and we believe we can affirm that the decree to be repealed, perhaps unrelated to the initial causes of the insurrection, exercised a real and fatal influence on its intensity and its duration.

On August 21, 1871, emergency relief was requested and granted.

Gremieux became so agitated that he prevented the discussion. to come in good time. It was then that Mr. Lambrecht is obliged to propose to the President of the Republic the decrees of October 7-9, 1871, which were limited to making to remove from the naturalization decree what was absolutely abnormal.

The National Assembly, said Mr. Lambrecht in his report to the president, separated before deciding on the bill which had been presented with a view to the repeal of the decree of 24 October 1870 which conferred on the native Israelites of Algeria the

in force and must receive its application during the elections, which

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 34

will take place very soon, for the general councils and the municipal councils of the colony, but it is important to prevent the return of the difficulties to which this application has given rise until that here by demanding, from those who will claim the exercise of rights electoral, the prior justification of the indigénat according to the principles of civil law trè?/çaif\

Article 1*"" of the decree was worded as follows:

The President of the Republic, on the proposal of the Minister of the Interior and the Civil Governor of Algeria, decrees:

Article 1: Provisionally, and until it has been stalked by the National Assembly on the maintenance or repeal of the decrees of October 24, 1870, will be considered as indigenous and as such will remain registered on the electoral lists, if they replace- Moreover, the Israelites meet the conditions of civil capacity born in Algeria before the French occupation or born since this time of parents established in Algeria at the time when she pick.

On October 20, Crémieux, including not an electoral college had not wanted in the general elections, found in Algeria a rotten town, where he was named by the Jews who owed him well that.

Crémieux, however, had a moment of fear. The project of repeal which no one was taking care of had followed his course and he was going to be put in discussion. "One morning, said Crémieux, I live by the agenda of the day after the last session this fatal sentence: First deliberation- tion, draft law relating to the Jews of Algeria., emergency declared.

That day Crémieux had gout! You have to hear him tell what he suffered. "I was no longer living," he cries; Gentlemen, when God preserved me at that time, it was that he didn't want to let me die. >

32 JEWISH FRANCE

The salvation of Algeria almost depended on an attack of drop. It was a false alarm. Lambrecht was dead suddenly, which sometimes happens to those who bother Israel, and Gremieux had even shed a few tears over him better had definitely opened the eyes, and who already saw thousands of attendance tokens pass through his dreams, had lost his fine ardor as a reporter. Everything remained in the status quo, and Algeria was abandoned to its unfortunate sort. (1)

Not a single member of the right, I repeat, had enough patriotic foresight to bring the debate back to the platform.

Gremieux had succeeded, he had taken advantage of the catastrophes of the Fatherland to grant its own people the privilege of oppressing those who were better than them and, willingly or unwillingly, we had regularized the encroachment in the name of a fait accompli. This has been the whole policy of the Jews since 1791: war, peace, insurrection, reaction, everything brings them profit. They always advance, we have said, as the country backs down.

It is not without utility to show now what what has become of Algeria thanks to the Grémieux decree. Gomme

(1) It was Victor Lefranc who became minister. When the deliberation came to his order, Mr. de Fourtou, rapporteur of the commission, announced that, in the interval of the coming holidays to take place, the government had extensively modified the decree of October 24, that the commission would examine the new decree which seemed to him to have to put an end to any kind of discussion relating to that of October 24. The case was therefore definitively closed. buried. {Bulletin of the Alliance, session of May 12, 1872}.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 33

As expected, the Jews are the absolute masters of the country. Mr. du Bouzet already predicted this result.

The Jews, he said, must inspire the Christian population and thereby a real fear to the government. Indeed, the Jews form only one and the same party. They are completely devoted and submissive to their religious authority and as there are divisions elsewhere and that there is among them the most perfect union under the influence of the religious leaders who lead them, they will always carry-days on one side only the forces" which they have and will be the masters-elections (1).

The Jews, ruling the country as sovereigns, incessantly drown-notably the French element under waves of Israelites who came from all parts of Africa. In 1875, the inhabitants from Oran, in a petition which had no success,

Israelites registered on the electoral lists of March 31, 1875,

(1) Cartier, the secretary and damned soul of Crémieux, saw himself this situation and he was looking for what he called ingenuously the practical way to avoid highlighting it,

December 23, 1870.

Justice to extraordinary commissioner, Algiers.

"I have been informed of certain localities where naturalized Israelites would alone form the majority within the electoral bodies. Please list them with the number and search for them localities what would be the practical way to avoid highlighting the purely local disadvantages of the progress made. It is not necessary that the emancipation of a race can be criticized by men of freedom on a few accidental examples.

"Cartier."
(Parliamentary inquiry).

34 JEWISH FRANCE

but that at the last moment 1082 Jews had been added barbarians, who had no right to vote (1).

We can guess what this tyranny of the Jew is, avenging the contempt he deserved and suffered for so long Biècles. There is a potentate there, both grotesque and awful, Kanoui, the one they call the Rothschild of Oran; he leads the whole department; the prefect is his humble slave; all government agents are at his disposal-situation.

In the session of November 23, 1885, the discussion of the election of Thomson, grandson-in-law of Grémieux, one of the the most vile among the Jews that Gambetta dragged after him, provides Mr. Andrieux with the opportunity to show what was this vile population.

The Jews of Gonstantin are tampering with their vote, or-sharply, in broad daylight, smooth sell for two or three francs on average (2),

As soon as the town hall, said Mr. Andrieux, distributed the cards electoral, that is to say five or six days before the re-election, we do

(1) The Mزاب, as we know, was annexed in 1882, in defiance of treaties

General La Tour d'Auvergne himself recognized in the pro-complaint that he addressed to the inhabitants when taking possession. The only reason for this annexation was the presence in Ghardaïa notably, as well as at Guerara and Beuian, of 4,000 Israelites who were thus benefited from the rights of French citizens.

(2) An interruption from Mr. Raoul Duval brought out, once again, moreover, the iniquity of the Grémieux decree which deprived the right to vote of brave soldiers to grant it to the Jewish scoundrel. Mr. Andrieux read the testimony of an honest native who had witnessed this ^aflc of voice; he recalled that Lieutenant Soliman ben Slimar had been named a Knight of the Legion of Honor following brilliant military services. "And this man is not an elector, while these "Jews felt it" cried Mr. Raoul Duval with disgust.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE '66

a carefully compiled tally of the Israelites who appear on the electoral lists; they are sent brokers who come find them and demand their cards. The Jews give their cards and receive a deposit on the agreed price. The broker carries the cards and stacks them in a store; on election day, the Jews come to get them; they are given to them; they are formed groups of four to five people who are accompanied by supervisors to the town hall gate and it is only at their exit that they are charged the remainder of the price. This is how which almost all of Gonstantine's Israelite voters voted for, I do not only say of the city of Gonstantine, but of the province as a whole.

The deputies so appointed are called deputies cachirs.

Of course, Jews do not recognize the courts French only as long as they agree with them. When the judges refused, by chance, to sanction something terrible wear of five or six hundred percent, they de-claim that Jehovah did not tell them to obey the civil code.

French, wrote the Figaro correspondent, on the date of November 8, 1883, they are as long as this title provides something advantage, but when it comes to obeying the laws, they are uniquely-Jews and claim to be subject only to the authority of the Consistory.

To cite just one example: that a dispute arises between Israelites and settlers or natives, these will refer, of course-tense, to the ordinary courts, but then gentlemen Jews, all French that the great legislator Crémieux made them, re-will challenge this tribunal, and appeal to the authority of the Consistory.

ruled in favor of declaring themselves incompetent in the disputes which brought them to the bar of the regular court.

What is the reason for this deplorable state of affairs? Quite simply: the power of the children of Israel, a power that has only increased and embellish since they were granted the title of French,

3fi JEWISH FRANCE

From a judgment handed down by the Court of Cassation on June 6 1883, under the presidency of the Jew Bédarrides, it results that civil marriage, registration, as they say in the village, which has no moral value for us and to which we are subject, is not imposed on the Israelites who do not enjoy any less of the rights of French citizens.

Here is one of the considerations of this judgment:

No law, decree or ordinance imposing on Native Israelites Obligation to marry before the officer of French civil status^ any union contracted under these conditions must be considered as the expression of a free and spontaneous wish tired of the parties, especially since the trial judges note sovereignly, as in the present case, that no act of pressure administrative has not even been alleged by the interested party.

Why not put priests on the same footing as the rabbis? Why not leave the Christians the same rights as Jews' and allow them to contract religious marriage without having to go through fia town hall?

Let us enshrine like a pearl, on this subject, the exclamation of the Jew Naquet in the discussion of the law of divorce in Senate: "I protest against the expression of legal adultery, which Mr. Chesnelong used when speaking about divorce. I see a trace of the doctrines of this school which does not recognize-civil marriage is not born. (Complaints on the right.)"

Not only do his coreligionists not recognize civil marriage, but they don't submit to it! What a impudence in this Naquet I

The Israelites naturally kept this holy horror for the profession of arms that Mr. du Bouzet noted. They spend their lives defaming our generals in the days-against our brave Zouave officers articles entitled: Brutes; the others write to the Lantern, like this reserviste, who had come out of the ranks to insult with his quacks! squawks! an old priest who was passing on the road, and who found it very bad that his captain had put him in the hall police for this exploit.

General Davout had proposed to resolve this great problem of organizing the Algerian army in such a way as to do 'faced with an insurrection always possible without resorting to troops from France. He was very struck by this fact that the sending of forty battalions in 1881, while throwing the disorder in the general mobilization, had not had, in Algeria, which had a mediocre effect due to the lack of acclimatization-men and their inexperience of life of A-Africa. Violently attacked by the Jews, in agreement with the Radical deputies of Algeria, still in the front rank when it came to betraying the Fatherland, the general had to give up to any serious reorganization.

Military France has repeatedly given unheard of details on how naturalized Jews undertake their duties. The plague of our African army, says this newspaper, this is military mosaicism (1).

No one has any idea of the repugnant, sickening spectacle offered by the incorporation of Algerian reservists into a regiment, sorry, no not all Algerian reservists, – because the sons of colonists, all in all, put on the uniform with good grace, – but Jewish reservists! Among Algerian Jews, the military spirit is lacking in the most absolute way. There is shame, shame indeed,

(1) Military France ^ issue of December 11, 1884.

II

38 THE JEWISH FRINGE

to give the uniform of the rough soldiers of Inkermann and Palestra to people crying in the ranks for an apostrophe a little rough and who sob when the stage is a bit long.

Tirman, the current governor, does not even receive the French. "On the other hand," says an Algerian newspaper, "he receives the native Jews as soon as they appear, it is good to add that they never show up at the doors of the palaces without being richly weighted.

From time to time the press discloses some of the commits there in agreement with the Jews.

In the mixed commune of Guergour, the natives had still have to pay a sum of 60,000 francs on the war tax from 1871.

The Governor General gives the order to bring in this money into the Treasury coffers. After having deliberated at length, Administrator Chanel and the ca'ld of Arach decide that, without take into account the amounts previously paid, each family native will pay in proportion to his income. What was said was done. But the natives, who had freed themselves previously^ refused to pay a second time.

The administrator, armed with the famous disciplinary powers vo-approved by the Chamber for a period of six years, has the recalcitrant, has them beaten with sticks and thrown in prison. Then he hands out sentences of five days in prison and 15 francs fine.

The natives come to demand from the sub-prefect of Candle that asks the administrator for explanations.

This one, in response, has those put in prison who allowed themselves to complain and we distribute, to this occasion, five or six hundred days of prison accompanied of fines which weigh cruelly on unfortunate people, already without resources.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISKAELITE ALLIANCG 39

Appetite comes with eating and the Tirman-WaU project deck-Rousseau-Kanouï aimed at nothing less than expro-pure and simple priation of the Arabs for the benefit of the Jews.

LaChambre, to the great anger of the opportunists, hesitated faced with the enormity of such an act and refused the fifty millions that he asked for, with all sorts of insinuating words gods, Tirman, Tami of the Jews, who had made the journey expressly to secure this rich prey for exploitation-tation of which a Crédit Foncier was already constituted (1).

One even wonders how a civil servant was bold enough to submit such a proposal to a French Parliament; you don't have to think long about it to see what the consequences would be.

The Arabs, sober by nature, and content with little, live as best they can on their land. Once expro-

who run all the cabarets and all the bad places the colony, the small sum which would have been given to them, and of which it would be absolutely impossible for them to get a job useful. They would use the little they had left to buy weapons and ammunition. It was then that France would intervene to hunt down these outlaws, as have not

(1) Oa had not even waited for the vote of the fifty million to begin the expropriations. "In the departments of Oran and from Gonstanlilie, says the Journal des DJbats, 7,896 were expropriated hectares, having a value of 477,164 fr. Or has, of pines, prepared expropriation projects for 14,906 hectares, estimated at 1,607,369 francs.
This is only an introduction, because, with the credit of 50 million,
We will proceed by hundreds of thousands of hectares.

40 JEWISH FRANCE

never been hunted down the Iroquois, the Red Indians, and the natural resources of New Zealand, which eventually disappeared.
very completely.

This is the conception that the Republicans, who have without ceases in the mouth the words of civilization and progress, make brotherhood.

The heart sinks when one thinks of what could to make of these people men who would be for these younger brothers of the human family of compassionate elders and good.

We do not know what feeling of gratitude awakens in the heart of the Arab every act that is honest and right.

For a while I had a former deportee as my secretary.
of Lambessa. It was a telling portrait of one of the personswims of the painting so philosophical, so spiritually observed by Beraud: a At the Graffard room. » These skulls cone-shaped, which have a deviation from the direction of the ideal, are malleable in youth and easily invaded by the vapors of all systems; they ossify later and the steam, the false idea, the erratic doctrine remain there pri-Gentle in appearance, stubborn as mules, these These beings resist everything. Life takes its toll on them.
without changing them.

Life, my poor work companion had learned to
"at the expense of what bitterness it may contain. Dragged to across France, handcuffed, while the worse or were opposed to rose water; put to the silo, breaking stones under the sun, then running after them a piece of bread in the streets of Paris, he had not had that a happy moment, the short moment when, after the am-

CREAMY AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 41

imperial nistria, he had been charged with governing an immense domain, whose concessionaires did not live in Algeria.

Sometimes, after dictating a few pages to him, reactionaries, I said to him: "Fill a pipe and tell me about Algeria! »

So the thought of this victim of politics, of this sectarian so harshly treated by Destiny, struggling every day with black misery, shivering in winter under its threadbare frock coat that he kept clean all the same, was leaving towards Africa, towards the memories of clear nights spent under the stars, towards the scents of the gardens, towards the deep silences, towards these great spaces especially where, freed from all social vexations, man seems-ble returned to the Edenic state and walks freely through these expanses that no one dreams of disputing with him.

Even in Paris, this adopted African had received testimonies of affection from the Arabs and, there, he had been loved of them as much as he loved them himself. Why? because that he had been honest, because he had been just and that the justice, there more than anywhere else, impresses people who are not used to it.

A simple fact related by Mr. du Bouzet proves what There are treasures of gratitude among the Arabs for those who do some good, or at least, for those who prevent that no one harms him.

The history of charity is the same in all latitudes and in all climates. Pious people, wanting serve God by helping his creatures, deprive themselves to found establishments where the poor and the sick are housed, cared for, consoled. The State seizes these foundations under the pretext of making it regular, he spends all in paperwork costs and employee salaries;

42 JEWISH FRANCE

he can no longer relieve anyone. At that moment the Jew intervenes and says: "Give me the building for good cause

It is the story of Public Assistance which is absolutely-ment organized to allow a Quentin or a Peyto have a good table, servants, a car.

This will be the story of the charitable institutions which exist today, when the projects of plundering of?
Freemasons will have been fulfilled. Thousands of beings humans live there happily, peacefully, getting along with each other them, comforting each other. When the State has stolen these goods, all these unfortunate people will be deprived of resources without the State being richer. Then the Jew will found a financial company and will take the houses to open there an agency, a casino or a brothel.

In short, charitable Muslims, knowing that paradise is promised to the friends of the poor, had left innumerable-buildings intended to serve as mosques, schools, of shelters for pilgrims. This area, confiscated by the State, became the pretext for all the embezzlement and every imaginable groping.

However, it was tolerated that a certain number of indi-people stayed in a few houses in this musulman, who had not yet been alienated, when everything
Suddenly the Jew Mesguich wanted these houses.

Mr. du Bouzet, who had not been warned of the situation, had just signed the sale, when some notables said: "It is our poor who are going to be driven out of these houses-

(1) This is the situation of the Habbous goods which we have already spoken about about Tunisia and that a Jewish financial company has tried-to seize through Ftoquet and Naefuet.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 43

sounds that are sold to a Jew." He immediately replied: "I will go visit both births and if what you tell me is Exactly, these houses will not be sold, your poor people will will remain."

The Muslims left radiant, after having had a fart ins-write their name in Arabic on a huge sheet of paper.
Before entering the palace, they had met the Jew Mes-guich, who was shouting at them and who, no doubt, came for them taunt them, telling them he would have the houses anyway.

But let us allow Mr. du Bouzet himself to tell us his

I went, he said, to visit the ten houses with a young pharaacieo Muslim, my secretary, Mr. Monin, and a famous physicist, Mr. Janssen.

Mr. Jansien, who left Paris by balloon, because he did not want to take a Prussian safe-conduct, had been designated by the Acade- of science to observe, near Oran, the total eclipse of sun, and he did me the honor of accepting hospitality at the palace of government.

We found in these houses a crowd of families Muslim women, a whole family in a single room, and in general- general, decent poverty with cleanliness in the house, which dis- the Moors of Algiers are angry.

These families were almost all of a fallen condition, and they were rented to them, out of charity, at a reduced and almost nominal price.

Some were quite poor. I can still see so- shot from below the staircase that served as his home, an old fename avcu/ç?le, her waist bent, holding in her hand the carta that she had just received and who was giving him leave.

She chased me with her moans.

I say everywhere to these unfortunate people: a You will remain in your

(f) Investigation into the Government's actions on National Defence, volume III; deposit of M. du Bonzet.

44 JEWISH FRANCE

houses, I promise you." And they stayed there, despite the sol- requests from engineering and administration. But I have just learned- that there is talk of selling one hundred houses in the Muslim domain- man.

Tirman will shrug his shoulders when he reads this story. Instead of Mr. du Bouzet, he would have been taken away from these poor people their burnouses.

No matter! It is no less interesting, even at point of view of politics, not of opportunistic politics- nist all about plunder and persecution, but to the point of view of higher politics, to note the emotion that produced this simple act of fairness. The news spread everywhere and, only a few days later, in Sebdou, in 130 leagues from Algiers, Mr. Alexis Lambert already heard recount-of the capitulation of Paris, while some disturbances broke out in Algiers, the Muslims offered Mr. du Bouzet to come and defend him. As for the good democrats of the communal council, it is needless to add that, according to custom of all good democrats, they took the side of the Jew and of the rich man against the administrator who had spoken in favor of the poor.

We see the influence that could be exerted on this land from Africa, of course under a different government of the current government, which is spreading corruption everywhere with him, a man who, without even being a politician skillful or a devious administrator, would simply have pure feelings and inclined towards good.

Naturally, it would be necessary that this man were not imbued with modern prejudices about civilization. He is not, indeed, and this can be formulated as a 'law, that the tendency to slaughter and rob one's fellow men is directly related to the ease of speaking about civilization and humanity (1).

GRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 45

The English, who make great use of the word civilization, have committed unspeakable atrocities in India. Without comprehending the opium they force the Chinese to buy, and cut the wounds of soldiers who died of cholera that they sell to natives, they embraced these unfortunate inhabitants of India, so good and so easy to govern, in a gear administrative, which, like a gigantic pressure machine-tresque, expresses the gold and blood of millions of creatures human.

((The sum withdrawn, over the past twenty years from India, by the Anglo-England, says Doctor Lebon (2), is estimated at ten thousand pennies, not counting the money spent on maintaining the conquerors, each of whom receives, for his stay in the colony, a ministerial or sovereign treatment. The stay of officials in India is generally limited to five years, because it is considered that, after this period, they must have made a brilliant fortune.

These ruthless exploiters do not even leave their victims the paddy of rice which is necessary for a Hindu so as not to miss me.

(1) The two united civilizations of France and England ruthless of these tax collectors and scribes of the twentieth dynasty whose steles have preserved the image for us. We let us see in the martaba of Giza, the Âmeneman and the Pantaour having some ancestor of the Fellahs beaten up before their eyes current, lying full length on his stomach and held on the ground by executioners who pull the patient, some by the feet, others by the hands. With the black suit in addition, it is the representation-exact tion of the Bligni res, the Rivers Wilson, the Baring, the Clifford-Lloyd (See Book II).

(2) The Civilization of the Arabs.

H 3.

4b JEWISH FRANCE

Here we have the overwhelming testimony of an English author Mr. Hyndman. "Frightening thing," he said, "the provinces of Southwest were reduced to exporting their grains then that three hundred thousand people were dying of hunger there a few months, in 1877, he adds, in the only presi-dence of Madras, 35,000 people died of starvation according to official reports.

The figures published by Mr. Hyndman in the journal The Ninth Century, under the title The Bankruptcy of rinde, have never been denied. Instead of talking so much about universal philanthropy in their Lodges, the Francs-English Masons, however, would do much better to occupy themselves of this question (1). The Fortnightly Ilevue confined itself to say about India's budget that "it was not for the peoples that the price of a peaceful and regular government bind. "

Lfi Doctor Lebon is a little amused about the expression "peaceful and regular," applied to a regime that makes to starve to death in one year nearly a million men.

This is the jargon of the so-called civilizers. Men of September 4, which were so hard for the proletarians that they flattered basely the day before, were all perfumed of modernism, all imbued with pure liberal doctrine, all experts in the academic period.

To the terrible oppression that has been imposed on the Eastern populations of races that claim to be superior-

(1) See also the episode of the English officers doing, a few years ago months, photographing the Burmese prisoners while they were being savagery evokes a world of ideas. The English general who presides to these horrors is firmly convinced that Timur Leng and Genghis-Khan were barbarians while he represents Progress.

CREAMY AND ALUANGË. UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE 47

higher, and this with the sole aim of enriching a few financiers, we must oppose as a contrast the example of the Piussie who does not have the word civilization in his vocabulary usual. In just a few years, it has conquered a third of Asia, and after having made himself feared by the bravery of his soldiers, she made herself loved by the spirit of justice of her leaders; she did not deliver the populations she had subjugated neither to the Publicans nor to the Jews, and she let them live peacefully under his protection, according to their secular customs-res. Mr. Germain Bapst, the tireless traveler, who was there to look for the glazed tiles of a mosque, me said that he had traveled across immense expanses of country, with the only backup of a word given by a general Russian obeyed and esteemed because he had not come to an agreement with no financial company to extort the little money-people possessed by the natives, because they were outside of modern Judeo civilization.

One consolation, however, emerges from the spectacle of so much sadness. It is through Algeria, perhaps, that com-will begin the French anti-Semitic campaign. Deaf anger is building up in the hearts of these hard-hearted Arabs. ment trampled underfoot by the .luifs. Words, which speak of an upcoming revenge, are exchanged in the shadows and if /Universal Anti-Semitic Alliance sent agents On this side, there is no doubt that she would achieve a result.

In 1882, the Atlas was a supporter of an anti-a seminar which would be held in Oran. In November :1882, the police removed posters written in large letters->red, on which one read: ce All the moïjenssont -N })ons and must be used pouv V anèm^ti^semeyil des ^ Jujf s by the Europeans. n -^J fyu

^^■^^

^feE^,r^-^;:V---^3L:-' ':j^

^^

In many localities Europeans refuse to admit the Jews in their meeting places. In Oran, the oppressors are severely excluded from charity festivals which are organized in January 1882. "You are French in name and not in heart," they are told, when they are trying to protest against this deserved ostracism.

The mayor, Abraham Nahon, then banned the cavalry by the municipal council. Atlemcen, in May 1883, the mayor also wants to impose on Europeans obligation to receive the Israelites in an organized ball by subscription, and the troubles, repressed with violence, take place following this singular fantasy of preventing people to dance with whoever they like.

The troubles of July 1884 in Algiers had June exceptional importance and constituted a real beginning of anti-Semitic uprising. The days-Parisian newspapers, understandably, did not speak of these scenes so significant that in very vague words, as they speak of [all to this people who believe themselves to be ahead of the universe and who is less informed about everything that is happening than the last bourgeois of Liverpool or Augsburg.

Scared by a three-day riot and assault given to Jewish houses, the Consistory, less arrogant than usual, energetically denied the insults vomited by the Israelites against France.

"The French are cowards; they capitulated in 1870. y> Such are, according to the Little Colonist himself, who is favorable to the Semites (1), the remarks which had exas-

f\ (1) The Semitic press would be singularly represented there, \ ^ if we are to believe what the Cri du Peuple of January 9, 1884 says)k on a Jew named Mer, manager of the Petit Colon. A poor soldier the population and this exasperation is understandable. It is impossible to understand the monomania that Jews have, who were not French in 1870, to reproach us for our misfortunes in the Prussian war. We have already noted this impudence regarding the officers called capitules; we find it in radical newspapers Parisian newspapers written by Jews, where they are sons of Allemands and naturalized people who insult the most violently our defeated generals.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 49

In June 1885, the same scenes occurred again-sent. One hundred and fifty demonstrators are locked in the covered market on Place de la Lyre, but, in front of the protests of the population, we are forced to postpone them at liberty (1).

The ardent soul of youth revolts against such had left the regiment without permission to attend the burial of his own accord; the demands of discipline had forced him to send him at Cherchell Penitentiary; he had escaped and found a place among the composers of the Petit Colon, who knew his secret and who kept it faithfully. Sea paiwint to discover the situation of Sebouques, it was the name of the soldier, and, to have a small sum of money, he denounced the unfortunate man to the authorities.

(1) The vain mania which pushes Jews to be decorated without no rights excited a new riot in Algiers in July 1885. Tirman, the man of the Jews, had granted the cross of the Legion of honor to a man named Jacob Jaïs, adjutant of the firefighters, absolutely-unworthy of this distinction. The firefighters protested and, for no longer served? with Jaïs, went solemnly, to applause-members of the population, deposit their supplies in the courtyard of THôlel of the City.

Tirman was not afraid to state a false fact in a document public by awarding twenty years of service to Jaïs, who had six barely. A few months before his appointment as knight of the Legion of Honor, Jaïs had been the subject of a corrective action-for assaulting an old man. These are acts that ratify the Council of the Legion of Honor, which includes French generals!

^ THE JEWISH RANCE

ignoble oppression. A young indigenous high school student from Algiers, hen Hassem, wrote to the newspapers in 1882,

What have the Algerian Jews done to deserve the government? French a similar favor, while the decree, relating to the naturalization of foreigners, of March 28 and 31, 1848, which can be consider as an organic decree on the matter, opened them a door wide enough?

Is it that all the ancient peoples, all the modern peoples did not compare them to parasitic plants that live at the expense of all that produces; is the Jewish people a nation: is what I don't remember, when I was in high school, that the kings legitimate rights of France expelled them from French territory, and, Even today, do you not see them being chased by the

But without going that far, look at what is happening in Oran. The Jews, all eras, have been and will be the cause of all the distresses. Have we not seen in our city these Jews, most of them Moroccans, our enemies, seize the monopoly of elections?

It should be added that the Algerian press is not servile to the Jews like our Parisian press. journalists from there, unfortunately deprived of these religious beliefs which alone give the strength to accom- to fulfill the great designs, have, for the most part, infinitely more talent, verve and above all independence than the writers from Paris; they say what everyone thinks here and what no one dares to say. Many, young people people, desperate to make a place for themselves in Paris, at all this who is not enrolled in the Jewish band is condemned to dying of hunger, went to look for on African soil a remote place where being a man of honor one has the freedom. "

The Fanal, the Courrier d'Oran^ the Courrier de Bône^ the

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 51

Petit Al fferieu]le Mont-Atlas immediately address to the motherland of calls which, alas! are not heard. The Courrier d'Orun wrote on May 8, 1882:

The greatest step in the impolitic way, which tends to de- to show affection for the Muslim native, was done under the auspices of the current Republic, by the delegation of Tours which decreed the mass naturalization of indigenous Jews, inspired by a in a very inopportune way, ideas of equality which dominate in France since 1789.

This measure has done us great harm in the minds of the natives. which she cruelly wounded. She was not justified by any ne- necessity no more than by the merits of those who have profited from this exceptional favor, because if the Jewish race has preserved some- that part of the character which earns him the contempt of other peoples, It's good here.

It seems that it was for the Jews that France undertook the conquest of Algeria.

Drawn by us from the ignorance in which, under Arab domination, they were maintained by age-old preventions, they invade imperceptibly our society, not to assimilate to it, but to bold and arrogant \ public wealth passes into their hands usurious hands and, as if that were not already too much, they are seeking elective offices with threatening success. Perhaps the time is not not be far away where consular judges, civil status officers, deputies and Algerian senators will all be Jewish. A bill has been passed on December 2, 1880, by the Chamber of Deputies, in order to extend universal suffrage in consular elections as well as in elec-political tions.

That this bill be now accepted by the Senate and that it be promulgated in Algeria, where all Jews are licensed merchants, they invade our chambers and our commercial courts, de-becoming absolute masters of the country and achieving, in a short time, my too just apprehensions. Their insolence, so quick to to demonstrate, already has no limits, and, in our main cities,
They hold the upper hand, shamelessly humiliating our old woman.

52 JEWISH FRANCE

Gallic pride. Such is the master of our sentimental politics no'isa given and to Tunic profit from which, until now, the blood French sank on the land of Africa.

A general councilor of the province of Oran, Mr. Autun, submits to this assembly at each session a wish which would be the salvation of Algeria.

Gentlemen, he said, in 1883, on October 24, 1870, Mr. Crémieux, profited from the troubles of the war, made it possible to pass with the help of in-fluent bankers, his coreligionists, the naturalization decree in mass of Algerian Israelites.

We will not return to the dire consequences of this act, for which the Algerian French were never con-sultés

Our compatriots in France are wondering what services are available rendered by these naturalized people of yesterday, so that they may be rewarded Easter holidays, which the French in France do not get not the favor.

Finally, we ask the leaders of our Republic if The Jews have no other ideal, as their
The only law in the Bible, in Deuteronomy, is to dominate by usury.
all people who are not Jewish, we ask, I say, that the colonization is not hindered by favors granted to a parasitic and usurious race, which boasts of never having handled the musket, oar, pickaxe or plow, that is to say, not to have never cleared or defended the land that it only possessed through means too well known to colonists of all countries.

!

The Oran newspaper, Mont-Atlas, although republican, pays loyal homage to patriotic wisdom, to the admirable foresight of the few members of the Assembly constituent who opposed, with such energy, this that Jews be granted the rights of French citizens.

Our fathers, he said, made a mistake, let us repair it! We want let this Fatherland live, even if we had to, to ensure its salvation to return to the age of all energies and all forces, to Iron Age.

CREAMY AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE o3

The Little African, on the extension of voting for the election of consular judges, formulates some reflections very sensible.

The Upper House has just adopted the bill on the extension- sion of the vote for the election of consular judges. It may, on the one hand, moment to moment, be promulgated in Algeria, because it is all natural that, judging Algeria as we did, on our arrival here, the Parliament has no doubt that this law, which is real progress in France, is also one in this colony that he does not know.

However, we know the disadvantages that this law would have here.

Jews judged by Jews! They talk about their solidarity, Their solidarity is not in vain.

We will not mention the immeasurable number of bankruptcies Jewish. We will not speak of the considerable quantities of cessation- payment terms with a percentage arrangement.

Our readers know all this, our deputies cannot ignore it.

The promulgation of this law is the end of honest trade, the lack of absolute security in business.

This is providing a real service to France, to which The Parisian press stubbornly hides the truth about him show the real state of the colony. When the most formidable insurrection, of which Algeria has never been the theater, the French will be able to say that a writer at least they warned them. If they want to thank the man to which they will owe having lost this African land, which our blood flowed in torrents, they will only have to go the Jew Aldrophe, and which was inaugurated, with great pomp, on Sunday, March 13, 1883.

All delegates of Jewry and Masonry

54 JEWISH FRANCE

were there. Thomson could be seen in the audience, Germain Casse and Camille Sée, deputies; Hérold, prefect of la Seine, Bourneville and Leven, municipal councilors, Kæchlin-Schv[^]arlz, mayor of the eighth arrondissement; Bédarrides, president, of the chamber at the Court of Cassation; Manau, President of the Chamber at the Court of Appeal; Cartier, President of the Civil Court; Crupy, substitute; Denis Weill, substitute judge at the Seine court; Lehmann, lawyer at the Court of Cassation; Salvador Abram, Derenbourg, member of the Institute, etc., etc. Leven, the chief rabbi Isidore and Proal, president of the Supreme Council of French Masonry took the floor in succession to praise the man so devoted to Israel and so faithful to the France.

The banner of the Universal Israelite Allimice was planted in front of the monument.

Before dying, Crémieux had indicated the inscription eloquent and simple that he wanted to see figuring on his tomb-beautiful.

A I3A.AC-ADØLPHE CREMIEUX
PRESIDENT OF THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE.

Crémieux's great work, in fact, is the Alliance universal Israelite[^] and he was right to say, at his point from the point of view, that it was "the most beautiful and most fruitful that has been founded in modern times.)»

One could not dream of a more powerful instrument of domination-sant, and Ton explains that she rules the world.

The Alliance, as it is currently constituted, does not dates back to July 1860; its first meeting

CREAMY AND UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALUANCE 53

general meeting alone, held on May 30, 1861. In reality, it functioned-has already been latent for many years, but the Jews, sure of their victory, felt the need to have a who could speak on their behalf to Europe.

The constitution of the V Alliance is very simple in appearance.
Any Jew can be part of the Alliance^ by means of a low contribution of six francs per year.

The Alliance is governed by a Central Committee which initially composed of 40 members and which now has holding 60, the foreign Jews having found that they were not not sufficiently represented. The Central Committee resides in Paris; i corresponds with regional or local committees. The members-Members of the Committee are appointed for nine years by univer-versal of the members of the A / ^ i 'ajice, renewable parties all three years and indefinitely re-eligible; they elect, each year, among them, an office composed of a president, two vice-presidents, a treasurer and a general secretary.

A committee may be formed in any locality where the
The company has ten members and regional committees constituted in any country where there are several local committees.

Local and regional committees act on their own in matters of purely local interest, but under their own responsibility.

They transmit to the Central Committee and receive from it communications on any subject of interest to the company.

They provoke and collect thirsts and in vers-sends the product to the Central Committee's cash register.

The Central Committee is currently composed of the ma-next:

56

JEWISH FRANCE

MEMBRKS RESIDING IN PARIS

MM.

L. IsIDOR, Chief Rabbi of France, honorary president.

S.-H. GoLDschMiDT, 'president.

Joseph Derenbourg, Vice-President

Narcisse Leven, Vice President.

E.-S. Kasn, Secretary General.

E.-A. AsTRUC, Chief Rabbi.
G. Bédarrides.
Jules Carvallo.
Abraham Guéhange.
Hartwig Derrnbodrg.
Michel Erlanger.

Hippolyte Rodrigues

MM.

Baron M. de Hirsch.
Zadoc Kahn, Grand Rabbi,
Edouard Kohn.
Ernest Lévi-Alvarès.
Theodore Levt.
Edgène Manuel.
Jules Oppert.
Eugene Pereire.
Joseph Reinach.
Jules Rosenfeld.
Victor Saint-Paul.
Louis Singer.
E.-F. Veneziani.
, honorary member.

MEMBERS NOT RESIDENT IN PARIS

MM.

From Adler, Chief Rabbi, to Cassel
D^ Baerwald, in Frankfurt am Main.
From Bamberger, rabbi, in Königsberg.
Count A. de Camondo, in Constantinople.
Israel Costa, rabbi, in Livorno.
Alexandre-A. Daniels, in Amsterdam.
Samuel Dreyfus-Neuman, in Basel.
MosES-A. DuopsiE, in Philadelphia.

D' DuNNER, Chief Rabbi of North Holland*». in Amsterdam.
D''' Feilchknfeld, rabbi, in Posen.
From Frank, rabbi, in Cologne.
D' FuLD, lawyer, in Frankfurt am Main,
D' Grjetz, professor, in Breslau.
Sir Julian Goldsmio, Bart, in London,
Myer-S. Isaacs, in New York.
D''' Josephthal, lawyer, in Nuremberg.
Eude Lolli, Chief Rabbi, in Padua.

H. Magnus, in Leipzig.

Maroni, Chief Rabbi, in Florence.

From S. Neumann, in Berlin.

J. OppENHEi&r, in Brussels.

From Philippson, rabbi, in Bonn.

EsDRA PoNTREMOLi, rabbi, in Vercelli.

From Leone Havenna, to Ferrara.

Simon G.-Salomon, in Metz.

D*" A. Salvendi, rabbi, in Durkheima. d. H.

Philipp Simon, in Hamburg.

Knight Joseph of Wertheimer, Vienna. ♦

Di'A.-A. WoLFF, KD, Chief Rabbi, in Copenhagen.

The number of members is approximately 28,000. The budostensible get, which the association has, is one million francs, but the real resources, we understand, are at almost unlimited.

The Alliance is joined by countless societies spread throughout the world.
owed worldwide: VAnglo-Jewish association, V Union of American Jewish Congregations, the Keshet shelharzel, les B*nai Brith, of America, the Judisch orthodoxe repræsentanz of Prague, YAmour national de Phi-Lippoli; all the small Parisian associations: the Society of the Darnes^ the Estlier and Rébecca Society, the Israeli Agreement-lite^ the French Israelites, the Link of Israel, the Disciples of Moses, the Children of Zion, the Lodges like the Concordia, Jerusalem, the Tri}iitarians.

Having the money of the entire major European press-European, except for rare exceptions, and acting through it on the peoples, the Israelites have no fewer than hundreds of newspapers that are aimed only at the sons of their race and tell them about the destinies that await them.
Let us quote at random: the Israeli Archives, V Univers israé-

Chronicle, the Jewish World of London, the Jewish Messenger from New York, the Wiener Israelite the Liianon from Mainz, the Volkszeitung, the Magdeburg Vochenschrift, VAllgemeine Zeitung der Judenthumsje Vessilo israelitico of Casale, the Career israeliticOy VEducatore israelitico, the Famiglia israelitica, Ben Chanonia, Ben Ilananiay Der Orient, the Maggio, the Riel of Jerusalem, the Esperanza of Smyrna, the Jaetz of Bucharest, etc., etc.

V Alliance is absolutely foreign to the idea of homeland in the sense that we give to this term; it would be superfluous to insist on this point. A few words from Crémieux summarize the spirit of the institution more clearly than we could do it.

U Alliance is not a French, German, or English, she is Jewish; she is universal. That's it why it works^ that's why it succeeds.

Nothing shows more clearly the feelings which animated the members of the association that the effusions to which the French were going to deliver themselves into the arms of their proud of Germany, a few months before the war of 1870. Listen to Crémieux tell you about the session of February 3, 1870, this idyllic scene, which took place in connection with a subscription organized in favor of the Jews of Russian Poland.

The Alliance, moved, uncertain of what measures to take, addressed itself to her German committees; she did not hesitate, she summoned them to Berlmetlà, gentlemen, we had a delightful meeting. Point of rivalry between Paris and Berlin, we were the elders in France and our cadets were like us devoted to the great cause.

Everyone goes: Goldschmidt, the vice-president still in a hurry when it comes to paying for someone and their scholarship, » Albert Cohn « always devoted » and Leven « who thus sanctified his great mourning. » It is a true feast of family, a bouquet of yellow flowers.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 59

No feeling of rivalry, a complete, spontaneous competition, without reservation; the difference of nationality does not exist: there was in our meeting that Jews coming to rescue information, follows..... Do I need to remind you that you were in Germany-Magne, in this great country of knowledge and intelligence where the spirits, seemingly calm and cold, are so nobly passionate about the ideas of Beauty and Good, that we were in Berlin, in this great center of science that the triumphs on the fields of banion shone the great lights of intelligence î {Applauds.

dissents.)

This meeting had the historical importance of the famous convent of "Willemstad where the death of Louis XVI and that of the King of Sweden. It was there that it was decided the crushing of France which was to bring in so many millions to the Israelite Finance, and, by disorganizing for long our dear country, allow the Jews to invade all important situations and to chase away all the French.

We can guess, in fact, how much weight is in the tray of the balance the competition of these men of all nationalities closely united among themselves, obediently docile-ment to a slogan. Gambetta doubtless dreamed of a moment to have in his hand this lever which is moves according to the interest of the moment, but Germany with its strong organization, its severely staffed officers closed to the Jews, his clear-sighted and solid patriotism, is otherwise difficult to start than this France which chooses to govern it the first foreigner who comes along.

60 JEWISH FRANCE

The novels published on the Society of Jesus give a little idea of what the United Israelite Alliance is really likeverselle. What is not true for the Jesuits is true for her. The Jews themselves were struck by this comparison.
ically, declaring of course, with their modesty usual, that any advantage of the comparison was for them, and that they only wanted our good, which is enough correct after all, since they spend their lives telling us take. ,

I remember at this moment, said one of their speakers in this general meeting of February 3, 1870, where such a warm-praise of Germany, a conversation I had recently with a coreligionist who had attended a session the day before VAlliance. I asked him his opinion on our Alliance and here it is what he answered me:

While attending your session yesterday, I thought of the Wandering Jew, of Eugène Sue, to this scene where Rodin stripping his correspondence-dance finds letters from all over the world.

The comparison between these two companies is fair as to the extension and the extent of our relationships with the world, but it stops there. Ah, what a difference between these two works; one, one is said to have springs to oppress, the other to liberate; one turn off the lights, the other turn them back on; one spreads the cold and death, the other warmth and life. [Bravos.]

The funny thing is that these Jews, who declare—loudly proclaim that they are neither French, nor English, nor Germans constantly reproach Catholics in their newspapers to recognize the authority of the Pope, to obey to a foreign sovereign.

A foreign sovereign! cries the candid proletarian. Is—is it possible? and is this good Jew patriotic to thunder against this enormity!

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 61

A witty man claimed that he no longer wanted to read in fact newspapers than the Hungarian Gazette. I con—I will try very well, for my part, to read the Bulletin of the Israelite Alliance, and I would certainly be the man more perfectly informed of everything that is happening in the vast universe.

V Israelite Alliance treats as equals with the powers—these, she sends notes, protests, ultimatums that the sovereigns receive with exemplary docility. We have shown our readers, regarding the issue of Romania, the foreign policy, that Crémieux had accepted by the republican government. Under the pretext, certainly strange, that France, at the time when it had her common sense and where she mattered in the world, was the the only nation in Europe that has completely eradicated the Jews from his midst, Crémieux claimed that we were the fathers, champions, tutors born to all the Israelites of the earth.

This thesis ended up no longer raising any contradictions. and, as soon as a Jew is imprisoned for theft in some corner of the planet, our ambassadors, our consuls, our chancellors, our dragomans are agitated, stirred, trot, write memoirs, formulate protests. zeal deployed we see immediately who are the members of the diplomatic corps who will have advancement. Mellinet, French minister in Romania, then in Persia, multi-folds in Tehran; Tissot goes out of its way in Morocco to deserve to be sent to Gons'antinople then to England, but Roustan surpasses them all in Tunis.

Ten years ago I predicted the war in Tunisia. It was enough to note that the Jews were not happy in the Regency to foresee that our poor French soldiers—would one day go and die there to improve their fate. Just think, an Israelite worker in silver braid receives a beating in Tunis for having pawned some—some objects that had been entrusted to him! Can this be supported? Some Jews are expelled as were simple congregants; V Alliance demands wholeheartedly cries that Europe rises up to punish such a crime.

Horrible stories reach us from overseas 1 Fanaticism—Muslim has once again unleashed himself against our brothers in the regency of Tunis and they were victims of terrible persecution. After having suffered all the excesses of an unspeakable barbarity, they saw themselves, in various parts of the Regency, stripped of all their possessions, driven from their homes and reduced to seeking a refuge in the cities of Tripoli and Tunis. Their misfortune is immense, entire populations are in despair and in destitution, they implore the help of their co-religionists.

Some of our agents take servility so far towards the Jews, for whose benefit they ransom the governments to which they are accredited, that they even the Israeli newspapers are astonished. We read in* the Archives of December 13, 1883:

Following popular insults against a junior agent of the France in Morocco, our minister at the court of Fez demanded and obtained a financial compensation of 5,000 francs. It is interesting to note that, of this sum, 500 francs were allocated to the Jewish school for boys and the same number for girls. We let us ask in what capacity our worship has benefited from this distribution, having been in no way involved in the affair, and not being accustomed to these favors in Morocco

Ordega was planning to play Ruslan.

In May 1884, we already see him coming to Paris.

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLIANCE 63

to test the ground, sound out the bankers, initiate the affair to make, to make people talk about him, in the Jewish newspapers, like of a ^and patriot. The Elias Mussali of that one was a Jtdf of Tangier, who is the real master at the legation: Haim Benchimol, which we see listed in the Yearbook of the Supreme Council for France and its dependencies: 0 N*» 194. The Union of Morocco, or .*. of Tangier (Morocco), Venerable. • . the F. • . Haim Benchimol in Tangier. »

Public opinion, however, having shown itself to be quite hostile to a second Tunisian campaign, Ordega, thanks to the pro-protection of the Alliance, was, at the end of 1884, sent as minister in Bukarest, where the Jews are keen to have a man of theirs (4). He showed there such inconsiderate zeal that he

(1) Like most diplomats today responsible for re-present France, this Ordega prides himself on not being of origin French; it belongs, not to heroic and believing Poland for which all Christians make vows, but to Poland rallied to the Jews. In the speech he gave before leaving Tangier and which the Archiver ũraélites of March 12 transmitted to us 1885, the new minister in Bukarest was careful to declare that he was going to Romania to support Jewish interests there. "If I don't have not taken a more active part in the defense of the Jews here, he said, it is that my modest action has often been thwarted and misinterpreted by other consular agents. It would therefore have been unpoliticized to me to act whenever I had no direct instructions from my government. But you can be assured that the Jews of Demnan and those of Morocco, in general, will not have a better defense-more than me, as soon as I can get rid of the reserve that I was obliged to observe in the functions that I am leaving.

"In the new position to which I have just been called, I have no doubt not that my initiative is less reserved. The Israelites, in Roumania, form a considerable Community whose condition is not, in general, one of the best. I will, therefore, have a greater freedom of action and my sympathies for the Jews found-will have the opportunity to manifest themselves.

64 JEWISH FRANCE

became impossible after a few months, and we had to replace him with Mr. de Coutouly.

Once again reading the Alliance Bulletin Israeli, of which many of our great politicians are unaware even existence is infinitely precious. The touching side don't miss it. I am one of those who respect all the beliefs and who regard faith, wherever it lives, as the most priceless of treasures; I find interesting, by the thought which inspired them, these subscriptions, small or large: registrations of annuities, bonds, paid-up shares or imperceptible sums. Some give "in memory of a father, a mother, a son; » others « on occasion of their children's Bar Mitzvah; » a Mr. Geret sends five francs on the occasion of his appointment as officer of public education, o schools of the Orient in particular, are sometimes magnificent. No doubt it's the money they took from us that's going there, but, again, we should not judge their actions according to our ideas which are not theirs. For them, To ruin the goy, I can only repeat, is an action meritorious. Like the Christian knights who enrich- knew the churches from the spoils of the Saracens, they took, on what they conquered, offerings that recall rOmez of ears of corn given long ago to the Cohen after the harvest and the bread of Proposition placed in the Holy on the table made of acacia wood (1).

(1) Jewish Masonry has preserved the memory of the wooden tabernacle of Temple acacia. The apron of the 3rd grade is white, bordered and lined fire color, in the middle a compass and a set square surrounded by a acacia branch. To the question: "Are you a Master Mason?" replies: "The acacia is known to me."

CRÉMIEUX AND THE UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE ALLTANCE 65

On the benefit of Turkish Bonds, Maurice de Hirsch has offered a million for the Jewish youth of the East. On the gains from Honduras, the Bischoffsheims founded a school for girls, which is at the same time a normal school and a vocational school, and which carries the name of Iiisiitiition Bischoffsheim.

Students of the institution accepted through competitive examination are aged twelve to fifteen. They are fed, housed, clothed, educated for free. The various professions taught are those of linen maids, florists, of seamstresses, shopkeepers and teachers. The stay at the school is three years; the number of boarders- naries is fifty.

The establishment, opened in 1872, has already trained two hundred thirty-six students. Those who completed their studies and their learning at the same time are placed, by the care of the patronesses who are responsible for supervising them watch over, in the large workshops and stores of Paris. Those who are destined for education leave school after having took their City Hall exams. Among these students teachers, some are recruited in Paris itself; the other part of the contingent is provided by Morocco or the Orient.

V Alliance has in all the East, in Syria, in Morocco, in Tunisia, Mesopotamia, Jerusalem, thirty-six schools which receive more than seven thousand students, including five thousand four one hundred boys and seven hundred girls.

the real Crémieux; he appears familiar there, good-natured, with the airs of a patriarch in gaiety; we see paintings of ready-made genre in the spectacle of this old man who is-maintains with his own people, In 1878 we spoke of the Israelites of Russia. ((Let them begin, " said Crémieux,

II 4.

6] THE JEWISH FRINGE

then lowering his voice a little, "I'm calm, they'll know to move forward, to come to light (general laughter). » With a gesture of the hand, at the blink of an eye, all these cunning cronies, men politicians, bankers, and spyglass merchants had understood; they knew that, as soon as their coreligionists would have conquered a piece of rights, they would put the Russia and the Russians under their feet as they themselves had put France and the French.

Gremieux, in his will, wanted to leave public-a proof of his concern for the Israeli Alliance.

I bequeath, he wrote, a sum of 10,000 francs to the Alliance universal Israelite. As the Alliance is not a legal society-I am legally authorized to impose on my children the obligation to count, within three months of my death, to the president of the V Alliance israé-the universal Union this sum of ten thousand francs, the use of which will be made according to the decision to be taken by the Central Committee (4).

The Catholics were careful not to blame this arrangement-tion. What right is more sacred than that of having a part of his heritage in favor of a cause that one has served all his life, to survive in some way by his loyalty to an idea that was dear to you, to associate by beyond the tomb to labors and concerns which were yours?

Suppose I bequeath ten thousand francs to the order of Benedictines, with whom I spent a charming month in my youth, whose literary and historical works-ques are getting closer to mine. Do you see Lockroy from here?

(1) Liberalities of this kind are frequent. In his will-ment, Mr. L.-M Rothschild, the very rich jeweler, died in Paris 1884, stipulates that if his daughter Sarah Halfon dies without children, a third of his fortune will go to the Universal Israelite Alliance.

OR Camille Dreyfus at the podium, at Captation! Gentlemen, dead hand goods This man knows that this congregation is not authorized, and he bequeaths it to him anyway.
Can one imagine a deeper contempt for the laws?
This is what the Syllabus teaches? You won't admit it that a Frenchman can enrich an order in which there is to foreigners (1)! »

For these people, in fact, and for the republican majority-hanging from the pockets of Jewish financiers, the members-members of the Central Committee, who live in Berlin, Munich, Hamburg, are not foreigners, and, if pressed a little, they would end up admitting that it is only the Jews who are at home in France...

(1) In March 1884, the Council of State, including the Jew Camille Sée is the most beautiful flower, refused to the superior of the Daughters of Saint-Vincent-de-Paul authorization to accept a lady's legacy Lecerf, who had devoted a sum of forty thousand francs to to create two beds in the retirement home of Sainte-Anne d'Auray, in Cbâllillon-sous-Bagneux.

In their hatred for these holy Daughters of Charity, the savages
They themselves venerate, these unfortunates did not shrink from the thought of robbing the poor.

If the Jews were asked to divert the ten from their destination a thousand francs from Crômieux, they would cry out loud; they find It's quite simple that we chase the Sisters of Charity out of the Cochin hospital and that we keep the money that the founder left especially for their interview.

BOOK FIVE

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY

In twenty years I don't know how the hell it will be.
a Christian will do for a living....

Stern.

The Directory Society and the present Society. – The moral ruins,

– The aristocracy. – The place it still holds. – Its goodness native, his lack of hatred, his incurable frivolity. – The need to have fun. – The Jewish classes. – The revenge of the deer. – Hirsch and our officers. – The charter of the La Trémoille. – Dux.

– The Rothschilds. – The Victims' Ball. – Ferrières. – The Sen-

A modest and surprised journalist. – The cholera patients at the Tuileries. – The Decorative Arts Lottery. – A benefactor of humanity. – Hecht and his Courbets. – Reinach and his Frans Hais. – The love of trinkets. – The trick. – Saphira. – The scandals at the races. – Circles and gambling dens. – Mr. Leconte and the Circle of Parliament. – Military supplies. – Fashions. – The budget of an honest woman. – Money misused. – The theories of Father Ludovico. – favorite flax of the aristocracy. – The hidden misery. – • Saint Genevieve and the animal ball. – The arbiter of elegance. – Arthur Meyer. – Ernest d'Hervilly and the Duke of Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia. – Jewish journalism. – blackmail. – Hugelmann, Fiorentino, Eugène Mayer. – A rare book. – Anatole de la Forge or "the gallant man." – Simia. – The advertising freaks. – Madame Adam. – Finance at the Academy. – The patriotism of General Boum and the virtue of Madame Cardinal. – General hamming it up. – The Jews and the theater. – Friend Fritz. – The Americans. – Recognition of the Yankees. – The statue of Bartholdi. – The decoration of a actor. – The Molier circus. – The Jewish hotels. – The Monach. – Mr. Robert de Bonnières and Mr. Paul Bourget. – Mr. Guy of Charnacé and the Vampire Baron. – Cut-throat Paris. –

– Criminals and pimps. – Mr. Macé's book. – The arms-series of women. – The complicity of the police. – The crisis ouvrière. – The trademarks. – The wasteland. – Alcoholism. – Aqua Tofana. – The municipal laboratory. – The impunity of wine merchants. – The hunt for the poor. –

. The rag-pickers. – The reconnaissance of Mont-de-Piélé.* – The people are waiting. – Inevitability of the Revolution. – The end of a world.

It's a pencil I want to draw, not a painting.
that I claim to paint.

The Goncourts were able to summarize a whole world of facts and ideas in a Yolume, admirable both for the net-strength of the overall impression and the richness of the details: History of French Society during the Directory; they showed us, in picturesque and fine pages in turn, Paris as it was the day after the Terreur, with its devastated churches, its entire neighborhoods changed into solitudes, its hotels open to all winds, the hotel La Rochefoucauld becomes a bazaar, the Biron hotel transformed in public dance.

I cannot hope to achieve, in a more restricted framework, to a similar result. The present world, moreover, is otherwise complex than that which the spiritual writers described to us: the moral ruins, which are scattered around

I will just need to indicate the main points, even if it means complete later.

What is meant by a society, that is to say a set-of laws, customs, traditions, no longer exists. What appears to stand up is only a decoration that does not resist the exam. We live in a perpetual lie and it is difficult for the observer to reason from appar-situations and displays of feelings which, the most of the time, are absolutely false.

At first glance, however, nothing seems to have changed;
the names in evidence are names from old France and this is not one of the least strange phenomena of

i^ JEWISH FRANCE

our time than to see what vitality there is in this nobility, in which he has never lacked anything but belief to itself, to play the same role as in England.

One hundred years will soon have passed since it was proclaimed all men equal, who were solemnly burned at Champ-de-Mars the symbolic tree to which were attached
all the rattles of feudalism, the tortils and the crowns, the coats of arms and coats of peers, parchments and genealogies. The current aristocracy has no place in the contemporary organization, it has not attempted anything to deserve one; it also contains a strong element considerable nobility of business cards, not to mention the incredible number of sons of buyers of national goods who have ennobled themselves by taking the name of the land that they grandfather had stolen after having the pro- guillotined legitimate owner.

In reality, however, despite so many scandals col-carried by all the newspapers, the aristocracy has not completely-has completely lost all its prestige in this century which believes itself to be so deeply democratic. An authentic duke, by this The mere fact that he is a duke is something he finds in my-drown his title, to marry richly. This improvisation fabulous of a small artillery lieutenant creating ducies, counties, baronies, was taken seriously, was easily grafted onto the ancient nobility which had been cons-established like her by military heroism. There is more, this descent of the heraldic Gourtille, this nobility that we have called the nobility of Talmanach of Golgotha, this in-likely outbreak of financiers declaring themselves counts and barons, not as a result of services rendered to the country, but following stock market manipulation, no longer excites

we hear the name of the Count of Camondo or of Baron de Hirsch, but we almost get used to it.

The aristocracy, far from finding the new France hostile or simply indifferent like America, corresponded so much to the customs and habits of the country, made so well at one with him, that she would only have had to want him to be a power, if not a power, a considerable, if not a recognized authority. Here again she was below her task, she showed herself to be unskilled at everything.

At the first Revolution, forty thousand gentlemen, accustomed from childhood to the handling of weapons, having of all the considerable situations, all brave personally, began by preparing the movement which was to carry them away by warmly embracing the ideas news, then^ instead of consulting, they fled before a handful of scoundrels. Except for the Prince of Talmont, he there was not a single true great lord in Vendée; never did a prince of the blood appear there and the insult thrown at the facing the Count of Artois, by Gharette, ready to die, is remained in everyone's memories (1). As rich and almost as powerful today as at the time of the Revolution, the descendants of these frivolous men leave France perishes with the same carelessness and does nothing to fight.

What is the reason for this radical impossibility of aristocracy? French to be useful for something? Many of those who they are composed of generosity of heart, of elevation

(1) On the sad role constantly played by the Count of Artois, consult the work of Mr. Forneron: General history of the emigrants during during the French Revolution.

II 5

74 JEWISH FRANCE

feelings, remained the elite of society. We encounter this and there, in the nobility and in the upper middle class, of magnificent devotions; there are saints there unknown, young women, admirably beautiful, so-helping the sick, works supported with charity without equal. All this without noise, with the very fear of celestial creatures who intercede for God for us. If Paris has its undersides that the gaze hardly dares to probe, it also has its tops that very few know, these tops where live noble souls whom heaven sees more than we see them, for they are closer to him than to the land where we ram-pons.

Individually, I repeat, the true noble is generally very good. It feels good, but instead of being boasting rudely, like the Jew who beats the bass drum as soon as he has given a hundred sous, he hides his benefits with a delicate modesty. In the provinces, there are rarely poor people around the castles inhabited by ancient families. In a little corner of Forez, which I had the opportunity to live in, the Baron de Rochelaillée, for example, to name only this that I saw, opens an account for all the poor inhabitants at the baker's and the butcher's, he provides what is necessary all. It is impossible to better fulfill the functions of this rich man, whom Tertullian calls "God's treasurer on the earth. y> The radicals, to reward this generous, accuse him of taking away the taste for work from those he obliges by feeding them and they hope well, until next time revolution, guillotine him for this reason.

This, I am convinced, is absolutely indifferent to the Baron de Rochetaillée Ingratitude is perfectly equal to these souls. The noble, the complete representative of the race

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 75

Aryan, refined and 'As if spiritualized, is foreign to any feeling of resentment. Christianity, combined with a naturally great way of thinking, destroyed in these hearts all resentment of injuries. The Jew holds to the disposal of his enemies all that, according to the word of Goncourt, this is a race, splashed by the blood of a God, may have gall annealed for eighteen hundred years;" the noble, he has neither gall nor hatred.

What could be more superb than Montmorency writing his will an hour before going to the scaffold and bequeathing to Richelieu the painting by Garrache representing Saint Sébastien Pei'cé de Flèclies who is now in the Louvre?

Later, when, in his cell at the Visitation of Moulins, the duchess relives in a dream the husband she had so tenderly loved, despite his infidelities, she learned from him that he was among the Chosen. – Which is especially that of your actions which made you grant this grace sovereign? she asked him. – The ease with which I shown mercy to those who wished for me dead(l).

In the touching book by Mr. Gharles d'Héricault, History of the Revolution told to little children, you will find a thousand things of this kind. How beautiful is it this response from the poor little Dauphin overwhelmed with bad treatments, beaten up by Simon!

(1) M^{re} Fliche: Memoirs on the life, misfortunes, virtues of very high and very illustrious princess Marie-Félicie des Ursins, duchess of Montmorency.

76 JEWISH FRANCE

—What will you do to me, Capet, Simon said to him one day, if the Ven-Gods come to deliver you?

{50 Dauphin remembered the promise he had made to his father, and he answered:

— I will forgive you...

Is it not still exquisitely delicate that says Renan in his Memories of Childhood and Youth?
After the Revolution, the noble ladies pensioned at the hospice of Treguier put chairs in front of it in the evening the door and chatted in the tranquility of a day ending which envelops the provincial towns of I don't know what silent poetry. When they saw those arriving who had enriched themselves at their expense, they were their chairs and retired inside or went to pray at the chapel so as not to make these rich people blush, so as not to
to make these legal thieves feel ashamed.

This stupid and charming word of Char- has been quoted a hundred times
the X, when signing a nomination for a recipe general.

— I must warn Your Majesty that he is the son of a regicide.

— You don't choose your father.

It is true that the place he gave to the son of a regicide, the king would have refused it to the son of a Chouan who would be died for his cause. The forgetting of services rendered, among the Bourbons and all those who belong to this party, has always been equal to the forgetting of offenses. In these heads native vile takes over. "Brilliant birds with elegant plumage," says the Greek poet speaking of the Alcmaeonidae.

What is the innocuous Terror whitened next to this?

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 77

Red Terror, which, according to Berriat Saint-Prix, was thirty a thousand victims?

Apart from a few outstanding personalities, such as Montalembert, the Duke of Broglie, the Count of Mun, the aristocrat's calf is usually very weakly organized. There is more intellectual energy, will, tenacity in designs in the last Jew of Gallicia, than in the whole Jockey Club. On all the members of the large circles, you would not find ten who have read Joseph de Maistre, all the foremen, most of the workers of Paris, read and studied Karl Marx. In the lodgings of these young artisans, who have only to learn in the evening after a tiring day, you will find a beginning of library, volumes read, reread, annotated; the nobility buys books, it is true, but it almost never reads them.

This absence of any serious intellectual culture removes from the aristocracy the notion of its superior role in the company.

Any aristocracy, said Blanc de Saint-Bonnet, which leaves my- to turn to her the spirit from below is troubled by the alloy. It is not necessary not that it takes from the people and becomes common, it is necessary that it give it to the people and make them noble (1).

Elsewhere the illustrious thinker gave another form to this definition of the duties of the aristocracy.

It is necessary, he writes, that the aristocracy constantly purifies itself and remains her. Which takes place by the application of the principles which have distinguished her- ford. The day it lets itself be taken over by the spirit of the people, the decomposition of the nation begins. The aristocracy can also

(1) From the French Restoration.

78 JEWISH FRANCE

in addition to ennobling herself to ennoble the crowd more and more; but she cannot ennoble anything that she receives from the crowd.

It is in vain that among us certain nobility believed to ennoble the instincts she received from the people, the taste for laziness, for chest of drawers, well-being, vanity, expenses, table, wine and women; she only succeeded in de-ennobling herself—even and to deprive the people of a real aristocracy.

After having unhinged herself, by putting first the meanings that make all men equal, the representatives of the aristocracy have come to lose even the kind of elegant supremacy that they had there again, they are descended to the point where they could no longer think for themselves, even in matters of opera and toiletry. They are praised for works, twenty-fifth category artists, who have no other merit only being of Jewish origin, ridiculous costumes and grotesque and they applaud wildly, they swoon, they roll around, they say in a dazed air: Ah! "That it's Psehut! Ah! That it's Vlan!"

Nothing is more singular than seeing the aristocracy in to have fallen, in Paris at least, to lose direction in this way and the mastery of this empire of taste and fashion that she possessed for so long without sharing, even having let slip—by this futile scepter, no longer look at the smallest things only through the eyes of the Jews. We remember the story of the baron de Rothschild talking with a Jewish jeweler about the reproach that Christians used to tell them not to eat pork. — If they love the dear animal so much, they must be made to wear it as decoration. — That's an idea! Eight days later, at our sad times, all our elegant and all our elegantes adopted as their fetish the little golden pig, half-nutshell emblem of a degradation of which they were the first to laugh!

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 7^

This impossibility of thinking for oneself, this ease to let themselves be led, made admirable officers of those who, instead of dragging out a useless existence in Paris because they don't know how to use it, they come in and stay in the army. Discipline exempts them from having an effective opinion. They are very happy about it. Do not ask, in fact, even the leaders, no initiative. After having reconquered Paris on the insurrection, at the risk of their lives, they foolishly went left to be taken up by some phrase-makers; They humbly suffered all the insults that were heaped upon them. dikes. None, to save his country from shame, had the resolution to remove his regiment, his brigade, his division, not out of respect for authority, believe me, but because that, in order to act on one's own, one must begin by reflecting—chir and that such work is beyond their strength.

The prevailing sentiment in the French aristocracy and in the upper middle class, which follows in its wake, it is the love of pleasure. I am not speaking, mind you, of debauchery. Debauchery is a violent stimulant which, in certain natures, does not exclude energy. The lord of England devoured by spleen sometimes tries to drown, under waves of ale and scherry, the morose and ma-ladif which exists in all English; he is Falstaff before being Nelson, Chatham or Byron. In overseas universities Pvhin, the German prelude, with lippies worthy of the Rabelais's very illustrious drinkers, to his destiny as a soldier or politician; he is Gargantua before being Bis-marck. The French do not have these tastes that would betray the weakness of his stomach; we no longer even mention great ones lively people, as there were hundreds of them, five years ago forty years. What remains is, once again, love pleasure, the desire to have fun.

80 JEWISH FRANCE

The Duchess of Persigny was born in a hat Pierrot. His mother had given birth at the time when the general of the Moskowa was going to leave for the Opera ball and the father, hastily, had collected the little one in his large hat with multi-colored ribbons. It seems that the French aristocracy current çaise had a similar cradle: despite the dire warnings, which are not lacking, she feels like tingling in the legs when she is for some time without dancing.

This compelling passion delivers, we understand, all the great lords tied hand and foot to the Jews.

Hunting is at the forefront of the entertainments of good company.

Hunting, which the aristocracy loved because it was the image of war, was a misfortune and became almost a vice for her. Among all the alleged abuses attributed to the old regime by rhetoricians, who did a hundred times worse once they have been in power, very few remain standing, since serious criticism has studied these questions; the abuse of hunting rights, the ruthless measures taken to protect this right have not been justified. In some regions, the peasant was not allowed to enter in his field! You must read this chapter in Taine for understand the anger that was forming around the castle water, thanks to this overly strict regulation.

Through love of hunting, the nobility had alienated the

to go to their house, to eat at their table.

Today we witness the revenge of the deer. Poor thing deer 1 how many times, bellowing, heart pounding, has he cried with her gentle eyes, sought refuge in the water clear which tempts him, which communicates to him a sensation of

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 81

well-being and which soon freezes his sweaty legs, the para-lyse and deliver it to the ardent pack that set out after him!
How many, in witnessing this painful agony, that contempted, with quivers of voluptuousness in their nostrils, women accessible to all the tenderness in life ordinary, experienced the emotion of the sentimental Jacques
As he would tell us:

As well, said the first Lord to the old Duke, it saddens the melancholic Jacques. He swears that you are, in this respect, a greater usurper than your brother who banished you. Today-Today, Lord of Amiens and I have slipped in behind him, as he lay under an oak whose anti-some branches project onto the stream which ripples along this wood. There, a poor stray deer, which had been wounded by the hunter's arrow-sisters, came to grumble; and truly, my lord, the poor animal sobbed so much that, under their effort, his leather coat was almost ready to burst. Large tears were rolling down, one after another, on its innocent snout. And so the hairy beast, tenderly observed by the melancholic Jacques, stood on the extreme edge of the rapid stream which she swelled with her tears.
And he swore that we are pure usurpers, tyrants, and what is worse, to frighten the animals in this way and to massacre them-create in the domain assigned to them by nature.

Is not the unfortunate deer avenged, hunted thus for centuries?
in century, by the spectacle of all these bearers of beautiful names dragging themselves along, under the ironic smile of the servants, to the sequel to some filthy Jew from Germany and Russia
Who was willing to invite the nobility to entertain themselves with him?

How many memories come to these unfortunate people! These forests where the ancestors rode, the bold conquerors of the old Gaul, black with wood, are still haunted by the legends of the past.. The Fairies lived on the edge of these ponds and it is here, perhaps, that above the branches of a

82 THE JEWISH FRINGE

clarity, appeared to Saint Hubert. On winter evenings, in the middle of fantastic shadows, a strange hunt, the royal hunt made the thickets resound with clamors that had nothing of human. When a king was to die, a character mysterious, close relative of the Little Red Man of the Tuileries and who was called the Grand Veneur, pronounced three times the name of the one who was going to disappear.

Does not the soul of our history speak in all these places? Half-pagan Fontainebleau, where the Nymphs of John Goujon seems to wander the aisles, doesn't he tell François I*', the Primatice, the autumnal poetry of this end of reign where the paladin of Marignan came to seek rest in this palace made in the image of the Italy he had dreamed of conquer? Doesn't a whole world come back to life in this room of the Caryatids where "Jean Goujon, called Michel, communicates to the stones the undulating grace, the breath of France, knows how to make marble flow like our waters undecided, gives him the swaying of tall grasses ephemeral and floating harvests? " Versailles does not say-not a whole century in a word and the brilliant cavalcades and the great ladies in the carriages that Louis XIV approaches with a hat in hand, and the splendors of this entire reign fainted?

Sometimes, when evening falls, this vision of the times distant comes to more than one duke, one marquis, one count ashamed to be the companion of all these cutters Jewish purses that his ancestors would not have looked at, and he whisper with the poet:

Ah! how sad the sound of the horn is in the depths of the woods!

Fontainebleau is for Ephrussi, Versailles is for Hirsch, Forrières is at Rothschild.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 83

We learn from time to time that Mr. Eplirussi "uncoupled a deer with ten horns at Malmontagne, and that after a hunting lodge the animal beat in the exchange; y> a another time: "he breaks in the large sheets and tastes water to the pigeon pond. » Cahen d'Anvers manifests himself at the Bergeries. Quanta H irich, who also cuts a fine figure at the suburb, what he prefers to hunt are officers

This is not one of the least interesting shows of our time than that of this protected smuggling baron, encouraged in his manic madness by Dreyfus, the former Jewish deputy of Seine-et-Oise, and saying to his guards: "As soon as If a Frenchman passes by, shoot into the crowd!" This tyrant even occupies this land in an absolutely illegal manner, since the Versailles city council protested against the assignment that was made to him. No matter! he conducts himself there as in enemy territory; the facts take place a few leagues from Paris without anyone ever daring to wear them at the podium: the left, we know in advance, would rise up in mass to cover the voice of a speaker who would dare to attack to be a Jewish financier.

The only republican newspaper that ever spoke of these indignities, is Time. It is true that the article borrows to the well-known moderation of its author, Mr. Jules Claretie, a particular accent.

The newspapers of Seine-et-Oise, he writes, are, without going further far away, filled every week with the exploits of the guards of a large financier who rented part of the Versailles park.

Alleys where children pass, thickets where walkers 1 of the green nests where one would like to get lost book in hand!

One moment: watch out! There is almost danger of death.

84 THE JEWISH FAANCE

Baron Hirsch's guards are standing nearby, their rifles loaded. Petit Vcrsaillais, a newspaper of the country, tells that, the other day, an orderly was crossing on horseback the avenue which leads from the bou-Queen's levard at the Saint-Antoine gate. Two beautiful dogs hunting dogs followed, belonging to officers. One of them entered undergrowth; he soon returns with a broken leg and a gouged eye. The other disappears into a hedge: he is killed outright. The brigadier of the gendarmerie declared that Mr. Baron Hirsch gives to his guards-one franc bonus per wild animal killed, with prescription to assimilate to wild animals all the dogs encountered during his hunt. But his hunting ground is state property. But we should to be able to take the fresh air while hunting without running the risk of receive pellets of lead in the face 1 An officer, the Last week, he was walking with his child in an alley in below a thicket. Suddenly someone shoots. The lead makes raining down riddled leaves on the child's head, and the child has fear. The guard, questioned by the officer, simply replies: "I have shot a marten. When I encounter one, I have orders to shoot!

Admit it, between us, that this guard was lucky to come across a contemporary officer! If he had done this response to Kléber, to Desaix, to Marceau, to Pélissier or to Bugeaud in their youth, I believe that Baron Hirsch would have had a bad quarter of an hour!

After our officers, what Baron Hirsch hates is more, they are our workers. He takes our capital, but he protests indignantly in the Cologne Gazette, content to be the very suspicion of having provided work for a single one French :

The company of Ottoman iron horses, he says, has a characteristic especially German; she called hundreds to Türkiye of German employees, gave them a position, and gave them a existence, to them and their families, thus founding, on the territory Turkish, a real German colony. Locomotives, cars, bridges of iron, rails, etc., it is almost exclusively in Germany (in Hanover, Nuremberg, Mainz, Cologne, Dortmund and many more other German workshops) that she had everything done, opening to the in-German industry a fertile field.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 85

For the staff of employees, composed almost exclusively of the German element, for German colonization, this would be a pitiful result to see foreign capitalists, French or English, for example, take the place of the Existing company, and I am quite sure that you would be you yourself are sorry for having contributed to such a result.

These very French feelings have naturally reconciled Baron and Baroness de Hirsch the sympathy of our aristocracy. It is the Prince of Sagan who does the honors of this residence in which General d'Abzac and the Count de Chabot play a bit of a role as chamberlains. The Count de Fitz-James, before his marriage, was employed in the house at five thousand francs a month. Count d'Andigné seeks the advantage of leading the cotillion at parties, while the Marquis of Massa takes care of the interludes. and has small pieces like the Scar performed there.

Hirsch occupies a relatively superior position in Paris—lower than that of the Rothschilds. He is the baron like the others are the barons. Unlike the Rothschilds, who want to personify a community, the baron wants to be alone and leaves his whole family in half a day of disdain—He does not have the arrogance and haughtiness of the Rothschilds.

arrived delighted, he is infinitely more open, more rounded than the princes of Israel, and, all in all, less ridiculous than them. He is insolent no doubt, but his insolence is mocking and familiar. Colorful, the nostrils open, happy to live when he is not rolling around in with excruciating liver pain, he is willingly good-natured with a touch of mockery; he says, for example, to great lords who come to him to beg for the wounded Carlists: "I would be happy to give you some tickets a thousand francs, but are you sure that this money will go to the Carlists?"

86 JEWISH FRANCE

This difference in appearance with the Rothschilds can be explained easily. The Rothschilds inherited a situation social already created by their parents, who suffered the first first rebuffs; they believe, to a certain extent, belong to the aristocracy; Hirsch, on the contrary, believes that the aristocracy belongs to him.

This place in the elegant world, which meant so much to him desire, Hirsch, in fact, conquered it little by little, by himself-even; he knows the price of each scruple and the candle of every conscience. With Bismarck and Gambetta, he is one of the three great despisers of men of the time, but his contempt is not tempered by anything. If Bismarck was able to appreciate all the human cowardice in the diplomats and politicians on their knees before his fortune, he does not can overlook the beautiful sides of humanity when it think of so many obscure heroes who sacrificed themselves for the glory of Germany. If he had in his entourage the most frightening samples of servility, Gambetta could remember that at the beginning of his career, many disinterested and naive beings had supported him by believing help the triumph of a principle. Hirsch never saw in his life a human being who addressed him differently only to ask him for money.

It grew as France declined. There are just a few years ago, the world's downtrodden themselves-even those who refused his invitations, today the most qualified are happy to climb the famous staircase. This escal-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 87

bind, ■ let us say it in passing, hardly justifies the noisy admiration of which he is the object. The architect signed it as Truly, there is nothing to be so pleased with.

One cannot imagine anything more incoherent and more disproportionate than this staircase; it is quite wide at its base for a regiment to parade there, it is so narrow at the summit that one would think resembles the rest of the house and that it's a hidden staircase.

It was from the top of this staircase that the baron said one day to his son, watching the dukes, princes and Marquis: "You see all these people, in twenty years, They will all be our sons-in-law or our caretakers.

In the summer, visitors flock to Beauregard. Who doesn't would like to enter the dining room?

It is, says V Event, who knows worldly refinements almost as much as the Gaul, an absolutely remarkable piece—whose doors and carved walnut woodwork are marvelous eves. Four large bay windows let in the daylight and reveal from all sides the horizon reflected in the immense ice for—covering the back panel. So that, while we dine, the eyes are charmed by the magical and ever-renewing spectacle given by nature.

The Dressing Room “nestled between the greenhouse and the bedroom The Baroness's bedroom” isn't bad either.

In a very pure Louis XV style, it was copied very exactly on the one that an Electress of Bavaria had arranged for herself at the palace of Nymphenburg. The hangings are azure and silver, and, in order to harmonize the ceilings, the baroness, not finding in France any outskilled workers, had to bring some from Bavaria to silver all the reliefs of the moldings.

Old blond silk armchairs melt their very soft color in these pale tones. But, the marvel is the toilet all re—covered with old Argentan albs, supporting a mirror* of which The chiseled silver frame is a real gem. Above this mirror, a Venetian mirror hangs on the wall, like a block of precious stones. The frame of this mirror is a unique piece, all in rock crystal, decorated with garlands of which each cluster is made of amethysts, garnets, topazes and other stones embedded in the crystal.

88 JEWISH FRANCE

The guest rooms are very welcoming.

The luxury of these pieces is the freshness which is the grace of the meil, of different styles and carvings, adds a touch of splendor elegant. The cambric sheets, all trimmed with old flaming lace-almonds, flake on the light cretonne. It's soft, it's cheerful, it enchants and it holds.

What wouldn't we do to sleep in sheets that flake and which retain? ((Also it is a very joy envied to be among the Baroness's guests, and the series follow one another at Beauregard as they once did at Gometrapp. Among the most assiduous: Duchess Decazes, Duchess of Castries, the Marquise de Beauvoir, the com-Tesse de la Ferronnays, the Marquise d'Hervey de Saint-Denis, the Countess of Chavagnac (now the Countess de Ponlevès), the Marquis of Scépeaux, the Count of Bétliune, the Marquis of Fontenilles, Princess Hohenlohe, the com-Tesse de Divonne, the Marquise d'Aoust, the Count of Beust, etc., etc. »

In these ostentatious festivals, the Jew still reveals himself. All the hunting is sold in advance to dealers edible; the lord's guests hardly come to do there that the profession of killers, of butcher boys.

Formerly, in Ferrières, some guests, wishing to bring back to Paris the proof of their exploits, eluded the deposit and kept some coins in their game bag. The case was foreseen; guided by an admirable special dogment trained for this purpose, Baron James visited the chabres while we were having coffee and mercilessly confiscated-ably any game unduly preserved.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 89

In these conditions, hunting is nothing more than a massacre, and Veuillot, the glorious plebeian, was quite right when that he wrote to his sister: a I carefully deprive myself of hunting; the child of the people does not want this pleasure royal. As for pretending, like the Rothschilds, to murder pheasant hens, brought to the slaughterhouse by "Braided valets, that's low."

To these parodies of life in the past, we must add the hunting with a canned deer. We maintain a unfortunate deer in a park, then we put it in a box, we transport it to a specific place, we pour it-follows furiously; at the moment when he is about to expire, one stops, not out of humanity, but out of avarice, we revive the animal by making it drink brandy. and we reintroduce it-black in his box. Isn't this a whole world?

of hunting?

In all these charges which recall the old hunting, as Croquefer recalled the Chansons de gestes, figure names of genuine gentlemen, who make a singular effect. How surprised they must be to be there! Have you never saw, going to the Bois in the afternoon, the man who serves as Baroness Rothschild's squire? He is a true Duke of La Trémoille. He himself, more ins- which most members of the aristocracy classified, without the help of any paleographer, his family papers the Cliartrier of Trémoille, he has published a magnificent volume that he did not put in the trade and which he generously distributed to librarians-libraries and learned societies.

90 THE JEWISH FRINGE

The few lines that the Duke of Irémoille placed at the head of this volume, which is, above all, a family book, clearly specify the author's intention and are striking beautiful look of simplicity,

To Louis-Charles-Marie de la Trémoille.

Wishing, my dear Louis, to see you share the interest, I will say the affection I have for my old parchments and papers, I will try to make them known to you. My work will, moreover, aim to teach you briefly the history of your family.

I have gathered for this purpose, since Guy Vi de la Trémoille, a series of letters and pieces that follow one another without interruption from father in sons to me.

The charterhouses that we had in various castles were de-trouts; the one in Thouarsseul was saved. However, these are not during the dangers that he missed; he ran several times risk of being burned during the Vendée wars. The gate of The iron that closed it is riddled with bullets, several of which have made their mark hole; but fortunately the fire did not catch and the door held good. Barely having escaped the dangers of war, the old titles were pillaged by the good women of Thouars, who wanted to-were looking for the most beautiful sheets of vellum to cover their jam jars.

Humidity, rats and, finally, a good number of subtractions made by autograph researchers have significantly decreased our archive repository; but what remains is still quite considerable to console for what we have lost.

Isn't it true that it has a certain tone to it that doesn't does not smell the upstart and the Jew?

Nothing is more interesting, moreover, than the story of a such an illustrious race, made only with documents and autograph letters. We follow them from century to century transformations of the nobility. The feudal lord treats almost on equal terms with the king, he lends him money to raise troops, in order to repel the English. A Talmont dies in Marignan, a Trémoille falls next to François I^e", in Pavia, after receiving thirty-seven wounds. The reports from the Duke of Trémoille and Henri IV are still those of friendship; the king writes to his faithful companion of arm-months to explain to him the reasons for his conversion. Then the military nobility becomes court nobility; it is no longer only a question of blue ribbons and governments, and, at the On the eve of the Revolution, Marie-Antoinette wrote to her cousin to promise him a favor of this kind. The prince of Talmont, as we know, took a glorious part in the war. from Vendée. By a refinement of cruelty, he is brought from Rennes to his castle of Thouars to be guillotined in the courtyard of honor. After the execution, the peasants, whom the family has showered benefits for centuries, dance in a circle around the head attached to a pike, change so much :

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 91

Mr. de la Trémoille

Wet!

Mr. de la Trémoille

Will wet!

And look at the contrast! This man who cares about his race, which, like those knights who prepared in advance the tomb where they were to rest dead, raises to his own a monument worthy of them, is the regular guest of these Frankfurt crown miners, enriched by speculation that you know.

Seeing this descendant of so many con-

92 JEWISH FRANCE

tables, (the dukes and peers, great and proud lords, I

Delaire. This novelist is not the first to come with a tormented style. Others never worry to look for where the character they put in comes from scene; it's some random passerby who arrives, we don't know from where. Cladel, on the contrary, reconstructs above all the origin of his heroes^ he knows only a Celt, a German, a Gallo-Romans are not alike, they know the strength of this tradition which will perhaps be embodied in a man of true French temperament, who will save the Fatherland, because that he will not even bother to discuss all the declamatory turlutaines put into circulation by the Freemason and Jewish press.

Dux is the most awful coachman that ever rode through the streets of Paris, in the snow and the rain, a iron health, an unquenchable thirst and an insolence that has no equal; he has a horror of the bourgeois, he guesses instinctively, he covers him with his insulting epithets, he dishonors him by the familiarity of his use of the familiar form. Arrogant, solitary, he goes thus through the city, and the observer, in This automedon, less polite than his horses, recognizes a descended from the eagle-beaked lords of old, the type degenerate feudalism.

If he had been given the choice, who knows if Dux would not have preferred to live free among the coachmen than to furnish the Rothschild salons?

For part of the nobility, the House of Rothschild plays the role that the House of France once played. It is a strange and curious destiny that of this family to which we will later devote a special study, and which is so intimately linked to the history of this century. We do not

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 93

we want to take today only the side that touches to worldly life. Read again the Rothschilds had to struggle-long time. Forty years ago, Tarislocracy jumped of indignation at the mere thought of seeing Jews mingling to her.

We recalled the eloquent and laconic fi donc! of the Duchess of Angoulême; it was necessary to put all the diploma-European matter in motion to obtain that the Rothschilds were admitted, not to the Court circle – all the chamberlains would have returned their keys to such a proposition – but were allowed to present themselves to the Tuileries on days of great official crowds. Three times the bailiff, suffocated by such audacity, threw them out,

The authors of a witty pamphlet, published in 1826: Biographies of the ladies of the Court and of the Faubourg Saint-Germain, have recounted this episode of history throughout intimate of the Restoration. Their portrait of the Baroness Esther-Rebecca de Rothschild would figure, without disadvantage, next to some sketches by Tallemant des Réaux.

One of the modern torches of ancient Zion: woman, daughter and sister of honest Israelites devoted to the worship of the Golden Calf, she believed she could see how her husband treated kings as equals. She had her horses to the carriage and ordered that it be taken to the Tuileries. But there, cruel disappointment! they refused to receive her (1).

(!) Last year, the Duke of Aumale having to dine the Duchess of Ayen and Baroness de Hirsch, put the Jewess on her right, and the Duchess on her left. During the fairs given at Chantilly, he placed, it is true, the Grand Duchess Vladimir to her right and Baroness Gustave de Rothschild on his left, but as he left the table, he offered his arm to the baroness!

Note that the Duchess of Ayen, who is said to be a woman

94 JEWISH FRANCE

Stung to the quick, she returns home; tears flow from her eyes. Jerusalem 1 she cries out, Jerusalem! what an offense to your People! Extraordinary couriers are sent immediately to all the courts of Germany to inform them of this great event-nement. Kings are agitated, councils are assembled, diplomats discuss. Metternich takes up the pen, the Austrian ambassador runs to the Tuileries, the double doors open and our baronne has crossed the Marshals' Hall. Then all is joy in Israel; the mountains leap like rams, the hills like little lambs. The harps that slept suspended-due to the willows on the shore quiver again under the fingers daughters of Zion and the chosen people celebrate once again the wondrous old passage of the Red Sea.

About the Red Sea, did you know that this color is the one that our circumcised Jesus prefers and that it is with a red uniform, overloaded with two epaulettes of colonel, that he is accustomed to attending all our national celebrations-nales? His faithful Rebecca, the chosen one of his heart, the angel of his affections-tions accompanied him to the last ball of the City. This pearl of Israel, who may be twenty-eight years old, was embedded in an embrasure of crossing, between two Christian diamonds of such beautiful water that they absorbed all its brilliance.

time. In 1846, in honor of the arrival in Baden of a foreign sovereign, they wanted to organize a ball. They appointed, to settle the details of the party, three commissioners, among which Mr. Maurice de Haber. The other two refused very charitable and very good, has no reason to frequent the wife of a banker who ruined so many unfortunate people; she did not need to borrow money from the Jews, because she has a fortune considerable, she inherited from the Marquis de La Ferté-Mun, who was very rich and she is the daughter-in-law of the Duke of Moailles, to whom belongs the magnificent land of Maintenou. One cannot explain the Celtic habit of lowering oneself without necessity.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 95

to have a Jew as a colleague, even though this colleague was Mr. de Haber, the very wealthy banker from Cologne, allied with the family of a Marshal of France, to the Grouchy family. Mr. de Haber sent witnesses. The commissioners refused—rent to fight with him and did not consent to cross the iron than with one of his friends.

(The spice of the matter, say the Israeli Archives—lites (4), from which we borrow this story, it is that Mr. de Haber, although son-in-law of Mr. Worms de Romilly, president of the Central Consistory, did not belong no longer to Judaism, but rather to the Protestant religion. Mrs. de Haber, his daughter, had converted a few months earlier—converting to Catholicism, for the sole purpose of marrying Mr. de Grouchy. y>

Jewish tenacity, patience in enduring affronts and pretending not to even see them, managed to all (2). Old James entered the company as buffoon; he amused; he was made to repeat himself at every moment his famous charade.

— My first has tents, my second has tents, my third has tents and my third is a boy default.

— The word! The word! they shouted.

(1) Israeli Archives, volume 36.

(2) This fat Viscountess of Noailles who herself drew up the first Rothschild invitation list. A word spoken in this evening by Baron James has remained legendary. He gave his arm to was in his garden and which we had forgotten to fill.

—Montâme, replied the baron, it is a drou to put the said ficomtesses when they are not good...

96 JEWISH FRANCE

—Chahmsîe, the baron replied triumphantly.
It was he who once said that we spoke in front of him straw men:

— Fuiy the man of baille is a po7ine geose for the rascals, they end up douchours har to make him serf of read to their shareholders.

People told each other about him some incredible stinginess.
doesn't know the story so often quoted? One day, a friend comes ask Dumas père for five hundred francs. The great genereux was dry; the case however was pressing; he takes the pen and wrote to the baron a letter sparkling with wit to borrow twenty-five louis from him. The billionaire does not doesn't even deign to answer.

Some time later, we were talking about autographs on rue Laffitte.

— So these papers have value? asked the baron.

— It depends.

— I have one I'll get for you.

He shows Dumas's letter and is immediately offered one.
ten louis, which he accepts, naturally.

Dumas took his revenge with a nice word. One day while we were begging at a charity party, one of the patronesses offered alms-to the baron.

— • I have already given, said the financier.

"I haven't seen him," replied the lady, "but I believe so."

—And I, said Dumas, I saw you, but I don't believe it.
The Baron's coreligionists themselves were withering his greed for gain. The Jewish Archives tell us one of the lessons he received from Marcus Prague, one of the officiating ministers. One Yom Kippur, James de

Marcus Prague to keep his prayer book for him. He notices-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 97

knew that he was examining with interest this splendidly connected.

- My Machsor seems to please you, he said, how much will you give me some?

- How, Baron, replied Prague, who was a zealot of the Law, in such a place and on such a day, you still want to trade

The rebuffs, I said, did not discourage him. Arsène Houssaye, who was present at the scene, recounted what a lovely way Musset put the baron in his place who had slipped into a reading given at the Empress's house and the Stream.

Another time, it was d'Orsay who took charge of the lesson. One day, while playing whist in a drawing room, the financier had dropped a louis on the ground. Immediately, it disturbs everything the world and takes a torch from the table to find his twenty francs.

- Leave it, my dear fellow, said d'Orsay, I'll light, and he lights a thousand franc note with a candle to help the baron look for his louis...

Today, the Rothschilds would still be brought to heel. if they rubbed shoulders with some writer who had preserved the feelings of pride of old, but they no longer have to fear- to meet a d'Orsay in the aristocracy.

The aristocracy, at least the one that appears in the accounts reports from Parisian newspapers, is literally sprawled at the feet of the Rothschilds; she regards it as an honor to be received by them and Baroness Alphonse was able to say what prodigious word in the mouth of a Jewess: <(I cannot yet not invite everyone!"

There is something real in this degradation- incomprehensible. What more striking example of the degree to which descendants of illustrious races can fall, and dominated by this imperative need to have fun which I was talking just now about what happened at the time of the catastrophe of the General Union?
II 6

98 JEWISH FRANCE

I do not intend to deal with this issue in depth. confusing, it would take a whole chapter to elucidate it.

Most likely the Catholics, candid as all-days, were lured into a trap to be robbed and dishonored by the Rothschilds with the complicity of the gov-government.

The name Feder_, Bontoux's alter ego, is a name absolutely Jewish. The Directory of Jewish Archives for 1884, the year of the world 5645, indicates a Feder among the Jewish professors at the Faculty of Nancy. The Feder of V General Union is now one of the main ban-Berlin quiers.

Admit that before engaging in this campaign, the Conservative Party leaders should have done some research. All these stiff necks, who would hesitate to go and take a mug in a cafe, should have asked to an intelligence agency to enlighten them on the morals of this Feder, before exhorting the poor priests country people, small Catholic rentiers, servants to entrust their savings to him (4).

As for Bontoux, he was surrounded in Vienna only by

(1) Details of Feder's mistress, who called herself Sou-kiss, dragged in all the newspapers. She fires a pistol shot on a financier in Lyon, she is expelled as German, she tries to commit suicide. This is the real Jewish drama that fuels daily-the facts stated.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 99

Jews, all his employees were Jewish. His man-fiancé was a man named Rappaport, who won ten million with him.

Bontoux, however, appears to have been of relatively good faith. The matters he dealt with were serious. The Oriental Bank project, which particularly raised against him Gamondo and the Levantine Jews, would have given to the France has a great influence in the East.

It is difficult to explain, however, that, for one's own sake, spoke of the struggle he wanted to support against the Jews, and that he was content to murmur vaguely to the cantonade. We would have liked this vanquished person to say honestly: "This is what I wanted to do_, these are the obstacles against which I broke, the organization of the Jewish Bank is constituted in such a way, it has such means. > There would have been at least one social lesson there.

What is certain is that all the rules of justice were odiously raped in this circumstance. directors of the Company were arrested without investigation, on the complaint from a single individual who claimed that we had dis-laid down from its funds, which was later absolutely recognized false (1). Nothing was lost then since sums huge were owed to the bank, only two days later a general meeting was to take place which would certainly have-saved the situation (2).

(1) Is it necessary to recall that after the disaster of the Bank of the Loire, Savary, former under-secretary of state for justice, was left free, was able to continue to set up electricity companies and even run adventures that ended in Bras-are martyrs?

(2) I have seen how imprudent the administrators were.

100 JEWISH FRANCE

It was Hiimbert, the Freemason Keeper of the Seals, who was the instrument of the Jews.

Nothing is more curious than this figure of Humbert de the Union Chain. It appears as a way of Father Goriot or Monsieur Cardinal, but his Delphine from Nuçingen, his Pauline, it is his son; it is to him that he sacrifice everything.

As soon as the family is involved in Jewish affairs, she enters in the middle of the novel, we start talking about a succession in Spain, which reached a fabulous figure. A small professor of Roman law in Toulouse, the father, to the knowledge of all, possesses no fortune; all suddenly these people stir the gold like in a book of Balzac. A title of four hundred thousand planes of rent is consigned in the name of Mr. Humbert junior, which will not be put in possession of his personal fortune only upon the death of a godmother who is in a nursing home. In addition huge properties in the Aude, the son Humbert buys in Seine-et-Marne a royal property, the Vives-Eaux.

how much above all they lacked moral courage in not attacking not really the Jews against whom they are pushing real screams when talking to them face to face; it is right to pay tribute to the scrupulous rigor they have shown in this disaster. After the terrible maneuvers employed against The General Union distributes 70 percent to its shareholders. Suppose that a police raid takes place in one of the Jewish banks, – and I am speaking of the most solid in appearance, – one would distribute to the people the cobwebs that line safes whose money has long since disappeared.

If the coulisâiers, who gave one hundred and twenty million to the Union, had not not been Jews, if they had loyally paid at least half of what they owed, the shareholders would not have lost a penny.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 101

to a notary in Aude and 125,000 francs in Melun. The 750,000 francs were not returned on time. A trial, including the press reports, gets involved and we auction the Vives-Eaux, their splendid furniture, the cellar which contains great vintage wines, Moët, Cliquet, Gâteau-Yquem, Chambertin, Saint-Emilion, the stables with twelve horses luxury, Daumont-style harness, dukes, breaks, coupes, landaus, carriages. In August 1884, at the time when Mr. Eugène Delize, bailiff in Melun, will proceed with the sale, a dispatch from Aude arrives ordering a stay.

Isn't this a beautiful dream for this family of pro-teacher who had only the meager to live for long father's salary?

What confounds the imagination in the matter of the Union, It is the attitude of the victims themselves.

The French nobility had just been deprived of what, for she, was once more precious than money, more precious than life: honor. This dear treasure, amassed for so long of generations, was thrown into the stream. The most beautiful names, the Broglies, the d'Harcourts, the Biencourts, the Lupés were covered in mud, likened to those of the crooked crooks who are making headlines in the courts.

What is called the world manifested the intention of not to see at least those foreigners who, to increase their monstrous fortune, had not hesitated to dishonor old France. For eight days they kept their word. baronesses terrified at being quarantined like this, lamented and reproached their husbands for having done the shot. To test the waters, they tried to give a small party. It was a big one that should have been given. People were suffocating in the salons at this victims' ball, and, at he 6.

10- JEWISH FRANCE

First rank, among the most oligarchical, were the unfortunates dishonored by the Rothschilds, the fathers, the brothers, the sisters of these unfortunate people, the d'Haussonvilles, by example, doubly affected in the d'Harcourt and in the de Broglie.

What a vision, for the observer, that of all these families who were glorious, parading in dazzling attire under the barely concealed jeers of some cos- Jews Mopolites who mocked their grief, counted how many poor devils had committed suicide following the Crash, asked aloud if the case would go to the police correction- or in the assize court, if the regime of central prisons was hard in France!

Some contemporary novelists have been accused of being disrespectful to the past, and to laugh at things that were august, what a picture, both sinister and comic, tragic and burlesque, could one draw which was not infer- laughing at this reality?

Note that this degradation is absolutely specific to the French nobility. A few hours by train are enough to transform the haughty daughter of Alphonse de Rothschild, Madame Ephrussi, so haughty towards our aristocracy, in a very humble little Jewess who, equipped with all kinds of recommendations, would be very happy and well honored if the court of Russia deigned to receive it, no not on the same footing certainly, but following on from there wife of some valiant officer who, for fortune, has than his pay.

The journey that he made to St. Petersburg, in the beginning of 1884, the beautiful triumphant of our salons. By dint of importunities, of highlighted influences, the Empress of Russia had let herself go, quite against heart, to allow Ms. Ephrussi to be presented to him at Winter Palace. The master of ceremonies, says the Cor-

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 10^

He was to introduce this Jewish woman. – You will introduce her to me. leaving, replied the Empress. Consequently, the daughter of Alphonse de Rothschild was not presented to the Fzarine that at the moment when she left the living room in which she had just spoken with several ladies, with the grace which is usual for her. As for Mrs. Ephrussi who, that day, was covered with a veritable rain of rubies, she had neither a look, nor a word from the sovereign.

Last year, the Austrian government, which is pro-so much, from a financial point of view, in the hands of the Israelis – liles, refused to accept the United States Minister, MAM Keiley, because he married a Jewish woman.

We have already seen the officer corps closing in front of the son of Bleichræder, the German correspondent of the France, recounted in March 1884, how the girl of the Rothschild of Berlin was received in the society

On the subject of anti-Semitism, he wrote, here is an unpublished story one of the most curious and which is currently running the Berlin fairs. The daughter of the banker Bleichræder having been introduced, this winter, to the Court, at the first ball that took place there, no one invited him-tion, which she wept bitterly after returning home she; and, nevertheless, she appeared at the next ball at the Old Castle, and suffered exactly the same fate at the third dance party of the Court, the Hereditary Prince of Germany took pity on the young Israelite and ordered an officer to go and offer himself to do it to dance.

By order of His Highness the Crown Prince, the latter said to Ms. de Bleichræder, I have come to invite you to the first country dance.

The daughter of the banker who taxed France five billion, in 1871, gladly accepted such a vitalion...

i04 JEWISH FRANCE

The spectacle we are witnessing in France explains to us that how races end. Rome lives in decline analogous. Juvenal showed us the patricians, whose ancestors had conquered the world, begging for a place in the table of the enriched sons of slaves. Lucien paraded in front of we the varieties of parasites: the Plagipatide or the Duricapitor who receives blows, the Dérisor who has as attribut- • lions to say good words.

The Pvothlischilds are more hospitable than the Virron of Juvenal who left his guests the wine of Benevento, while that he drank, himself, from the large cup,

Where on the amber a festoon of pearls stands out,

Alban wine, such as only Thraseas and Helvidius on the birthday of Cassius or Brutus. We drink at Ferrières du Romanée which is famous. Baron James has tried to bring him to the cellars of Paris, but this was no longer that." At least that is Arthur's feeling.
Meyer who apparently drank it, or who conversed with people who had seen them drink it.

The Romanée is Alphonse's; the Château-Laffitte is Gustave; the Mouton belonged to James who no longer drinks it for all sorts of reasons that are very good. Our wine, where the national spirit was once re-tempered, belongs to the Jews like everything else. Thus is fulfilled the promise made to Israel by Jehovah: "You will drink the wine of the vineyards that you will not have planted." Let us sing in chorus, for lack of to be able to sing something else, the words of the diagram:
"The Eternal is one... and the goyim are not clever."

The heraldic goym who crowd into the Roths-children are not only attracted by the scent of Romanée. Many, among those who seek this hos-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY i05

humiliating pity, have at home a little wine which is not bad point, an old hotel often where there are portraits family books that speak of the virtues of yesteryear, books where relives the youth of our ancient writers, an intel-intelligent, children to whom they could tell the battles where their fathers were. Why leave everything this? My God, it's always atavism which, unfortunately-As we know, this transmits defects rather than qualities.

For them, going to Rothschild is like going to Court.
"king of the Jews, the Jew of kings" is not quite Louis XIV,
but they have the illusion of being in a palace.

Court life was essentially parasitic and yet-while it ruined those who lived in this atmosphere.
In dealing with the Jew, the Christian, who appears to be the obliged, gains nothing. We paid the parasites the dress of feast, the Trechedipna, necessary to present itself decem-ment at table; the Jewish barons undoubtedly pay occasionally some invoices from seamstresses. Blei-Chræder acts thus in Prussia, but Count Vasili, in his Memories of Berlin Society^ notes by what dishonorable familiarities he makes pay for the slight service he a diabolical pleasure to make a great lord feel proud or to a haughty noble lady the weight of his benefits. He finds a particular joy in moistening them—bind, with the help of an odious and coarse familiarity. He types on the shoulder of the young man who comes to confess a debt to him of play, kisses the hands of the woman who finds herself forced to confide in him about his troubles and ask for his help to pay his seamstress. >>>

This arch-millionaire, almost blind, darkened by the thought that death will come to take him on his bed millions, is a type that reproduces in thousands of copies—to please in the Jewish world.

100 JEWISH FRANCE

In the midst of all these men who bow down before them, but who are still superior to them in elegance native, the Rothschilds are still uncomfortable. You I know them. None of them look like much.

Baron Alphonse is 54 years old, he looks 70, or more—early on he has difficulty carrying them; he is very small, with whitish sideburns, sparse hair of an indefinite; it personifies the premature decrepitude of his breed.

What is striking in this physiognomy is the absence of gaze, the perpetual blinking of the eyes. A diplomat One day a stranger pointed out this peculiarity to me: It seems, he told me, that the metallic reflection of the gold that this man has contemplated all his life has extinguished, worn out this look, as happens to workers who embroider fabrics of gold or silver. *

Very rogue in the world, Alphonse has popular instincts—laries; he likes to go around Paris while hiding his royalty and posing as a photographer near the little seamstresses or florists, with whom he chats gladly.

Edmond is the classic spyglass seller, he has a reddish beard and points a lorgnette at his eyes with a nervous tic that would like to be impertinent: he always has the searching air of someone who is looking for something he can't find.

Gustave, with his brown beard already salt and pepper, his tall, would look relatively distinguished, if he knew than the other members of his family; his wife is of a unbearable arrogance.

Everyone is more or less gloomy and queasy. Some have a damaged spinal cord or an effusion of the synovia, like Edmond; the others become blind from an early age, like Nathaniel who was being taken for a walk in a small car through these magnificent apartments-fiques, whose luxury no longer existed for him. We find them badly brought up, they are above all morose, feeling, like the most other Jews, within a scandalous opulence, what we call: the great misery of everything. 3) They have no incentive, no motive for action, they wanted conquer France, they conquered it and they feel that it dies under their deleterious breath, that they have only one corpse.

Alphonse has wit or rather a kind of humor English turned to bitterness and irony which, maintained, by the need to accommodate high society, which he despises, sometimes pours out in fanciful sallies, in disgusting allusions-obliging and teasing. To these sudden escapades, the con-lively laugh yellow, the servants laugh below and read Baron adds, mockingly: "Do you want to have a duilomanée(l)?"

(t) A memory of Arsène Houssaye on General Fleury attests ■how little these upstarts have any idea of true politeness, of that politeness which comes naturally from a high heart. One day that Arsène Houssaye had General Fleury for dinner, he gives the place of honor to Taucien, grand equerry. – "Oh! oh!" cries Fleury, This is what I am no longer used to. There was a time when the old man Rothschild gave me the place of honor, perhaps because mea wines were no worse than his own. After the war, I was "I was still invited to this house, but I was put in second place, then to the third, then to the end of the table.

A gentleman, – I do not speak of those of today, –

J08 JEWISH FRANCE

Much has been said about the splendors of Ferrières and, in risk of disillusioning onlookers a little, it is necessary-to show our readers what the reality is dwelling of the king of the Jews.

inspired the Rothschilds to want to imitate Louis XIV; they were guided by other considerations: ease^ in case of alarm, to reach Germany via the line of the East (1), the memory of a Jewish colony which, we have seen, was very flourishing in the Middle Ages in this region, Chelles, Meaux, Lagny, Gagny.

With their ordinary bad taste and their lack of sympathy—thie for our French artists, the Rothschilds have charged a English architect, Paxton, to build this royal residence. What was bound to happen happened.

would have exaggerated, on the contrary, the respect towards a vanquished. Who does not recalls Louis XIV set fire to Europe to ensure the right to precedence to our ambassadors over the representatives of all other powers and constantly giving way, at Versailles, at Jacques H, poor and dethroned?

(1) The Rothschild hotels in Paris are machined like theaters, barricaded inside like citadels, organized for defense like medieval ghettos. If I were not afraid of harm entrepreneurs, I could give a lot of serious information. The London Voice, in December 1883, published some details of the work carried out in the hotel from Saiut-Floreutin Street.

"Baron Alphonse de Rothschild has just completed the transformation of his house on rue Saint-Florentin into a sort of formation—armored terrace. The watches or display cases for trinkets disappear a simple push of a button in sealed safes in the wall.

"Each painting has its (numbered) morocco case, so that, If necessary, the entire gallery could be packed in an hour. The note of the cases alone is set at 50,000 francs.

Will they have enough time to pack?

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 109

Our great national architect, Philibert Delorme, in his Treatise on Architecture says excellent things about the impossibility for foreigners to fully understand the conditions that suit our country, to harmonize their constructions with the climate, the sky, the French habits—women.

Ferrières once again agrees with the Abbot of Saint-Serge. Paxton built one of those bizarre castles there, its four facades of dissimilar style, seem quite de-landed in the middle of our northern countries. We think involuntarily-silently to this gigantic caravanserai of Schafîahaûsen which, with its tall columns and Italian-style promenades, contrasts so singularly with the landscape in front of the waterfall of the Rhine.

The interior is more interesting. After crossing a large vestibule decorated with a Tiepolo ceiling, we enters a small dining room which contains some-some pretty paintings by Philippe I^ousseau. The great hall beam dining room, with its forty velvet armchairs red, does not lack a certain allure.

From the Louis XVI salon, the surprises begin.
We see all the successively passing before our eyes wonders of the genius of the centuries that have been able to gather on a single point gold, universal relations, freema-bullshit of second-hand dealers, on the lookout throughout Europe, and reserving the flower of their finds for the sovereigns of Israel. The masterpieces of 18th century art, the tables by Gouthière, inlaid furniture by Riesener and Boule, Gaffieri's brass adorns this charming piece in its spring and clear tone surmounted by a plabackground of Henry Lévy. In the middle appears, like a trophy, II 7

ilo JEWISH FRANCE

Marie-Antoinette's incomparable harpsichord, which we have heartache to find myself in this house of Jews.

A small, dark closet catches the eye. It's a roratory:
a very simple piece whose only ornament is the routhe waters of the Torah and the seven-branched lampstand; in
In the shade, we can see a piano and some straw chairs.

The family room is also called the leather room of Cor Doue; it owes its name to superb hangings of embossed and embossed leather representing the Triumph of Mordecai. These leathers, perfectly preserved, come from the Flanders, they had probably been brought by someone great Spanish lord, perhaps they had even been manufactured on site, because factories appear to have existed some time in Flanders; they were acquired by the llothschild for a negligible sum. These are very curious specimens of these golden leathers, of these cardovanes, of these guadamacites of whom Cervantes speaks on several occasions-taken from his works (1). We also find there, as a carpet table, a Savonnerie tapestry all lamé with ar-heavens.

The examination of some volumes, which we glimpse in a ebony furniture topped with a cloisonné elephant, deco- certainly slightly. "What are the books tomorrow, friends?

(î) Among others, in VEntremes del Viejo Zelo^o: "Monseigneur, said Hortigosa, I have taken the boldness to come and beg Your Greece to give me a great charity, charity, alms and good works in buying this guadameci, the work is good, the guadameci is new. See how beautiful it looks, your paintings of the pictures appear alive.

We have seen (book ii), the Jew Lopez doing an active trade in literary works familiar to these people?" one wonders and we look. We see: Soulié, Paul de Kock, Pigault-Lebrun, Touchard Lafosse (Chronicles of VÆil-de-Beef), Eugène Sue (The Wandering Jew), Jacob (Story of France). All this in the most dreadful editions, in editions that a scholar would not want to check a quote.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY iii

Doesn't it feel a bit like dirty laundry? under a silk dress? What insight does this give you into the world that goes there and exposes some young girl to take a random volume and to fall on Pigault-Lebrun!

To get back to us, would you like to come forward onto the steps? On the right and left you will find two Glodion vases; The pair cost fifty thousand francs. In summer, the view is beautiful, we are in front of the pond and, beyond, we sees the park and enclosures full of sheep and deer which add animation to the decor.

Let's go back to the apartments. We're going to meet, for the first time, history as a visitor in this ch- a book that has no history. In 1815, the Rothschilds came poor with the invasion; the invasion^ in 1870 the finds billionaires and can pay them his compliments.

Here we are in the tapestry room which does not contain other paintings than a few panels by Desportes. Watteau tapestries and tapestries hang on the walls ries woven from silk, of a youth and a freshness without equal. It is there in front of these smiling Loves, these shepherdesses teased by Celadons, in front of all these evocations of a that the meeting between Bismarck and Jules Favré took place.

The Iron Chancellor's welcome to the straw rhetorician was terrible and the inhabitants of the castle, who had the echoes of this scene, have kept a memory of it which is not close to fade away.

1 12 JEWISH FRANCE

After having refused the day before to receive the man from the so-called National Defense, Bismarck made him wait two hours in the vestibule, under the Tiepolo.

This time again our enemy showed himself as the Pos-truth will see it, taking advantage of the failures of conscience of his opponent, but not lacking for himself strict duties of conscience, not committing, sum any, no act that could prevent the salvation of his soul. The men of September 4th were guilty of a crime against the Fatherland by making a revolution in front of foreigners ger, by driving out the national representation. This act, they could still, if not repair it, at least mitigate it by consulting the country, asking it loyally if it wanted peace or war. Bismarck made it easy for them and, certainly, showed Jules Favre where the way was straight, honest, patriotic. The unfortunate old man refused to be able to retain power for a few more days.

After dismissing this declaimer with a disdainful gesture-tor who, resorting, in an interview like that, to a courtroom mimic, pretended to cry, The prince, it is said, remained pensive for a few moments. This great male, for sure, was not one of those sensitized people who, like to those who are moved by the kindness of the Rothschilds, lar-meient, as some women forget themselves, by a sort of tissue relaxation. The heart that was beating in this rough chest perhaps felt no less some manly pity in thinking of so many men, given birth in pain by the mothers, who were going to expire on the battlefields, so that a few million more entered this Jewish dwelling.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 113

Bismarck's bedroom immediately followed the drawing room. of the tapestries where the interview took place, it is the room of honor. It was formerly the chamber of Baron James, and of her time she was tense in green because of weakness

It features an exquisite portrait of a woman by Vinci and a dapper painting by Camille Roqueplan representing a episode from the Confessions of Jean-Jacques Rousseau.

The Venetian room is nothing extraordinary, this Au hunting time, we put one princess there, another elsewhere," one says philosophically to the visitor.

The decoration of the smoking room is by Eugène Lamy, who re-traced there, with a certain verve, some episodes of the car-naval base of Venice.

The hall alone is worth a visit to Feri>ières. In the evening, with the eleven hundred gas lamps from its luminous ceiling illuminating the brilliant toilets, the diamonds, the flowers, this hall is truly magical. It is the triumphant piece of the place: everything speaks of triumphs. Along the immense gallery circular which reigns all around, are arranged superb tapestries depicting triumphs: Triumph of Alexander^ Triumph of Neptune, Triumph of the Peace... and even the Triumph of Christianity at Tolbiac.

We see there What we do not see in this prodigious mess? Here first, to the left of the fireplace, which we We will talk about the portrait of Baron James by Flandrin and Baroness James, by Ingres. On the walls A Portrait of a Man by Rembrandt, Countess Delia Rocca and Don Luis de Haro by Velasquez, a Diana Rubens' huntress, David and Goliath from The Guide, the Princess Henrietta of England by Reynolds, Diogene looking for a man from Van Mol, Bordone's Message.

114 JEWISH FRANCE

Everywhere there are Italian cabinets, display cases cluttered with small masterpieces, ivories, earthenware from Delia Robbia, the Musette Player by Bernard de Palissy, from enamels by Petitot, boxes by Blarenberghe, by the Saxons, the mirror of M'^ de Pompadour, boxes with the coat of arms of France, which we are quite surprised to meet there.

The monumental fireplace is decorated with Italian medallions-links and surmounted by a bust of Minerva. On a plaque of brown marble we read in gold letters, where each word is oddly spaced by a point, this inscription which sings the happiness of possession, the joy of having a sumptuous home, when so many unfortunate French people without shelter wander, hungry stomachs, on winter nights.

Emmy. soyet. printens. soyet. winter.
Under, white, snow, or. branches, green.
When, true, friends, we. make it, live.
So, their place, for. all. is. here.
Like, to the old. to the young, also.

(1570).

The morocco album, which is left lying around ostentatiouslytation on the table, awakens many thoughts.

On the first page we read: "Memory of the charming day of December 16, 1862: Napoleon. » A little more bottom: "Memory of friendship for the charming hospitality of the Baron and Baroness James de Rothschild, November 20 1866: Mathilde.

Charms, charmed, charmers, everything is charming and suddenly on the next page, a name appears drawn in large characters: Wilhem, SI September 1870.
Guillaume, before leaving Ferrières, wanted to put his signature, not following that of Napoleon III, but

JEWISH PARTS AND THE FRENCH SOCIETY IIÇJ

at the top of the next page. Bismarck and Moltke have signed after him and the most modest officer, the last second lieutenant who passed there wanted, in turn, that his ironic signature was drawn on the book inaugurated by the Emperor of the French.

Along with these names of winners here are the names of the most illustrious representatives of the nobility of France and The contrast is painful. The Germans, who figure in this register, entered there by force; they occupied the house under the law of war and demanded that they served, not as respectful guests, but as victorious ones, they toasted, not to the graces of the baroness, but to their valiant Emperor, their only master after God, Our nobles, on the contrary, came there as sportsmen, courtnodding their heads and happy to be welcomed.

How many names we would like to be able to erase! How many falls that passions alone explain! How sad to meet Berryer there! The game! "Let us pray to God," said Saint Paul, to send us only temptations that are ordinary.

The impression left by this residence is an impression of fatigue more than of admiration. It is a mess, a bric-a-brac. All these objects, brought back from all corners of the earth, swear among themselves; these opim spoils of the universe do not harmonize, these manifestations of so much civili- different stations are cringing at this rapprochement (1).

(1) It is obviously with reference to the Rothschild collection that de Goncourt wrote: There are art collections that do not show- thirty neither a passion, nor a taste, nor an intelligence, nothing but the Brutal victory of wealth.

t16 LA. FRANCE JrjIVE

The love of the trinket or rather the Jewish feeling of acquisivity, possessiveness is pushed to the point of childishness. A small stoneware pot from Flanders, worth six francs, serves as a counterpart to a plate of Oiron or a soft clay figurine. The good Semites of the hotel of sales could not resist the temptation to abuse those same whom they call with such veneration: "The barons." More than one object is modern; many pieces of gold- vrierie, in particular, seem to me to have received this late that Mr. Paul Eudel, in his book on Rigging, has^^eWe "the baptism of French hallmarks."

The park, however vast it may be, does not have the noble aspect Louis XIV avenues. At the Rothschild square you would have ordered our sculptors, who struggle so painfully- perhaps in the midst of circumstances unfavorable to their art, a whole world of statues, marbles, bronzes. The Duke of Aumale acted thus for Chantilly, he has- sent a La Bruyère to Thomas, a Therme to Lanson, a group of Pluto and Proserpine in Chapu. He ^ has barely, throughout Ferrières, half a dozen statues which have roughly the value of those which decorate the entrance of the sta- bathing establishments (1).

(1) Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, so indifferent to the efforts of our artists, so closed to the noble and generous traditions of our patricians of the past, nevertheless had the effrontery, in the month of April 1885, to present himself at the Academy of Fine Arts. This time, at the In the midst of so much servility and so much vileness, there was a revival of modesty, and a few independent men succeeded in making com- take to the Academy that the love of art and the purchase of trinkets at good account have absolutely nothing in common. Despite the campaign patriotic of Ephrussi and Albert Wolff who dedicated three columns In advocating this candidacy, the baron was shamefully rejected.

Through the aisles, we can see two or three old women women bent over the ground picking up the grass of the senthird party. When the traveler is distinguished, we ask for additional information from the village. "It was the good baroness who came up with the idea for this work to help the residents of the country!" You shed a tear, like Jules Favre, and this arid and parched land seems grateful for this mark of sympathy.

The most beautiful are the greenhouses and the aviaries. The greenhouses are an enchantment, full of plants blooming in all seasons, from pineapple seeds, to flowers, to fruits. In The immense aviaries are home to hundreds of birds.
rare buckets whose color, infinitely varied, seems to reflect the particular sky of each country.

Chinese partridges, red-bellied golden pheasants, fai-Soemmering's pheasants, Lady Amsherst's pheasants, hoki, trigopan wearing a scarlet hood, lophophore resplendent with a white beard collar, touca with the ugly black beak that devours pheasants like the Jew devours Christians, Egyptian flamingo leaning over his pond filled with fish, Chinese blue magpies, doves stabbed in the Philippines with the "blood stain" on the chest, – all this stirs in a quivering of wings,
in a picturesque confusion of multicolored plumage, in a concert of cries, sometimes strident, sometimes plaintive, and seems like a vision of a corner of earthly paradise.

another would have withdrawn, but the feeling of dignity is absolutely unknown to the Semite who endures everything to achieve his goal.
Baron bought some, basely flattered others, accepted all humiliations that were wanted and ended up being named in the month of " next arch.

II 7.

MS L\ JEWISH FRANCE

These birds are the gaiety of Ferrières, because, deep down,
This castle without a past is gloomy. It does not recall the great seigneurial existences of the past: Sully is gravely going for a walk preceded by his halberdsdiers, followed by its pages, surrounded on the right and left by gentlemen with drawn swords; Chambord or Maurice de Saxe was guarded by his faithful regiments; the home of Wellington carpeted from base to top with flags taken at Waterloo. Victory, heroism, genius have not of the Stock Exchange and the annuity!" shout the visitors as they leave so much.

The Rothschilds have only one brigade as their only guard. of the gendarmerie, which the complacent republicans gave them given out of honor, and which seems to watch over in-accused of being under surveillance. Every week the castle sends two rabbits and a dead pheasant to the police.

-That's a fine arrest to make, I said to the brigadier.

-No doubt, but we would need a warrant.
Will you bring it to me?

- Who knows?

The Rothschilds' great joy is reading the newspapers after some celebration, some death, some wedding. They put in these descriptions, they pass the sheets of hand in hand. They have the articles printed separately for their personal consumption and, in this, they are right: they pre- relative for the history of morals of the documents of which the great writers of the future will take more account than many speeches delivered in the Chambers. The re-collection entitled: Baron James de Rothschild's child, which was taken at Glaxo but has not been put in bookstores, is of a real interest.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 19

All newspapers, except the Jews, the Gazettede France and probably two or three others that I forget (1), perform the duties of paid mourners at funerals of old; they tear their hair out, they tear their face with their nails, they roll on the ground in despair-pear. This dead man would have invented iron like Tubalcaïn, or the plow like Triptolemus, he would have discovered the panacea of all the evils that these public sheets would not speak of not in a more admiring mode. The formulas used to praise this German Jew, who enriched himself at our expense, push back the boundaries of hyperbole.

There are some truly astonishing letters there. "You you will forgive me for coming to disturb you in the middle of your sorrows... My excuse is in the desire that I feel..." This is the ink in which the prince writes to a money-handler from Joinville, a man who has in his veins some drops of the blood of Louis XIV I The letters of the Count of are of the same tone.

Since 1868, servility has only increased. The descriptions of weddings are unheard of. Nothing is missing from these epithalamia; we attend the bride's toilet, we go up in the magnificent team "chosen and equipped by Claude Lachaume, Baron Alphonse's huntsman ;)> we listen

(1) Here, moreover, is the list of newspapers from which the extracts are reproduced: Journal de Paris, the Frat^{ce}, the Constitutionnel, the Liberty[^] the Petit Journal, the Patrie, the Journal of Debates, the National Opinion-nale, Le Temps, Le Figaro, VEpoque, V Evénement, Le Moniteur du Soir, General Correspondence of the Departments, Sport, Memorial diplomatic, financial week.

i20 JEWISH FRANCE

Félix Lévy, "admirable tenor," sings Vlmlac^{li},. of the no less admirable Emile Jonas; then the choirs attack V Alleluia of Erlanger, which is certainly not V Alleluia of the shareholders of the banker of that name; finally, we move on to the sacristy. "It is five thirty," writes Meyer, "the Dangeau of these solemnities, five thirty at the pneumatic clocks and "always" on the clock of the sen-time))

Naturally no name is omitted. Here is the prince Murat, the Duke of Broglie, Buffet, the Count of Turenne, the Viscount d'Harcourt, the Duke and Duchess of La Rochefcu-cauld-Bisaccia, the Duke of La Trémoille, the Duke of Mont-Morency, the Count of Andigné, the Duchess of Fitz-James, the Prince of Ligne, the Prince of Léon, the Count of Mailly-Nesles, the Countess of Clermont - Tonnerre, the Duchess of Maillé, the whole coat of arms of France, in a word, rushed to to worship the Golden Calf and to proclaim to the face of Europe that wealth is the only royalty that still exists.

When there is a party, it goes without saying that the entire police force is on foot and which she allows herself, without any right, to defend to passers-by traffic on the public highway. If a street of Paris was forbidden for a procession, you would see immediately our left-wing puritans go up to the tri-bune; humble and groveling, as is their custom, before the Jewish potentates, they are careful not to intervene. The days-advanced nationals act in the same way; there is only Rochefort, which, decidedly, does not even respect the most high, who allowed himself to blame this pretension of bother others when you are having fun and who has been amused by the idea, moreover singular, "of blocking a street during the day

It is rare that we do not meet, at the end of these

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 121

ceremonies, the tender gentleman who already has moist eyes—of the.

— You know the origin of the Rothschild fortune,
isn't it?

— Yes, I vaguely heard about it

— At the time of the arrival of the French, the elector of Hesse entrusted five million to Anselm Meyer de Rothschild.

— Not possible?

— Yes, sir, five million.

— So what?

— So, sir, Anselme Meyef has returned them. It is as I tell you, he gave them back!

Your interlocutor can't take it anymore; he bursts into tears memory of this beautiful feature.

It is a product of the decadent times we live in;
he is a sensitized, an admirer, to use a Mercier's expression. He would let all the French be slaughtered—
He didn't protest, but the story of this fortune moved him.
There are many journalists who have this, as soon as it is question of the fat Jews, of the admiration of the door-
the tenant of the first floor who has silk shirts;
they worship under them. When it comes to the Rothschilds, Ignotus, usually so independent, is of this school.

Asking millionaires for twenty-five thousand francs to advertise it to them, is neither beautiful nor good, and nevertheless falls within the order of explicable things. But, when you haven't even drunk Romanée, swoon over it people only because they found a way to taking three billion from our pockets is a phenomenon which has always exceeded the limits of my intelligence.

The sensitized person generally does not fail to be ecstatic on the Rothschilds' inexhaustible charity. Oh! the good Baroness! The mother of the poor! as Wolff says.

Now, the Rothschild charity is absolutely a myth. A newspaper we have already mentioned, V Anti-Sémitique^ calculated that in proportion to their fortune the Rothschilds were hardly more generous than the man who gives two cents to a poor person every morning. This is what, amplified by the Jewish press, has become this philanthropy without restraint which moves the sensitized.

The truth, once again, is that the Rothschilds are deeply stingy. We cannot say of them what we have said of the Medici: "They spend on kings what they have won in merchants." No doubt they founded hospitals for their coreligionists; they all establish those who have some chance of success; they help those who are in need; but this falls within their functions—of Nazis, of princes of the Jews; they have at their disposal, in exchange, the most admirable police force there is in the universe; they fulfill the obligations of a charge from which they collect the benefits (1).

What is true of the Rothschilds is true of all bankers. Jews, who never spent a cent except for the gallery. The most astonishing thing is that the Jews found way to create a reputation for charity within ourselves leading us to help the miseries of their own. There is a truly exquisite and disarming racial trait there.

(1) The Rothschilds, however, make quite large gifts and almost always of a useful character at the time of large weddings; to the Count of X..., they gave a clock and a beautiful set of fireplace j to the Marquis of Z..., a living room piece of furniture.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 123

Disasters that have occurred in the world in recent years have almost all hit the Jews. Sezgcdin was entirely occupied by the Israelis—lites; the fire at the Vienna theatre caused countless deaths victims among them. Ghio is full of Jews. The committee affiliate of the Universal Israelite Alliance^ composed of Messrs. Issachar-Jeuda, president, Isaac Bcn-Ghiat, Gabriel Palombo is one of those who stand out for their zeal.

The thought of helping the victims was laudable, but that of bringing out the money necessary for this good

Arthur Meyer is responsible for organizing these mystifications. He watches for disasters like the sailors of an island de Batz used to watch for shipwrecks, and, as soon as a misfortune appears, he confiscates it for his own benefit.

Charity festivals are one of the manifestations of the social life that, later, historians of morals studied will speak with the most utility. They played an important bearing and have multiplied in recent years, because they have a double advantage for the Jews. They attest

(1) No subscription was opened, no ball was organized to rescue the 30,000 Christians massacred in Annam.

A valiant newspaper, La Croix, wrote about this on the date of November 3, 1885:

"If some Jews, after having been pressed for a long time by usury monstrous the people they would have come to exploit^ had been! plundered and expelled, what cries from all those who swear in the name of humanity and civilization; but they are simply classic martial arts Christ!

"They were martyrs who fell, not a thousand at once, but at least thirty thousand, with their priests and nuns. One hundred and sixty churches, built by charity, were burned-lées; we understand that the ball is retreating on this ground; the devil refuses to organize the cotillion.

124 JEWISH FRANCE

in all the lands of the universe the power of Israel, which turns Paris upside down as soon as a Semite has need assistance; they allow less than the Rothschilds to mingle with the world.

The aristocracy, in fact, rushes there with floured mouths, like everywhere she hears a little scraping of violin.

The Chios festival remains the most famous. In front of the black ruins of the Tuileries we had organized a ker-mass, a pleasure fair, as they said, which lasted eight days. It was there that Camondo gave a deserved lesson-ted in the suburb. The festival was naturally suspended on Saturday. – "Why this stop?" asked a young man. Viscount. Aren't we having fun anymore? " – "It's been a while for everything; we are accustomed to observing

we will be all joyful tomorrow, since it is Sunday has no meaning for us and that, I believe, it does not has little more for you... »

On Sunday, the terrace of the Tuileries offered a view curious. Ludo games, shops, fairground trestles had been set up everywhere. The pleasure-stories, the lively retorts, the joyful interpellations crossed in the air with the spiels and the raspy calls-visitors' bacon.

There we found this old guard of the elegroup which is always made up of the same people, always cited with the same epithets in the same newspapers.

Who does not remember the old women of Lysistrata, those lovers of death that resemble "painted coffins" and who go away saying: "So it's for nothing that we

PARIS JURP AND FRENCH SOCIETY 125

we are painted with white lead, adorned with beautiful dresses yellow, and we are here, frolicking and singing between our teeth, to attract some passers-by? » Aristo-phane comes back to memory, in front of these old-fashioned beauties which were at their peak at the time of the Congress of Paris, which were already found decrepit at the end of the Empire and which persist in eternally walking around with a figure that does not changes more, which already seems to have the immobility of things mortuaries.

It is also one of the singularities of our time that this unchanging battalion. Formerly when, according to the expression of the poet, ((the race of life was half done,)) we decided, not without a big sigh perhaps, that we called for retreat; we left this scene with dignity of the world on which we made, formerly, at the hours ra-gods of youth, a sometimes brilliant character.
Today, we cannot resolve to disappear, and certain figures of socialites, suddenly seen under too harsh a light, produce the effect of these skeletons that the Middle Ages liked to represent dressed in silk, covered in jewels, laden with ornaments, grimacing some-that horrible smile with empty eyes, lips par-chimneys, mouths without teeth.

Through this Priapeus, which was illuminated by a thousand lights, mingling with the last fires of a June sun which is slept on the Arc-de-Triomphe, came and went, in the middle guiding a little donkey that all the big ones were petting ladies and who seemed, like Apuleius's golden ass, to have come out suddenly from a Milesian fable. On an improvised stage-aimed, the Earl of Fitz-James played the Vitrie?% and this descendant of a companion of the proscribed histrionic Stuarts in this garden where the bloody deaths on August 10th defenders of the Bourbons, added by his presence I do not know what spice there is in this unique celebration.

128 THE JEWISH FAIRNESS

At the gates, the crowd of Sunday Paris watched, shouted, apostrophized, screamed, vociferated, whistled. In the end, she pressed gently on the low hedge of the guardians of the peace that was trying to hold her back and she entered. Then it was a terrible crowd, where people of the world and ordinary people, black-suited gummy bears and workers in overalls, large worldly and plebeian women rolled pell-mell along the Tuileries, punctuating their descent to a song of ^Jwfié.

—It's the protest against the decrees! said a Jew in seeing a duchess getting into his carriage who, 'a few months before, raised his eyes to the sky and cried out the abomination—nation of desolation (1).

How are the funds collected distributed?
a question that it might be unwise to ask. There is of these committees as of certain electoral committees.

The Dupont Committee Composed of Dupont,
Chaired by Dupont, Designated Dupont.

(i; These are completely the customs of the Directory, with the hypocrisy religious in addition, and in less the temperament, the vitality overflows—Dante of the time, the proud courage of the royalist conspirators. In his charming volume on the Frenchwoman of the century. Octave Uzanue quotes a passage from Riffaut's Paris Day, qifi is completely dang the Q0te of the day. Punchinello recounts his impressions at a ball: "I saw a handsome young man and this handsome young man said to me: Ah! Punch, they killed my father! — They killed your father, and I took my handkerchief out of my pocket when he started to dance; Zig, zag, don don, A step from Rigaudon, n

No clear account has ever been provided. The accounts of the Murcia lottery had not yet been liquidated at month of May ^83. An attempt was made to question, on this subject, a Mr. Bidaut, prefectural advisor of the Seine, who appeared in the committee, but we could never get an answer clear. Strange things had happened on this occasion, since, from March 15, 1880, very honorable merchants—rables, who were part of the committee, had written the following minutes that the Clairon reproduced in his issue of May 20, 1883, without anyone protesting.

Session of March 15, 1880

"The members of the Trade and Industry Committee char-organization of the Franco-Spanish lottery, wanting to-follow through to the end the mission they accepted, but wanting not to take responsibility for very regrettable, blameworthy acts energetically their president, Mr. Jules Jaluzot, and pass on the agenda. » {Adopted unanimously by the voters. — 12 votes., 2 members abstained.)

What were these very regrettable acts? Despite this formal reprimand, Mr. Jaluzot nevertheless remained president of the committee. I have since seen, in public newspapers, that Spanish mayors were prosecuted for having unduly appropriated funds, which would tend to indicate that some funds, at least, had managed to cross the border. I have no mission to clarify this matter which seems to me very complicated. The constant fact, I repeat, is that in despite the presence of a government official, the accounts of a lottery, authorized in 1879, were not still settled in 1883.

The summary accounts of the Ischia committee have been published. We saw that the amounts distributed were 165,523 francs 80 centimes, plus 4,400 francs put in reserve as a guarantee for a disputed matter. This relief is re—I am thus:

178 JEWISH FRANCE

450,200 francs to the victims of iscllfea.
9,406,75 to the poor of Paris.
3,979 85 to the orphans of Groix.
4,937 20 to the orphans of Dieppe.

I hope that of the 9,406 francs 75 centimes allocated to the poor of Paris, we will have given a few cents to the family of this unfortunate worker whom an Italian riddled with French press celebrated, in the Tuileries Garden, that Italy brings us (4). The costs were 244,482 francs, which seems enormous to me since all the newspapers agreed to praise the sublime self-denial, the disadmirable enthusiasm of all those who contributed to this humanitarian enterprise.

At the time when the organizers of this subscription were going up once again to the Gapitole, one of our colleagues, Marius Vachon was visiting Ischia. Modest and sim-

(1) Let us not forget the good CafTola, an Italian, who, in the month of Niars 1884, at Versailles, seeing the company of the "le" regiment of the genius who, music in hand, carried the regimental flag home the colonel after the parade, insulted the flag bearer by shouting "These dirty French, are they stupid to follow this rag!"

When an assistant expressed his indignation, the insulter hit him. in the face and was pulling a knife from his pocket when he was arrested.

In February 1885, three Italians, without any provocation, threw themselves on a poor conscript, named Christien, who was passing by the street de Rivoli, and killed him with knives.

There is not a day that goes by when our French workers are not attacked. by Italian workers.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 1^9

By nature, Vachon did not dare to reveal his quajournalistic status. ((I know southerners, thought-he, if they know that I belong to this French press, which has done so much for them, they will want to cover me at all costs of flowers and carry me in triumph, let us hide!"

Vachon, always dissembling, asked no less to his guide where was this house of Casamicciola which bore was in gold letters this inscription: Maison de la Presse Parisian.

- She's probably on the street that received the same one name ?

-What house? What street? I don't understand, said the guide.

Everything finally became clear and Vachon explained why the unfortunate city was still in ruins.

cobblestones, plaster, eight and ten meters high, where it is unwise to venture out, as the walls are crumbling. Everything is of heartbreaking desolation. In the part of Casamicciola which along the sea, low and long boats, with a dismal appearance—pleasant, were built and form a new city, which resembles to be the rag-picker cities in Paris. The inhabitants themselves hardly look less miserable than Mr. Pou's victims—beautiful; there are eight or ten people in each hut, who live on who knows what, in the middle of basic furniture, and sleep mostly on the bare earth (i).

By March 1884 not a penny had been distributed.
of this money about which so much noise had been made.
The committee, which had accepted this figure of 244,482 francs organizational expenses, had not had the idea, instead of

(1) France, March 14, 1884.

430 JEWISH FRANCE

to make so many sentences, to simply hand over to a man seriously a thousand franc note to pay for his trip and to charge him to go loyally, honestly, to distribute the amount of the subscription to the unfortunate who were without asylum.

The strongest of this kind was the festival given in the month of September 1884, in the Tuileries Gardens for the benefit of cholera. On September 17, the Lanterne published a note full of promise.

As the costs are zero, she said, since everyone has provided free assistance and that it will not be necessary to deduct from the gross revenue that a few cubic meters of gas and a few lamp-pawns, almost the entire sum will, we hope, be paid in the hands of the unfortunate.

The next day it was necessary to tone down some of this anti-joy
It was noticed that some of the tickets presented to the entrance were false. Soon the distressing truth came to light. The commissioners had committed the following embezzlements: more incredible and increased the bills in a truly ably excessive, To the note of the G"»^ of the gas which was not that from 2,000 francs, they had added 10,000 francs, or saying necessary to introduce the gas into the balloons! We will imitate the discretion of V Intransigent in the rest. who wrote on October 3:

We will not dwell on the 6,635 francs of Parisian celebration; it might be entering into the private lives of the organizers;

The night started so badly, they should have restrained themselves a little.

As for the general idea, which probably includes the lavish dinner of the commissioners at the Continental Hotel and their luncheon in the Orangerie Pavilion.... always for the benefit cholera victims 1

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 131

Accounting is definitely a pretty mess.
of committee 1

As one of our witty colleagues said yesterday, "the organizers celebrated under the patronage of two ministers; it is necessary that it ends under the patronage of the prosecution.

Of course the two ministers, who had probably-their share of the cake, forbade the prosecution to shoot the matter cleared up.

The investigating judge simply hummed to those who complained too loudly about the pretty couplets of the Choew^ of commissioners improvised by Mr. Gaston JoUivet for the circumstance :

We are the good commissioners

Feasts of Charity,

Wise and sincere friends

Of the poor and the disinherited.

But we ourselves, in our purse

Let us lodge the hated devil.

We are lost without resources,

Let us save ourselves through Charity!

Charity well ordered Don't start with someone else.
The day cab is ours,
Feasts as soon as dawn breaks!
Let the tailor finally deliver us
Our clothes on paid stamp!
All state bodies must live
On the Charity Festival 1

the little verse, expressed the same sentiments, but in simple prose.

The examination of the accounts of the Tuileries festival is complete. Mr. Gauthier de Noyelles, Controller General at the Prefecture of police, yesterday submitted a detailed report to Mr. Camescasse, prefect of the police.

^32 JEWISH FRANCE

This document notes that the committee's management has left many blows to be desired, but that the waste to which certain members of the committee have delivered do not constitute, in this case, an offense characterized.

There will therefore be no prosecution and the investigation has been declared close (1).

Messrs. Jeannin and Bonnet, two of the organizers who, if they were negligent, do not appear to have been guilty, demanded in vain the publication of the accounts, so that the share of each was clearly determined. Mr. Gauthier de Noyelles stubbornly refused.

The new model parquet flooring absolutely shares the theories of Mr. Camescasse and Mr. Gauthier de Noyelles on the exercise of charity, citizen Daumas, advisor municipal of Marseille, was able to calmly cross the border—with 7,250 francs that the cholera had brought him—ques (2). However, it is not the instruments that are lacking—

(1) If one wants to realize what Messrs. Gauthier de Noyelles and Camescasse mean by "waste," it is necessary to examine some of the expenses of one of the aeronauts. It is done: allocate a car per month, he has lunch and dinner generously at his expense; cholera patients; he gets paid 1,500 francs of previous debts; at the party, he counts unreasonable repair costs for his balloons. Besides, he is given 3,000 francs for wear and tear on the balloons, he distributes—drunk on big tips to his staff, he gets new clothes, he and his lieutenants dine heartily in Meulan and stay there, always at the expense of cholera sufferers.

(2) In February 1885, Daumas was sentenced, in contempt of court, Mace, to five years in prison.

Like that fairy tale princess who couldn't say a word without a toad coming out of his mouth, the Republic cannot get involved in something without the swindler immediately to the Marseille city council to make the additions. The administrative account of Mayor Brochier stated, for 1883, one hundred and twenty-five thousand francs of envelopes and seventy-five thousand francs worth of pens, penholders and pencils!

It is worth noting that this theft from the poor appears to the first time in French society. It is not inutile to compare this secular, republican and frank charity-mason to the wonders that our religious people accomplish and our nuns who, from nothing, find a way to do something thing, arrive with derisory resources, which would be devoured in a few philanthropic suppers, to collect old people for long months, raising children, to care for the infirm. This republican philanthropy, which is a waste when it is not a scam, is one of the signs of an era where the most expensive excessive ones bring no profit. It is not only with money, in fact, that we alleviate misery, that we carry out major works, that an army be reorganized; without a little honesty and dedication everything is sterile and unfortunately, our Republicans do not understand I don't even know the meaning of those words anymore.

As soon as the Jews touch anything, moreover, and They are in a rage to touch everything, the question of money is dirty the most righteous intentions You remember the com-deposit a sum of forty cents to each parent; re-exposition is forbidden, we refuse to return the money that was shared between the organizers. Note that this scam has an almost official, since the offices were installed at the City Pavilion on the Champs-Élysées. The Pavilion of our municipal councilors covered, this time again, a very ugly merchandise.

n 8

134 JEWISH FRANCE

beginnings of the Central Union Society of Applied Arts to the industry? We saw gathered in the committee of names esteemed by all. Great lords, great manufacturers, elite workers had united for a work of interest general (*).

introduced there. Today, they are the masters there. Gh. Ephrussi, Gaston Dreyfus, Gohen are at the head of the committee. It was the Prussian Wolff who, in his capacity as mem- The jury judges our French industrialists! Naturally, As soon as the Jews entered, the association became a bank and we looked for the case.

Formerly, under the Empire, when it was a question of authorizing a modest lottery of one hundred thousand francs, the republicans mon- were at the podium and they protested against those who inhabit- killed the workers to feed on the hope of gain illusory and which thus disgusted them with honest work. Now they have changed all that and they have allowed this fourteen million lottery, which has been such a long scandal.

The Concourts showed us the gambling dens of the Palais-Royal walking in the garden "followed by the regimented troop of recruiters, touts, and em- baueheurs, of? card distributors, surrounded by the guard Praetorian bulldog pimps hired by the bankers.

A former Minister of Fine Arts gave us a similar spectacle and we saw it filling Paris el

(1) The exhibitions, very iitcll'igerQrae/it co-mprended and organized with great care, were almost enough to keep the Union alive. The first exhibition attended by Mr. Proust ended with a deficit of 80,000 francs.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 130

the departments of the sales pitch of shameless advertising, multiplying his cynical appeals, tempting the poor worker by this note placed everywhere within reach of his hand and forcing him to deduct from his pay the unfortunate franc which would have been enough to give bread to one's own for a day (i).

Of this gold, so painfully torn from a dying people of hunger, the Jew wants the biggest share. We didn't have collected a penny and we were already talking about giving six millions to the Jew Spitzer to buy his collection.

This Spitzer is a merchant, you might say? Keep you to believe it. Like all Jews, Spitzer is a good-maker of humanity. The Bourgeois-Gentilhomme, who knew about fabrics, bought some coupons that he re-sold to his friends for a small profit, but by pure kindness. Spitzer bought some old furniture millions, because he loves France.

Don't allow yourself to joke! Listen instead, like the Jew Eugène Müntz, librarian at the School of Fine Arts, speaks of his colleague Spitzer in a letter addressed to VARl: "If Mr. Proust had really managed to to conquer such a collection for six million, one cannot—was enough to vote thanks to him, whatever his

(I) Rleii is not curious as the attitude of the newspapers in this •irconstancy. In the first moment the journalist, obeying a surge of honesty, withers this lottery. Some time later, the man money from the newspaper intervenes. What could be more siguifiralif sounds this report—port that the turnaround imposed on Voltaire by the son Ménier? The newspaper begins by speaking out against the abuse of these lotteries where the office expenses almost always eat up the biggest part of profits, and, two months later, he declares that he intends to compete all his strength to the success of Proust's enterprise.

4?f5 THE JEWISH BRIDE destination, just as one could not overfill of honors the seller who would have pushed the disinterested—ment to such incredible limits.

I only regret that Mr. Müntz does not have better clarified what he meant by to fill someone hon—neurs, » Would he like Spitzer, mounted on a white horse like a new Mordecai, through the streets of the capital? Isn't that enough for a generosity "which reaches unbelievable limits?" Self—that we give to this magnificent Remonencq, to this father Heroic Lemans, the constable's sword before the troops assembled, in the solemn fluttering of the flags slowly inclined?

I will not recall the unspeakable acts which took place of this lottery an unprecedented operation. New men—dreams, fraudulent figures, fraudulent maneuvers of all kinds, it wouldn't have taken a quarter of it in the past to put the entire constabulary on the trail of the odd ones industrialists who gave this spectacle (i).

After having officially announced on June 45 that the issue of tickets is finished, Proust is obliged to admit that he lied and that part of the tickets are remained in his hands. The lottery is drawn nevertheless without the tickets having been placed; the jackpot, as well as some lots of secondary importance, rest at the bottom

(1) See on this subject, in the Nouvelle Presse of August 8, 9, 11, 1884 and following days the articles of Mr. Marius Vachon which are a ver-indictment table. See also, at the same time, the Petit Journal, the Morning, the 19th Century, and particularly the Courrier de l'Art du 6 and March 27, 1885, which is against Proust, with evidence to support, accusations of such gravity that we do not understand that the prosecution was not moved.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 137

from the bag and the administrators admit that they won 770,000 francs. This is only on unanimous claims of the press and public opinion that we decide to proceed to a new draw.

What is certain, what is beyond dispute, is that a 1) authorized to fourteen million, of which twelve millions of tickets were placed, resulting in final and total five million eight hundred thousand francs. It is Mr. Proust himself, who was forced to admit this figure, February 5, 1885, in the face of protests from the committee.

Where did the other millions go? In overhead? Admitting, for a moment, this insane hypothesis, it There is a way to respond to the formal accusations that each one brings against the promoter and the organizer of this lottery, against the person who assumed exclusive management of it, is to publish the accounts.

How is it that the members of the committee, including some, like Mr. Bouilhet, occupy a certain situation in the world, whose name appears on the banknotes lottery, did not understand that they were compromising themselves themselves by not immediately demanding the publication cation of these accounts?

This does not prevent members of the left from de- declare that the Decorative Arts Lottery is a na- national. Spitzer and Proust are also national figures and Hecht therefore, the intermediary in the purchase of the Courbets!

The Courbet story is instructive!

We wanted to have one or two Courbets in the Louvre. The idea wasn't any worse than any other. In any case the step was easy to follow, you had to ask loyally- a credit to the House, if there was a shortage of money, and II 8.

at the first major sale where a Courbet would appear, send a representative from the Louvre. Everyone knows that the French collectors rarely push against the direction of Museums and that foreign amateurs themselves abstain.

Proust preferred to act obliquely, without taking the advice of the House. He charged a Jew among his friends, a man named Henri Hecht, whose brother has the idyllic first name, and Myrtil's spring, to buy three Courbets. If the eco- Had the nomy been guided, the harm would not have been great, unfortunately the figures prove that, if this is the motive he obeyed, he was very disappointed in his calculations.

How did Hecht make his account? I don't know; what is What is certain is that he paid for the paintings intended for the State absolutely unbelievable price:

The Leather Belt 26,000 francs.

The Wounded Man 11,000

Siesta during the hay season. 29,100

The Deer Fight 41,900

The Hallali of the Deer. 33,000

Now, apart from the Deer Shed, which is the chief-work of the master, and which reached 35,000 francs at sale by Lepel Cointet, Courbet's paintings have never been estimated as high. The Return of the Conference, the canvas famous, was paid at the sale of 1881, 15,000 francs, the Beautiful Dutchwoman, 8,000 francs, Lovers at the Cam-loincloth, 5,700. At the 1882 sale, the Bather, a canvas still very well known, reached with difficulty 14,000 francs, the Beggar, 9,000 francs, the Wrestlers, 5,800 francs. The other paintings fluctuated between 3,000 and 4,000 francs.

At the Monteaux sale, the Wave was sold for 1,800 francs.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 139

At the Dussol sale, which took place on March 17, 1884, doiib excellent circumstances, all the newspapers have cons- tested, and which contained some interesting Courbets, here is the prices obtained;

Young Woman 1,950

View of Omans 3,000

The Willows 4,500

Marine 2,100

Deer shed (snow effect). 3,800

Let us add that the magnificent Courbet, that everyone admired at Girardin, was sold for 4,400 francs. In the month from February 1885, Henri Rochefort, distinguished connoisseur in paintings, paid 4,510 francs for one of the most remarkable works by the master: Hunters in the Snow.

Before buying in such deplorable conditions, who were truly the n'Hecht plus ultra, why not having sought the prior opinion of the House? For—what all that is concluded through the intermediary of the Jews does it always turn out to be to the detriment of the Treasury? If one had had we taken the trouble to think, we would not have bought this Combat de Deer which, painted with bitumen, no longer presents itself to the eye that a shapeless black spot as one can be sure at the Louvre.

It was announced at one point that the Cham— commission bre, appointed to approve this sale, would not ratify such a scandalous purchase. Nothing came of it; the commission approved everything that was wanted.

Since the somewhat savvy collectors, far from thinking of buying nothing, quietly get rid of their art objects, Jewry seems to have fallen back on the Louvre.

140 FRANCE JUTV^

This is how we see J. Reinach intervening to buy for our Museum for the price of one hundred thousand three so-called Frans-Hals francs which are worth a thousand shields. Only the portrait of the Lord of Berensteyn could be by Frans Hals, but that was a long time ago. The work original work has completely disappeared; it has been absolutely— ment redone by a dauber. The Berlin Museum, to whom this acquisition had been proposed, sent to Harlem a representative who, at the sight of these paintings, was taken with a fit of laughter and still running. In these peaceful little towns— where one has little fun, the Frans-Hals of the Béguinage, had become the subject of endless jokes.

was having a good laugh in the square before going to to sleep (1).

Later we had the story of the six incom-parables, among which a unique Botticelli, which was offered generously to the Louvre. A Jew owned these works priceless; he was going to sell them! What a misfortune! It was the when Alphonse de Rothschild applied at the Academy of Fine Arts. What an opportunity for him to assert himself as a Patron! He gives away some tickets of a thousand francs; others imitate it; we thus gather or we claims to raise one hundred and fifty thousand francs; we print for a million advertisements on the princely gift, the royal gift; the splendid alms given to France. Tur-

(1) See on this subject the Courrier de VArt of February 27, 1885, which re-raises the question and reproduces letters from Dutch painters-recognize that these paintings have no value. He read details of a finished comic.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY j4!

who cries over the kindness of the baron, always at the head of these demonstrations...

In short, we bring the paintings to the Louvre and we think, for the first time, to ask the opinion of the curators that until now it had not been considered appropriate to consult. They scream in horror. The Virgin at the Well by Botticelli, is absolutely apocryphal; the Crivelli and the Van der Goës were painted by a bad student of Trouillebert.
These so-called wonders are unworthy of inclusion in a public gallery. Admit that, if Baron Alphonse has seriously believed in Botticelli, he is a poor recruit for the Academy.

Since Turquet and Proust, nothing that touches on the Louvre is not done clearly, directly. In Alsace, a'^^
A farmer cannot sell his cow without resorting to intermediary- /f diary of a Jew. With a budget of more than three million liards, the State can no longer simply buy a work master after the advice of competent men; it is always necessary- .- days that a Jew intervenes in there to rig, troto deceive, to cheat.

When the Jews have realized their dream of imposing as director of the Louvre one of their own, each of whom pro-announces the name, and which would already be installed if Proust had remained two years and will substitute copies for the originals without that you notice it. You will only see fire and the entire press, led by Catholic newspapers, declares—will say that this director is the greatest of the past directors—ses, present and future.

For Jews, these big machines like the lottery
Decorative Arts are first and foremost a business, a brilliant one business since, according to Mr. Haëritjens, the ticket that is being sold one franc is worth three sous.

142 JEWISH FRANCE

The lottery is still a means of propaganda.

We know the adventure of this candidate who found ingenious to put up posters behind the convertible his competitor, who thus served as his tireless commiss—electoral traveler. This is a bit like what happened to the hon—people and Christians who founded the Society of Decorative Arts. Thanks to the complicity of the government, which allowed all the traffic to be mixed into a work which he called patinotic, the lottery has become a species of tontine; in defiance of the law which is formal, we divide the lots by imperceptible fragments (1), we promise parts. This is what we could read in all the newspapers the following announcement:

EXTRAORDINARY BONUS:

Make a PROFIT

possible to

and also have the advantage of knowing in detail
THE DEEP PERVERSITY OF PRIESTS

300,000 FR.

The first LOTTERY DRAW will take place on January 15th.
DECORATIVE ARTS.

This draw includes a prize of 100,000 francs, a prize of 25,000 francs and sixty other lots, each lot in cash.
Any ticket that wins in the first draw will also participate in the final draw, which includes a prize of 500,000 francs, of 100,000 fr. each, four lots of 50,000 fr. each, and five

(1) The small cuts sold for five cents amounted to five francs the price of a ticket whose value, as we have seen, is three sous.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 143

hundred other lots from 25,000 fr. to 500 fr. Therefore a same ticket can cost 600,000 francs

Here is the [unprecedented] combination offered by the Bookstore anti-clerical

Anyone who will buy directly from the said bookstore a copy of the volume THE SECRET BOOKS OF CONFESSORS published by Mr. LEO TAXIL, will participate half the chances of winning Lottery tickets of Decorative Arts. That is to say that any buyer of the volume in question will receive as a free bonus double two bill- numbers of this lottery. In the event that one of the numbers allocated as a bonus and named after Vâcheteur will be drawn, the The value of the prize won will be shared equally between the buyer and the Bookstore; and, likewise, if the two tickets come out. The buyer will thus have two chances instead of one. – A TICKET THAT COULD WIN 600,000 FRANCS, 300,000 francs will therefore be the share of the buyer of the volume from the Anti-Clerical bookstore.

The de Gaulnes, the Sabran, the Chennevières, the Barbedienne, the Falizes, the Lefebures, the Paul Dalloz who have brought, in the past, to the work of Decorative Arts, the competition of their devotion, the support of their good reputation, find thus, I repeat, have contributed to spreading in the masses of publications, not doubtless immoral, because nothing is purer and higher than the morality of these confessors' manuals, but dangerous to put in the hands of young girls or children.

This explains the kind of discouragement which takes hold of all men in a position to do something, in front of the lamentable abortion of everything they have tried to do the good.

Money, moreover, is beginning to run out. Love of art has been almost as ruinous for the aristocracy current than the art of love for the great lords of the past. Auctioneers dependent on the exr perts and most of the experts being Jewish, we agreed around the Drouot hotel to create absolutely fantastic prices fictitious. All the second-hand dealers in the universe have paid their dubious shopping in Paris; counterfeiting, imitation have taken on unprecedented proportions. Many people from world, who believe they own a gallery of real value, have at home only fake trinkets, pastiche paintings, embossed copper dishes that I myself saw being made—to search in houses that I can designate.

We dare not disabuse these illusionists. There is, in fact, something touching in the spectacle of this poor man Aryan who allowed himself to be driven from his castles, stripped of all that he possessed and who dusts, with joy childish, some apocryphal armor, some tru—that the Jew was clever enough to sell to him by weight gold. When a crash occurs again, when the convention courses supported by labor unions chands will collapse, a terrible debacle will take place, we will not find ten thousand francs of collections which will have cost five or six hundred thousand francs (1).

Read Mr. Paul Eudel's The Truquage, which should be in all families to preserve them from ruin. De—then prehistoric objects up to the Diaz and the Charles Jacques, everything serves as a pretext for a hateful counterfeit. manufacture of fake flint, fake Tanagra statuettes, fake figurines from Sèvres and Saxony, fake medals, fake autographs, fake bronzes.

(1) In the month of 1884, the sale was announced in Paris, from a magnificent collection of paintings belonging to an American. The crates arrive, we open them and we are amazed to see that all the paintings are fake and that no signature is authentic—tick.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 145

There are exquisite anecdotes and tricks in this book very entertaining. What could be more charming than the story that said the Jew Goblentz who excelled in making miniatures and grey areas like Sauvage. One day, he sends a third party sell a miniature he had to a large dealer made himself. The merchant buys it immediately. Few some time later, second visit with a second miniature in the same taste as the first. This time, the buyer rejected the offer made to him, and even made bloody reproaches the intermediary for having sold him something – "Here," he said, "I'll show you some real Savages, and he opened a cupboard filled with grisailles. They are not not signed, but they speak for themselves, those ones, he added.

But these were miniatures by Coblentz, who laughed at them. Again.

Here again the lack of any initiative in the aristocracy. Formerly the greatest lords encouraged—were creating, founding artistic factories themselves; the earthenware of Oiron, the factories of Rouen, the school The Clerissy family was born from a generous and intelligent fantaisie. To the potter as to the painter or the sculptor the patrician gave his opinion, brought, outside of the commercial course useful and often very accurate observation. All that has disappeared. No great lord had the idea to commission a painter to paint some moving picture which traced the scandals of that time, the violations of domicile, which bequeathed to the future the memory of these shames; in In revenge, they will argue with banknotes some cheeky painting using special processes in order to to look old, some credenza executed before us in Batignolles or in Malakoff by a poor worker who said: "The Count of X... bought the same for fifty thousand francs to the Jew M... If I had offered it to him for six thousand He would have thrown me out. What idiots (1)!"
II 0

446 JEWISH FRANCE

Among these Jewish second-hand dealers there are some who awaken almost admiration. At a certain height of audacity The scam touches on genius, it appears as one of the manifestations of the intellectual superiority of a race

(1) In an article, softs form of leftre, J>ublré in the Moniteur universal, Mr. Germain Bapst, under the name of Mr. Josse, gave a spiritual lesson to Antonin Proust, who had chosen, as frontispiece from the Revue des Arts Décoratifs, a mirror that he imagined dating from the Renaissance, and having belonged to Louise de Vaudemont, and which is absolutely modern. It has never been more finely put into highlights the ignorance of our doctors, and also the importance of the role of parasite and the go-between, the suffering of our workers who, exploited by the Jews, see artists of the past attributed their most beautiful creative.

belonged to a queen of France – it is the work of a brave and good-our chaser, named Legros, who made it around 1863, was inspired by the drawings published by Keiber in the early years of VArî for all. – Legros looked in vain for work at the goldsmiths or the brooziers of Paris; he employed his leisure time in this work and sold for 1,690 francs to a Jewish merchant; the figure is rigorous-exact. Legros is the most good man in the world and does not can be neither accused nor suspected of having helped the trafficking of Jews; He went to England with this money, found work in Bir-mingham in the Elkingion house, through which so many artists have passed French, and it is from there that another French artist, Mr. Wills, Legros addressed me when he returned to France three years ago. pl0s.

"Legros knows the history of his frame, he is not more vain; he smiles at the naivety of the amateurs who pay, one hundred thousand francs his work, when it is not signed, and would not offer two thousand He put his name to it. Legros lives poorly and philosophically of a short, lean day; I wanted to take his opinion before naming him-sea, and he authorized me to tell you what he had had until now-roic to)deslie to keep silent. »

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 147

on another. Unable to conceive even the thought of certain ruinous Jewish financial mystifications, the Aryan would not have been able to compete with a Sa-phira. What power of persuasion, of cunning, of diploma-Matie, flexibility in handling men in this thing-a man who manages to sell five or six hundred thousand francs to Berlin Museum a collection of Moabite pottery abso-clearly false (1)!

Do you think Saphira will stop there? You don't con-be not born the species that always goes ahead without putting of limits to the boldness that it draws from an unfathomable contempt for us. Saphira calmly proposes to the Bri-Tisch Museum to sell it to him for a million pounds sterlings, a copy of Deuteronomy, written in charac-Moabite territories identical to those on the Mesa stele, and which would not have existed for less than 27 or 28 centuries tence (2). The matter was almost concluded

(1) These vases, made by an Arab named Selim el Qàri represented boashommes similar to those at the fair •p&m of spice. The clay was absolutely identical to that used every day the potters of Jerusalem. "We still saw," said Mr. Clermont-Ganueau, under one of the faces of the small earth discs cooked with which several vases were filled and which were taken for

The soft pale had been placed to be cut into slices.

See the Archaeological Frauds in Palestine, by M. Clermont-Gaûneaû, which is one of the most amusing books of this time.

(2) The forger had simply taken one of these large rolls synagogue rituals, containing a biblical text in Hebrew characters numerous squares, which date back two or three centuries; he had de-cut the lower margins, he had sauced these leather strips in bitumen oil and other ingredients. Then he had trans-written on these strips, using the qalam, the reed used in-core in the East to write, passages of the Deuteronomy that the English scholars deciphered with pious care when Mr. Glermoit-G ring came to show them the fraud.

148

THE JEWISH FRINGE

and it would have succeeded without the intervention of a great archaeo-French logue, Mr. Glermont Ganneau^ who opened the eyes English and demonstrated the fraud. In despair, Sapbira came to commit suicide in Rotterdam in March 4884 and, in month of September 1885, the famous copy of the Deuteronomy ronome was sold for a hundred francs in London.

Racing is even more ruinous for men.
than the love of fake trinkets. The bookmaker, that a man of wit called a pickpocket arrived, is ordinary an English Jew. The owner of one of the principal-pale racing stables is an Israelite, involved in the affair of the Honduras and sentenced in May 1856 to two years of prison for breach of trust. Everyone knows this story-story. A letter from Duke Decazes from the month of June 1875, which proves the fact to the point of obviousness. We tolerate nevertheless this intruder because he is Jewish and the Bugler called him from time to time our sympathetic owner-silent breeder X. Our elegant women continue to wear, when the horse was the winner, the colors of a crook, like their grandmothers wore, in tournaments, the colors of some valiant knight who had distinguished himself by his valor-spear.

We can guess what manipulations and maneuvers are going on. disloyal, infamies in this world of turf. It is the Aryan always, the gentleman, the nobleman who is vic-time; sometimes we don't just ruin it, we dishonors. We buy his jockey and mix him up with something magician; he is disqualified, as they say.

From the forests of Bondy, equestrian gambling dens, enter-flying shots while running, that's how all the people express themselves

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 1 11)

newspapers, without exception, about certain hippodromes.

We are robbed, robbed, murdered there as if in the corner of a wood, with this aggravation that the scarps, pistol or knife in hand, operated at night for travelers, while for suburban travelers, ticket in hand, operate during the day, in full sunlight, on the bridges. Cynicism more flight is spread there than in any other place on earth. Perhaps no one is unaware of it and, incredibly, this ignoble roguery – where we find, in truth, banditry teeming in the lower reaches areas of London – seems tolerated by the police, encouraged by the gendarmes, protected by the magistrates. We wonder how come no law or person has come in-core empty these frank carpets of beveled horses, litters of jockeys, sequences of bookmakers with whom we cut the betting exchange, and return these fields and lawns to their natural destination, which is to grow sainfoin and potatoes.

Nameless scenes are happening there. The horse that we arranged to make win is late. We hear stands the jockeys who shout to their comrade, in retentive their horses: "Come on!"

One day it was jockey Andrews who almost died assassinated by his competitors. Another time the crowd protest against too obvious cheating in a race between Blonde II and Georgina. The jockeys seize a protesters drag him into the room where they get dressed-slow, whip him with all their might and leave him half death (1). •

Is it not a pity to see a man, who wears the name of Castries, a descendant of the victor of Closter-

(1) Gourée at the boulevard de Boulogne, Sunday, October 5, 1884,

!50 JEWISH FRANCE

camp, witnessing this dreadful spectacle of a French tie-attacked by ten English servants united against a single man?

This is where Toisiveté, the life of the turf, the taste of base pleasures.

At the horse show, all the prizes go to Israel. Camondo, this fat Jew who looks like a chief of eunuchs Abyssinians who would have rubbed off, this Levantine Turcaret of whom Carolus-Duran exhibited, at the Cercle des Mirlitons, the caute- Playful and pale, triumphs with a black and blue mail harnessed to four bay-brown horses. The conservative daily- The teachers take us to visit the stables; we learn along the way that the hunter Arthur Voodrook "has a ambassador treatment." There are four crowns in copper on the stalls, the covers are blue bordered in red, at the corners of the coat of arms embroidered with niajn aveq this motto: Charitas et fides.

Hirsch is not forgotten. He received a prize for his part. first category with Sanshine and Caesar who are tackling arrow; as for Rob Roy and Bonmary, they step. Camondo has twenty-four horses in his stable, sixteen of which are harness all year round, and eight saddle horses; llirsch does not only twenty-three, but among them there is an Arab roan, present from HM the Emperor of Austria, to the friend of poor Count of Wimpfen. If the master is not impeccable- cable, the stable outfit is. The saddlery, in particular, is a marvel: "It is a spacious room, high ceiling, whose marble fireplace is a masterpiece. All this shines and gleams and offers the spectacle of arrangement- the most ingenious way.

Moral sense is so obliterated among the classes superiors that no one finds bad of reward- think of the luxury conquered thanks to these Good Turks who ruined

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY]5f

so many French people. Those who are the most obsequious in front of this German Jew would be sentenced to prison a poor devil who would have taken a bundle of wood from their wood. The others would not pursue the bundle thief, but, soft and weak natures, they are not surprised that one dares displaying an ill-gotten fortune before them.

Circle life is the consequence of the passion of races. The government helps demo- realization through play. Here again we find hypocrisy republican, this love of everything that is troubled, of anything that allows shameful profits to be made The left-wing deputies share it clandestinely.

gambling house. We play everywhere and everywhere in a bad way-honest (1). The kitty, Dame Joséphine, as we appoints, levies on each player a real tax-

(1) In October 1884, the outcry was so lively, the complaints so numerous that it was decided to close the Circle of Liberal Arts founded by Devriès and some establishments of the same order, but they reconstituted themselves under other names. It was Leconte that he had had to continue, to set an example. In just one year, the pro-The product of the Liberal Arts Circle's fundraising had risen to four-eleven hundred thousand francs, which, at ten percent, is a sum of fourteen million put in the bank.

The Circle of Freemasonry was naturally respected. also left in existence: the Central Circle, the Hunting Club, the Circle of the Arts-Kéunis, the Fencing Circle, the Press Circle, the Seine Artistic Circle, Washington Circle and Fran-English.

The daily jackpot of these nine establishments is 69,800 francs.

The Fencing Circle, which Camescasse did not touch, is strongly supported by republican statesmen who find there lunch and dinner: it has a president named Etienne Junca, Jewish, I believe, by origin, and who was decorated as a man of leonine ment. A writer, who was particularly concerned of this question, considers that the sums thus collected then-the circle directors amounted to sixty million in five years.

452 JEWISH FRANCE

There is, in Paris, he said (1), at the very hour when I write these lines-, more than a hundred houses of the kind I mention, where the baccarat. Of these hundred gambling dens, at least twenty-five operate in exceptionally productive conditions. So much so that, calculations made, it is estimated that, over the last five years, these only twenty-five houses have swallowed up the jackpot sum, we dare not say respectable, of sixty to sixty-five million I that is to say that the unfortunate player, without comp-to cover its natural losses, without counting the thefts which it may have suffered victim, had to, before running the chances of benefiting from a centime, pay in five years a tribute of at least sixty millions!!

Isn't that really scary? And yet that's not all again, because the player has other responsibilities, which he cannot attend to

We want to talk about the gift made to the dealer by the one who holds the bank, and the interest paid to the loan fund. We letters, which is very flattering for writers and even for soldiers who won their cross, not with a bang, but on the battlefields.

Mr. Laisant recounted in his newspaper the Radical Republic that in December 1884, a Jew, named Goldsmith, having bra- that his revolver on two other players, they had made im- *immediately the same movement. These are completely the customs of the Haciendas of Mexico and gambling houses of San-Fraucisco.

11 occurs, moreover, almost every day, in this Circle pro- witnessed by the police, unspeakable scenes. This was following a meeting of the Board of Directors, which had been truly epic, that the boy said to one of the assistants who came to wash his hands in the sink this astonishing word:

– What's going on, sir? We've never stolen so much eavon than today.

(t) Fiyaroj February 18K4

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 153

We will simply briefly indicate what these two consist of new taxes.

When the banker raises a bank, after winning, the inhabitant- study is to leave a small sum to the boy who "Grouped" during the pruning. This tip is not limited; still, it is is thus abandoned, after each bank in profit, a sum which varies between fifteen and two hundred francs, depending on the importance of the banker's gain or generosity.

As for the interest on the money lent, it is always very con- astonishing, since we were able to observe that a gambling boy, with a single thousand franc note had managed to double his capital in a single evening.

These figures, although so high, seem much inferior to reality to the Evil One who published a study complete on the Circles (1).

In the big gaming houses, says this newspaper, the jackpot rap- door legally (we leave aside the product of the flight croupiers) on average 6,000 francs per day, and, in the tri- low-grade pots, the minimum product of the daily recipe to 7,000 francs per day the sums collected by the jackpots in gambling houses for five years. This makes, for each from them, a revenue of 730,000 francs per year or 3,650,000 fr. for the five years.

Now, during these five years, the number of gambling dens in Paris has been at least 24. So we arrive, just for the cagnottes, at the respectable figure of 87,600,000 francs.

To this figure must be added the profits made by lenders and the croupiers, profits which sometimes reach proportions enormous and which we will evaluate at an average of 100,000 francs per year and per head, or at the rate of five of these estimable officials-shareholders per gambling den, 500,000 francs per year and per gambling den, 12 thousand francs per year for the 24 gambling dens and 60 million for the five years.

(1) Morning, October 21, 1884.
he

JEWISH FRANCE

Let us add an average of 100,000 francs per year, for the small profits of Mr. Administrator and his cronies, or 2,400,000 francs per year or 12 million for five years.

And we arrive at the following nice result:

Prize pools CHF 87,600,000

Lenders and dealers 60,000,000

Administrators and staff 12,000,000

Total Fr. 159,500,000

One hundred and fifty-nine million six hundred thousand francs devoured for five years by these Vampires, in Paris only.

And we are not exaggerating, on the contrary; we would only have the choice to support, with convincing examples, the eloquence of these figures.

From these figures, we must obviously detach the sums considerable amounts collected by the prefecture staff police who, at all levels, from the prefect to the last of the agents, ransoms the gambling houses, and sur-all the bribes given to ministers and deputies opportunists (1). There remains nonetheless a sum huge waste, without profit for anyone, and which is a which cannot even provide, to our mourning Paris, the illusion of movement and life.

(1) Suicides that occur every day following the pearls suffered in the Circles, suicide of Mr. de Riencourt, suicide of Mr. Wlasoff, etc., are, as we understand, of ardent occasions desired and eagerly seized to collect a new tribute in pre-texting public outrage.

Among the countless victims of police complacency has for certain gambling houses, let us point out Mr. Raby, who had made his courage and received a lifesaving medal for having saved two people from death, and who, after having lost everything in the Circles, killed himself in July 1885.

JEWISH PARIS AND THE FRENCH SOCIETY i^T)

What should the government do if it does not obey unmentionable motives? Or apply purely and simply the law that prohibits games of chance, or abolish the law of 4837 and reestablish public gambling. Public gambling, like the lottery, has exceptional advantages; easy to sur-ensure, it offers guarantees of regularity which do not exist not in the current Circles.

Why doesn't the government take this step? Why is he depriving himself of resources that would be so necessary-saires to a budget that crazy squandering has drained?

We have said the reason. The ministers grant to the deputies, who turn a blind eye to their actions, or self-initiatives to open Circles, either concessions, shares in military supplies and tenders.

We have not forgotten the criminal prosecution which was the object, in June 4883, the founders of the Circle of the Concorde and the Parliament sumptuously installed at 242 rue de Rivoli and which went bankrupt after having devoured 800,000 francs in fifteen months.

Mr. Alfred Leconte, MP for Indre, already "famous for a railway permit scratched with a fresh intention-duleuse, and who had joined forces for the exploitation of this Circle to one of his colleagues, admitted before the court that he was housed and fed free of charge in the establishment; he also admitted to having received half of the six hundred shares of the founders attributed to Mr. Trapet. It is to Mr. I^econte, indeed, as a letter from Mr. Andrieux proved, that authorization has been granted. Mr. Louchet read, at this absolute of any moral sense.

This trial, moreover, is from start to finish one of the most curious documents on current customs that one can imagine. Senators and deputies came there to do lavish dinners, official dinners at the expense of unfortunate shareholders (1).

156 JEWISH FRANCE

All of Paris saw, for many years, a former Minister of the Interior, a Vice-President of the House, publicly hold a real gambling den, a circle open to all: the Seine Artistic Circle, which was called familiarly the Cercle Lepère. In all the hotels where the rich foreigners descend into all the big cafes from the boulevard, invitations to come and dine were distributed and to play the part and these invitations were signed by the vice-president of a French Assembly! Never the members of the left did not think that the dignity of the country was affected by this singular accumulation, they found that this content of three of a kind was still the most honorable of them, since they had called him to the vice-presidency. In the story itself of the Directory, I do not know of any similar fact (2).

(1) The Circles, placed under the patronage of the representatives of the nation, have replaced the quarries of America. Mr. Andrieux has told, in his Souvenirs, c[\xq the first person that a commiss- police officer sent by him met, in an authorized Circle, was an ex-convict asleep on a bench. "Not knowing where to find shelter, this victim of human justice had come to seek, in the gaming halls, a hospitable lodging. The Circle was moreover chaired by a deputy.

(2) The manager of this Circle was a Jew named Landau, a per- noisy adventure ringing, like all those of his race, which committed suicide after financial losses and heartache that the days- boulevardiers told the whole story. He was replaced by two other Jews, the Khan brothers, formerly directors of the Circle of Paris, rue Laffitte.

A radical deputy from Seine-et-Oise, former attorney general, Mr. Vergoin, took over from Lepère as president. He had no other "three goals," he declared ingenuously, "than to make good connections." The first encounter he had, in this distinguished place, was that of a gentleman who confided in him that the croupiers had just pro-

However, one cannot encourage the government too much—to preferably reward its faithful with per-tiipot missions than by supplies. In the latter In this case, it is the very security of France that is compromised by the good ministerial pleasure.

The discussion of February 28, 1884, on supplies granted to the industrialists of Besançon, is enough to show how things are going for auctions.

Mr. Georges Perin, with patriotism and foresight which surprise in a republican, put forward this idea which fiappa the Room of astonishment, that generally the border places were the first to besiege in time war and that the stores and clothing workshops necessary for the army were more properly installed inside. If the supplies had been kept at Besançon, there was a cause and this cause was a Jew, the Jew Veil-Picard, the famous^ Veil-Picard that we encounter at every moment in this book, par-everything where one speculates, where one fiddles, where one plots a money matter.

Under-Secretary of State for War, Casimir Périer, protests that he is innocent, and the Minister of the Interior, Waldeck-Rousseau, boldly declares that he does not know Veil-Picard. Mr. Georges Périn convinces him immediately—ask to give him a certain number of ready-made litters, biscuits as they say, which would have allowed him to take the bank for sure. Mr. Vergoin doubtless feared that the relations that he would do there were not a little mixed up and gave his resignation. Note again, from the point of view of the path traveled since 1870, of habituation, that the fact for an old magis-treaty, for a representative of the people, he accepts the presidency of a gambling den, that shocks the person; that seems quite natural.

1?>*î JEWISH FRANCE

lie by showing him the letters he had had his private secretary Noel write to the Jew.

To be called from time to time the handsome and proud young man man, according to the newspaper Paris, the minister sacrificed tran-strictly the interests of France.

The next day it was much worse. A terrible scandal broke out produced at the town hall of the 7th arrondissement where were brought together the merchants and manufacturers who intended to

Casimir Périer, for a very personal reason, had arranged in such a way as to make any award impossible in striking all markets unexpectedly with a right of 3 fr. 25 o/o (1).

Although, I repeat, the scandals of the Circles and the gambling dens seem to me to be of much less importance serious than the facts of this nature, the case of the Circle of the Royal Street is worth noting here. This Circle which, according to the ex- pressure of a boulevard newspaper, this embalmed the distinction- tion and honor," exhaled, it seems, some less odors suave. I admit, however, that all the noise led to this su- jet left me quite cold. I won't go so far as to cry out with one of my colleagues: "That there is only one culprit, it is already monstrous in such a place; several, it would be to despair of Humanity." We would discover that the Jockey- Club is a department of Hellas that I do not des- I will not lose humanity for that.

(1) Figaro of March 2, 1884. See also the Pot de vin Arraznt, Gnw laws of February 25, 1884, a very detailed account which was only very insufficiently denied by merchants of Lodève, the lega- the Bollandist affair and finally the Arèue-Peraldi affair.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 159

If he had thought more, our colleague would have quickly com- took that such a result was on the contrary inevitable. Conti- to lead a life of idleness and disorder, when the Fatherland is close to perishing, reveals a naturally base soul which must, as soon as resources are lacking to satisfy passions, to indulge in the most blameworthy expedients mables. If the man, who played fifteen with cards marked with eraser, had been in prayer or busy seek the means to save his country, this misfortune does not would not have happened.

What is sad is the shame that falls on the aristo- cracy due to the fault of a few idle people. Doing one's little circle, passing rue Boyale is now the expression adopted by workers for cheating at the game.

It is impossible that the Circles are not dishonor- res with the mania that people of the world have of welcoming open arms to all the Jews of the universe. A ^ man, that everyone in Paris knew a lozenge merchant seraglio in a passage, a tavern keeper from Little Russia, Did a former Prussian lackey make some money at the Stock market, they are received everywhere. When a scandal breaks out clarifications about their family, about how they are enriched, on what is at the bottom of the train that they display, we unanimously come across an unfortunate game lesson only because he is French. It is abso-light ashamed.

The club and the races take care of the men; the to-Letter ruins women.

Tailors and dressmakers are almost all of Jewish origin; it is a Jew, Dreyfus, who is president

i60 JEWISH FRANCE

of their trade union chamber. They have deployed on this point a truly charming genius, if not completely inventive. Felix looks very nice, Kahn, who succeeded Ms. Laferrière, did not hurt, but Sarah Mayer who "designed" the two dresses of W[^] Legault, in Kings in exile, has a very happy imagination; it is up to her again, we learn from Le Figaro, "that Mr. Legault must the success of his latest creations in Les Affolés and the Pretext. y> AM[™] Rodrigues however the pompom I She does not sew dresses as was customary in the past, barbaric times she edits them, at least that's the term that my kind colleague Etincelle used, who often sent me very surprising communications in this order, when I was writing with her in a journal éXé[^]Sini, dum Athenæ florerent...

The Jew could not help but mix in his point of coarse salt. The jewelers had made the men wear little pigs, we have dressed up the women of the world with es-pieces of posterior saddles, which make them look like the ani-evil that has been called "the ship of the desert" and which would rather be the Punchinello. The pockets were placed behind-behind the back, which gives to the most graceful woman, cher-singing his handkerchief, the unseemly appearance of a turkey which scratch. None of our Parisians understood anything about this irony. The feeling of elegance, of this elegance made of taste, of measure, of spirit, one would be tempted to say, is death in the French woman; she takes fashions such that the dmnen confection of Vienna makes.

I would like to depict these fashions, like the Goncourts have depicted those of the Directory, but I am very embar-satiated; I lose myself in these shimmers, these scintillations-ments, these dazzling... Which star do you prefer?

We have brocade, surali, crepe de chine, moire from Lyon, unbleached silk, crushed velvet, plush and wonderful satin. As a color we can offer you the color bistre, lava, neutral, putty, hazelnut, nymph moved, frightened mouse, milky amber, iron, steel, linen gray, punch flame, Titian red. Do you like jackets?
Buffon, Torquemada hoods, Lamballe bodices,
the Milady jacket with old silver buttons?

The street toilet has a 4830 trend, that of the home remains Renaissance, that of temple approaches the Mer-night lights. The bourgeois Louis XV is fashionable in the city, the noble Louis XV is adopted in the evening, the Hungarian green is also very well seen. What would you say, for small dinners, velvet sheaths with two trains that open out heart or remaining hermetically sealed to the Quaker?
The Lawrence dress is all the rage, but the Dubarry suit has some supporters, others prefer the small Devonshire checkerboard, but on the condition, of course, of completing it with the vicuna plucking. For shopping grooming we con-will try the petticoat nun's veil.

I hear you, you would like me to talk to you about the dress of roses – a dream! cried the enthusiasts.
It is a satin or moire petticoat covered with a skirt with a white satin train, or pale sky, which opens to the side on one of the skirt strips completely covered in roses like a spring bush. The dress and train are shaded with pink as well as the half-open edges. The cor-wise pointed neckline is adorned with a garland of roses.

Toilet concerns follow our strange Christians in days that should inspire them to any other feelings. Purple is the color adopted for

162 JEWISH FRANCE

on Holy Thursday. "In the petticoat, ruffles of torn taffeta-queté under the very soft wool tunic, with sculptural folds-raux, trimmed with purple guipure also in wool. At the hood, lace brightened with branches of lilac. y> The On Good Friday, great mourning is required; we adopt the "tailored" style dress in black serge trimmed with a braid of black wool. "No jewelry. Black hat, very simple, with large crepe veil. y>

When it comes to hairdressing, we're spoiled for choice.
Here is the immense Gainsborough with a large halo inclined in abat-silky folds, the Sylvia hat trimmed with black or dark velvet, the Béarnais hat with old gold pompoms, the Mi- cape gnon with ducal aigrette, the Diane de Poitiers hood with diavelvet dome and large network of pearls revealing hair. Let's not forget the Yokohama, nor the Lesdiguières, nor the Riccobini hat lined with green velvet and decorated with a cloud of multicolored pompoms, nor the Récamier getting up in a comb on the bun or falling in a ribbed bib, nor the Khroumir in large straw, decorated with flowers in oriental fabric-tale.

What good are all these ruinous frills, since there is no longer a Court, no longer a society? Could we not not to get all farted up in the air and in a high-waisted dress to go eat a sandwich at someone's house from time to time, whose ancestors, in their Frankfurt Jiuligasse, were to be accommodating about the attire of those who wear them were going to visit?

The women of the world do not understand this. savagery and extreme civilization come together. The savage- The wisdom of the Fidgy Islands would be lost if its shell necklace; the elegant Parisian would prefer to renounce one's family, one's country, one's God than to bear a toilet that was not from one of the makers that the days- Jewish nationals have become fashionable.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 103

A newspaper has given what it calls the budget of an hon- head woman in our time and this document, established on very moderate bases, can be regarded as quite exact.

It will be 33ns <ijre, he writes, that I take a wife, from her, having a complete trousseau, (lace, jewels, wardrobe, surrounded finally (I have everything I need and often more than I need. In This budget, therefore, is only about maintenance, for amsi say, of this capital of franfreluches and fanfioles.

It breaks down as follows:

Seamstress Fr. 12,000

Milliner e 3,000

Lingerie 4,000

Shoemaker .' 4,500

linens, trinkets, crope-line 6,000

3,000 laces in use

Perfumery, hairdresser, flowers 4,500

Umbrellas, parasols 500

Total. 34,300

To these 34,500 francs should be added the laundering, which can be estimated at 600 francs per month, the dyer, for the silk lingerie, stockings, etc., at 300 francs, and cleaning and ser-convenience at 200 francs. Which makes 43,200 francs per year.

Total 47,700 francs.

Faced with these prodigalities, are we not tempted to say with the great Catholic orator: "What, wretch, don't you feel that the cruelty of your luxury tears the souls of a hundred orphans from-what divine Providence had assigned life on this fund?"

What good these women could do if they got along to spend only half the money they make per year

164 JEWISH FRANCE

waste in vain superfluities that last barely a day; which, faded and crumpled, are abandoned the next day at the maid (1)! They don't think about it for a minute; the idea of deprivation, personal sacrifice does not even come to them. None of them has, in this respect, half the value moral of Louise Michel. The poor and generous lost woman walked barefoot on the deck of the ship that was transporting her- was in New Caledonia, she had given her stockings old woman! On the money that some had brought her conferences in Belgium, where benches were thrown at him head, she gave a third to the families of political prisoners, a third to his mother and kept the rest for herself.

Christ would appear, his forehead covered in blood, to the women that you see kneeling on Sunday at the Madeleine or to Sainte-Glotilde and would ask them to give up for him a Watteau costume, to a box at the Opera, at some cost-fancy, that only one out of a hundred can be answered-drait: "I consent."

Among the women in view no appearance of these good movements of the soul which once repaired many weaknesses. None of them think to question these models

(1) Even in these trinkets, the unfruitful character is revealed and destroyer of Jewish civilization who constantly pumps out the good money to change it into chillions, into scraps of paper when it is about financial matters, in silk rags when it comes to toilet. In objects, apparently the most futile, civilization The old one was conservative, she created things that lasted. dresses of the great ladies of the Court of Louis XIV, the beautiful dresses silver lamés of the Hressesanes brides have today, when by By chance we discover the price they once had. A dress famous designer goes to the Temple almost immediately, passes from the back of a woman of the world on the back of a girl and no longer exists there end of uu at.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 165

regretfully, these finery which they desire, none of them sound to chat with these little workers, so interesting sometimes, these skirts, these corsagières, these garniseuses, these man-girls, to inquire about what they earn, how which they live (1).

(1) The work of the Catholic Circles alone was concerned with this quci^tiou and the Weekly Control, which reports everything that happens of interest in the workers' question, reproduced, in the n" of the July 8, 1885, a letter addressed to the newspaper Le Matin on this subject. "I can name you," says the author of this letter, "such a seamstress of the rue de Rivoli which has nearly forty women or young girls in it a single room ventilated by a single window. The people •stronger and better nourished would soon fall malades in such an atmosphere. How much more quickly would they wither away slow, weaken and often die, children who are quite poorly nourished-ries in general, since those who do not bring their breakfast are forced to go eat at the gargolte!

Furthermore, and this is the point to which I call your attention again more specifically, we make these young girls and young women watch over- until nine o'clock, ten o'clock, often midnight! So this It's no longer their lunch, it's their dinner that they take at the gargotle and as often they do not have the means, they miss- give them a piece of bread and have dinner when they get home. Now, as they live far from the house where they work, all without exception, they eat at eleven o'clock in the evening or at midnight past, and lie down on it, dead from fatigue, digesting badly, and in a few years, not to say in a few months, deteriorate completely jumped out."

The author of this letter ends by saying:

"If our socialist advisers would mind their own business instead of renaming streets and playing politics, they get-would easily create an organization like the one that governs the workshops of women in England... »

The editor in charge of Control should have added: "If the large ladies who loudly display charitable feelings, for having the opportunity to dress up as Japanese women, really had a Christian heart, they would have vilely made these abuses disappear; it would be enough to set up a committee responsible for banning the houses, mostly Jewish, where creatures are exploited in this way human.

466 JEWISH FRANCE

No trace of looting for these poor saleswomen either. department stores which, at times of exceptional sales-tional, ten or twelve leagues remain standing, merciless-fined when they sit outside meals. No attention to these unfortunate people who, at doleful epochs of feminine existence, all pale, feeling the objects swirling around them, stand atix furniture so as not to fall. The thought that softens sometimes the hard heart of Dickens' Protestants: "If I were) toïhtne that! ^ né ^neïii paâ à fios chfétîenfte^ ;' they lie don't think of doing what the women of America have done who, one day, agreed and said to the owners department stores: in NWS you want our sisters employees have the right to sit down."

The love of your grooming is no longer cotfe Coquetterie tèhîi-truly innocent and kind that the daughters of Eve had every century, it is a kind of fixed idea, of impervious vice-laughing and dark like the vice of Baron Hùlot. Ceifx who serve this idolatrous cult" are the object of a mixed respect from this they loved it, they left it to the sefiùx. I remember an exhibition of a royal wardrobe. The pri-The vilified were placed on a platform in armchairs qtii looked like thrones and Worth, soleriftly, cried, waving his meter like a magician would do with a bagtiette: "Come on! The series of chàfnbfe dresses move forward î >>

All this is done seriously, pompously. Women considered intelligent submit to sessions from four to five o'clock, on the eve of a world event-dain, like the inauguration of a new theater, powr study!' the effect of the bleti, diï pose, due white, suf of the taheÉ which is lit successively by lamp, gas, or electric light.

They don't even think of making the most of the Christians about the money they spend. A group of women whose name, apart from the noisy cocodettes, has a worldly influence, honest and deserved, could have bring together these hardworking young girls in a workshop for—that life is so rough, to form them in association, their order simple clothes. The momentum is so quickly given in Paris that, the next day, the fashion would have been to wear modest toilets and to provide for this association feminine.

Far from conceiving such a project, the women of the world look like the obliged ones of the famous makers who agree to dress them. The seamstress's festival is a event, his clients send him cards, bouquets, gifts; the house is cluttered from morning. There is a ready-made genre painting there, which the pen of a Parisian essayist will perhaps retrace for us something day.

Like all those who are possessed by madness, the women—I support everything on the condition that this madness is satisfied—done, they are at the mercy of their suppliers; it is the story of the girls who go crying at the door of those who beat. We have no idea how the best customers are treated at the slightest complaint. Worth, enriched by the prodigality of so many unfortunate people overcome with vanity, had a list printed where the most beautiful names in France were marked with the letter A, which meant—was fraudulent or the others were designated by the letter B, indicating the probable breach of trust following depends above resources. The list, placed in the hands of all the workers, soon dragged into all the anti-rooms, copies were peddled to all the editorial offices (1). In another country, abroad whoever had allowed himself this insolence would have been blacklisted; he would not have found an honest woman who would consent to return home. Worth did not lose a single one of his customers!

168 THE JEWISH FRANK

What we say about seamstresses applies to all luxury spending. The main chef—In the valleys, the fashionable confectioners are Jewish. Father Ludovic has clearly seen what a powerful lever consumption should be. With intelligent organization, every Catholic can—from his pocket, help through work those who think like him, only have suppliers who share his ideas or which at least do not attack his rights.

Nothing would have been easier and, in certain districts where the conservatives support many people around them, the influence would have been felt very quickly. A group would have formed done very quickly between people who judge the same. Conservatives did not think about it for a minute, not out of liber-exaggerated realism, believe it or not, but through indifference, by ignavia, because they are even incapable of the light effort, the momentary attention that would be required for this.

Catholics, without any sympathy for their own, seem reserve their favors for those who drag Christ into the mud. Everyone knows the name of the industrialist whose P. Ludovic spoke in the book entitled: Association of honest people on the field of agriculture. The religious did not want to name him, out of charity

(1) The Telegraph of June 30, 1885 published a part of this list.

1

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 16^

Christian first, and then in fear of seeing everything the Faubourg Saint-Germain, contact him preferably. As this Capuchin knows the current Paris I

The industrialist I am talking about, writes Father Ludovic, dared to print the following words:

"The Catholic Church has generally paid with canonization the main crimes, follies and crimes that hallucinates or wretched people have committed for his benefit, during the last eight to ten centuries of the organization of its material power.

M In summary, in the long list of Saints, honest people are the exceptions.

"The false God, the individual with a big beard, is the fetish in the name from which the clerical and political despots of this world rule over the masses.

A large in-S" volume of 536 pages is filled entirely with similar blasphemies against God, against Jesus Christ, against between the Church, the secular and regular clergy and against the Christians practising ticking. It is said, for example, that the word cretin comes from Christin or Christian and that in fact only morons can be Christians. There are in this book hateful incitements addressed to the government of the Republic to push it to take excessive amount of persecution against the Catholic Church.

Well! This industrialist has not had more loyal and more loyal customers devoted to his interests than certain notable Catholics, leaders authorized royalists and workers.

Great ladies, very pious, recommended everywhere and still recommend this impious person.

They take communion every morning and, after having received in their heart the God of the Eucharist and having promised to serve him, they call this hateful atheist the same day, fill him with honor, and give him orders for which they pay handsomely.

This is where ignorance leads, because ignorance alone explains these ^normities. When I revealed to some of these Catholics this What was this industrialist doing with their money, they all answered: a I didn't know that.

II 10

470 JEWISH FRANCE

So: you didn't know; but did you have the right not to know? And since facts of this nature are repeated every day and everywhere in our cities of France^ do we have the right to remain longer in ignorance of what they are worth, from a moral and religious point of view, the various suppliers who get rich with our money (I)?

Ignorance, as Father Ludovic rightly says, is the only excuse that Christians can invoke singularly organized enough to never be interested to those who have the same faith as them and enrich on the contrary those who are their most mortal enemies. But the Clergy Does he not have some responsibility in this ignorance? rancid?

The Church, in the past, constantly followed the path of real life to enlighten and guide him. We would reconstruct customs, and even the costumes of the past with the sermons of the sacred orators of the Middle Ages. Saint Bernard,

(f) See, in the Cry of the People of July 4, 1885, quétqués fensei-

their of the Church which had, as protector, in the arissociali- world that a former editor-in-chief of the Union. This is further clarity on this Masonic sect, which is completely diabolical in its double obstinacy to take away from the proletarian both the moral bread and the material pain. Two workers had carried out a large anti-fireplace and, not finding their account there, asked them to be compensated for the time they had spent on this work. work outside their forecast. – Never mind, replied the avenger of Hiram, pay me for the wood and supplies, and the chimney-born is yours. You will go and sell it yourself in the suburb. These poor people, whose pay was expected at home and to whom or asked to pay a thousand francs, did not even have the strength to respond.

The Freemason generously gave them a gift, however* by-above the market, of his latest works: Freemasonry and the republican principle and the Sfpilalnières //luçonniques.

JEWISH SHARES AND FRENCH SOCIETY 171

eaînl Norbert, Vilal de Mortain, Raoul Ardent, Hugues de Saint-Aiclor, Hildebert are better informed about the lesser details of the existence of the 12th century, that a chronicler-today's news of what's happening on the boulevard. Piono of Limoges made countless speeches on hair-fures. Etienne de Bourbon speaks to you like a courier worldly dresses of the 13th century, mid-parties, notched or tongued, rigotées or baligotées. The Maillard, the Gleré, the Menot continued these later traditions and Bourdaloue is, of course, also precious for the study of the Court and the City at the time of Louis XIV that La Bruyère and Molière.

Today, preachers are going back in the opposite direction the current that leads writers towards a more sin-closer and closer to the men and things of their time-that. They avoid the issues on the agenda, current events alive; they are content to defend dogmas that no one does not even think of discussing among those who frequent the churches. Listening to what they say, it seems that they are preaching for people who have been dead for three hundred years. I don't have heard it once eloquently stated that the duties the privileged of fortune and brand the fools of excess luxury and it was in a church in the Mouffetard district!

The priests of the rich parishes do not want us to talks about Circles, races, eccentricities at home toilet. Men of good company for the most part, of irreproachable conduct, they are received with respect in houses where the flesh is good and it is the flesh to the courtesies they have received.

What is particularly curious is that, nowhere,

47:2 JEWISH FRANCE

in the midst of this waste, you will not see this beautiful enthusiasm, this joyful carelessness about tomorrow, this skepticism spiritual which makes us understand that certain eras are rushed into pleasure saying: After us, the de-sledding! These crazy and unjustifiable expenses are combined with affectations of religious feelings, suspicions on persecutions, lamentations on children that we deprive of God.

This contrast is one of the things that most surprises Jews, whose narrow minds have clarity and precision. I remember overhearing the conversation by chance that a lady, very prominent in charitable works, had, with her seamstress trying on a dress. It was abracadabrant. The good woman mingled her moans on the atheist school has insane recommendations on its roof-letter.

– What a time! What a generation they are preparing for us, my dear Mrs. X.,..! So now we detach the drags?

– Oh! It's perfectly decided...

– It is these poor children's souls that I pity

With a sowing of roses, it wouldn't be bad.

– Certainly, Countess, certainly.

– The poor things! They even take away the crucifix!

Narrow sections and no bowling pins!

Then she left, still weeping over the misfortune of the time and, on the threshold, changing her mind, she said: definitely, put down some skittles!

The seamstress giggled, and with good reason; her laugh, long-compressed time, sounded loudly when the door was closed.

–With what she spends in a year, she said, she saves– would bring all the children's souls from his neighborhood I

This whole world is full of Christians in the kind of those of which Tertullian speaks: Plerosque in ventum et st placuerit christianos; what Bossuet translates: "Christians in the air and faithful if you will."

What pain there is behind this luxury without reason, absolutely stupid, is incredible. Flaubert once told me that we should be the doctors of some moral illnesses, because we are the only ones who have studied them. diées. There is some truth in this opinion. What a Parisian knows without having sought to learn it is unimaginable. chance, at every moment, shows us the reverse side of these existences—tensities so brilliant in appearance. There are, moreover, Paris, five or six moneylenders, with whom he It's enough to talk for an hour to know the secret in depth of this society. Men and women come there, write incredible letters of humility, treat the usurer of "dear friend;" they lavish sweet words on her.

A few women from the world rent a small apartment, they have some old furniture transported quietly from castle, the family portraits themselves, try to negotiate them. Mother and daughter sometimes agree to this trade. Often the husband, more sensible, stayed at the castle water, he lives there, far from the high life, between a stove on the return and some barrels of wine. We bring it, we tries to persuade him to sell the estate; he arrives, flan—that of the servant so as not to weaken, he resists, and this wise man, who is treated as being inhuman, goes away saying: "Do not Don't shout, my dear, you'll be very happy to find that. "

I saw a family of old nobility send each day to look for, at the dairy next door, a horrible boil—black lon smelling of grease. After a while He read.

174 JEWISH FRANCE

They owed five hundred francs! The woman, who wore was a famous name in the history of the Revolution, a name sung by poets, immortalized both by heroism and piety, had a note of ten thousand francs to her seamstress and went across Paris for them search with this movement of a large-breed bird which does not know how to walk. Amidst quarrels and recriminations grew up a beautiful, elegant young girl and slender. Obeying only their 3)on heart, these poor people like this chaplain in an apartment, blessing this meal caught in a cafe, face to face with an unpaid maid, who shouted the café-concert choruses that she was going to recollect every evening.

Some women ask poisons for false joy,
the joy of seeing life through rose-tinted glasses for a few minutes;
se morphineit, these are the onorpliinees, the morphine-manes, ephemeral homes of an artificial paradise which does not which makes reality more cruel.

Sometimes you just fall into place. This young woman adora-Jjle, this ravishing Aryan, with her virginal and proud curves, that you don't even touch a look too intense for i^e point(remove the pure down from this fruit in the process of ripen, sells himself to one of those awful cosmopolitans, mangy, smelly, who shouted oranges on the ppit from Tunis or Alexandria, or who were boys inn ej;i (some viHage of Russia, like this Gar-Founkell, forty times a billionaire, who had left his woman there to lead the great existence here.

Everything ends with the Jew, in fact. We will see this later.
squeezing out the yopu.laire misery with the purchasing agencies of recognitions of the Mont-de-Piété; he is the lessor of

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 175

funds, the real lender of the usurers who force people from the world. He knows, to the nearest minute, the duration of the breath of all these poor little frogs who are trying to grow to equal the great Israeli fortunes. When breath begins to fail, he arrives and he is the Link came.

Perhaps more worrying than anything else is this degradation of the French woman. In the times of decadence-dence, as we have seen, the woman goes up while the man descends; this time nothing like that happened.
could have hoped that after the war there would have been formed a group of French women, exercising an active influence as women, as sisters, as friends, striving for inspiration-to convey patriotic ideas to everyone, using their beauty, of their smile, of their charm to lift hearts, to awaken the desire for noble actions. What a magnificent mission in a country where women have always played such a major role I The Duchess of Clievreuse seems to have had a instant this generous ambition, she tried to bring together all women in the cult of Joan of Arc, to do,
pure heroine, the symbol of national recovery;

are relentless api'ès her, but her voice, moreover, remained without echo.

((Courtesan or housewife, said Proudhon, for the woman there is no middle ground." Sister of Charity or coco-debt, such is, in the upper classes, the dilemma beyond current French woman. Many, rich, beautiful, having everything to be happy, leave everything to give themselves to divine Spouse, to devote himself to a life of devotion and of sacrifice; but, with a few exceptions, we do not see, among those that remain in the world, no image

d76 JEWISH FRANCE

of these charming and strong, intelligent and valiant women-lantes whose chimerical portrait we sketched just now the hour, of these women having the feeling of the honor of race, the social function to be fulfilled by the privileged of fortune, resolved to communicate to those they love the horror of everything that is degrading or humiliating.

There are no longer, moreover, any salons which still have a somewhat considerable authority. Social gatherings where we once sought, above all, the pleasure of finding ourselves again together, to talk, to exchange ideas, have become, as soon as the bankers took the lead of the movement, theatrical solemnities, ceremonial celebrations whose costs terrify even the wealthy families, who cannot-wind struggle with the pomp of Israel.

The witty gossip, the subtle allusion of the past, have gives way to the crude gossip that we always fear to see move from the conversation to the boulevard newspaper. foreigners and Jews have introduced, into the habits of the good society, the jokes of peasants, the pranks of smoker. The Marquise de X... was in a spa town, outside France, when at two o'clock in the morning we hear it suddenly shout: "Fire!" They run up and see a rastaquouère well known to all who, fleeing before the flames, rushes out of the room with his clothes by hand. For six months, we send to all of Paris cards on which we read: M^^ de X... and his rasta-what. The Countess of Z... remains in place, after a dinner, when the ladies discreetly withdraw; she replies that she is above the weaknesses of hu-Maine Nature. For another six months, other cards circulate, on which we read: M^^ de Z... ne... M^^ de Z... is an angel. Every morning the beautiful elegant woman receives, with desperate accuracy, a magnificent boot of asparagus!

We see that all this is not in very delicate taste.
Stories of this kind, which could easily be multiplied, stories of adultery, separations, accommodations between the husband and the lover, would only have a scanning interest-dale and would not fall within the scope of this work, which is exclusively a social study.

The socialite no longer even has self-respect beauty, the instinctive hatred of everything that distorts or en-ugly, of everything that violates the laws of a certain elegance superior which is one of the manifestations of art; it on the contrary, loves the strange and the baroque, the low, what brings us a little closer to animality.

What a vision of contemporary Paris this ball is beasts, given in May 1885 by the Princess of Sagan! This time it was really about the soul of the French woman herself that the government was attacking; we had just desecrate the sanctuary of the sweet and poetic patron saint of Paris, of Genevieve, the saint and the shepherdess whose name shines on the beginnings of our history with a freshness of dawn. In the absence of a very lively faith, the most elementary delicacy, a thought of feminine solidarity-nine, should have commanded great ladies like the Duchess of Bisaccia, whom Etincelle calls on every occasion sion "an incomparable Christian" not to choose this time to dress up as an animal. These people argue-took the small cardboard box where the entrance to a ball was represented with this inscription: "One animal, 1 franc; one animal and his lady, 2 francs.

These are not rastaquouères, foreigners. Everything Tarmorial of France, all the true nobility is present

478 ' YOUR JEWISH FRANCE

to this nameless party, to this kind of self-prostitution even which, rightly says the Universe, inspires a kind of terror.

The Gaul first gives us the names of the guests dinner :

Count and CountessF. of Contaut, Duke and Duchess of Gramont, Count and Viscountess (I Turcne, Baron and Baronpe de Vaufreland, Count and Countess of Castries, Viscount and Viscountess of

M. d'Amilly, Marquis and Marquise of Moustiers, Count and Comtesse de Vogué, committee B. de Boisselin, count R. de Fitz-James, count and countess A. de la Rochefoucauld, baroness de Noirmont, Mr. and Mrs. d'Espeuilles, Count and Countess of Mieulje, Viscount and Viscountess of Carets, Duke and Duchess of Bisaccia, Marquise de Galliffet, Lady Dalhousie, Earl and Countess of Kersaint, Mr. and Mrs. O'Gonnor, Marquise de Talleyrand, Mr. and Klû Lambert, comte et comtesse of Sainl-Gilles, M. Haas, count L de Gontaki-Biroii, viscount G. Costa de Beauregard, colonel Gibert, Baron Seillière, Baron de la Redorte, H. Ridgway, county R. de Gontaut-Biron, Allain de Montgomery, Count and Countess de Maleyssie, count and countess of Chevigné, marquis of Massa, Prince of Luçinge, horned Philippe de Beaumont, Count of Brissac, Count of Kergpiay, of liarp. Count Jean de Beaumont, Count Pierre des Moustiers, 4th and Duchess of Prias, Viscount of Ppndy, Marquis and Marquise of Mailly, Marquis and Marquise of éville, etc., etc.

He then lists one by one all the figures of this squitjLi^hpale and iious fîjj) attend their frolics:

Descoqsmircbînt strutting through the salons. We recognize—were born, under these priests, the Viscounts Ro^{er} de Chabrol, Al. d'Heurse), the Victoire of Pampierre, the Viscount of CpntadeSj the Count Antoine de li Foret jie pivonne, the Count of Las C^{ses}.

And there is no shortage of ducks either. A long beak in spatula lies on the foreheads of Mr. Count of Béthune, of Baron de Gargan, Count Plattcr, and many others. One of them had the idea of offering the princess an ingenious newspaper: the Cn^{ard} created for the occasion and died with it. The Count of Espeuillo has put a sheet of owl as decoration. The count Albert of the Forest of Divonne is in heron, Count PVançois in turkey. Viscount Leusse has a magpie's head, Viscount And—I have an owl's head.

1

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY i'9

The Duke of Gramont will not be able to do it. M. (ië Ôfâmed'o. All two are in Pierrot, — the head of the beast and the body of Pierrot tightrope walkers.

Two brothers joined forces to represent a giraffe: Count François de Gontaut forms the front, and his brother Auger-lrain.

dressed up and entertained the audience with his grimaces. Dressing up eii monkey when we poHé a name which once received such a sad publicity, don't you really have to have that?
upside down?

M'^® de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia is in a pelican.

M. d'Espeuilles passes in mouse, the Count of Tocqueville in fox, Viscount Blin de Bourdon in Bengali, the Count of Antioch as a lion, Viscount Rambuteau as a rooster, Count R. de la Rochefoucauld in Loutie.

M"* Thouveneï is in bat, the Count of Berlhier in white cat, the Countess of Grouchy as a white mouse, the du-Chesse de Frias as a cardinal, M. de Galliffet son as a canary, René-Raoul Duval as a fox, the Countess of Mieulle as a blue bird, said hummingbird; the Countess of Blacas as a chicken. M. de Ravi-corny, dog's head.

We recognize Prince François de Broglie in the crowd, turkey head; the Count of Gontaut-Biron, as a white poodle; the Marquise de Groix, as a kingfisher; the Marquise de la Ferro-nays, in swallow; Countess Fernand de la Ferron^ys, ea seagull; the Countess of Vogué, as a bird of paradise; the comteass of Aïaltyoie, as a damsel.

180 JEWISH FRANCE

Ms. Viscountess of Florian, in gold and green with wings, re-features a dragonfly. The Countess of Brias has large wings in blue and yellow hummingbird feathers.

All Jewry is naturally there, laughing out loud.
of ravishment of this unfortunate aristocracy.

Baroness Gustave de Rothschild is a bat.

Ms. Lambert-Rothschild is in panther, blue tulle skirt gold beaded and fine pearls, embroidered velvet bodice and train, imitating panther skin, covering the back of the skirt and ending in a Louis XIII lambrequin

Panther head on the hair, held in the middle by a crescent of diamonds.

M"« Michel Ephrussi as a rock rooster: pleated orange tulle in-entirely and draped by tulle scarves, same shade, stopped by rock roosters; middle of the back of the black velvet skirt, stopped on each side by two large black wings framing the orange feather bodice forming the body of the bird.

It would be a shame to take anything away from the ballet's story.
bees.

It's a little after midnight... the hour of crimes, of apparitions – and wonders too.

A drum roll lets the people know that a surprise is brewing. We rush forward, we push ourselves a little, we hurry a lot and we climb on the chairs to see better.

Someone says: "It lacks ladders... my kingdom for a ladder!

Indeed, here is the ballet that begins:

At the back of the festival gallery, an enormous beehive stands;
I said hive said: bees, unless the hive is deserted,
bt, fortunately, this is not the case here. It is inhabited and delicately.

A swarm of bees: corselets of brown satin striped with yellow, tulle skirts, gold lamé, brown aprons with gold sequins, gauze wings

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 181

gold, gold helmet with antennae, which respond to the names of M^{me} the Countess of Ghavagnac, the Baroness de Vaufreland, the Countess François de Gontaut, the Duchess of Gramont, the com-Tesse Aimery de La Rochefoucauld, the Marquise d'Espeuilles, the Countess of Kersaint, the Marquise of GallifTet, the Princess of Léon, the Marquise d'Amilly, the Countess Gabrielle de Castries come, go, forage, trot. They are so charming so that we let them fly away, and gentlemen bumblebees are there to oppose it. The following are: Messrs. the Marquis d'Amilly, the Count Philippe de Beaumont, Count Jean de Beaumont, Count of Jarnac, Count Bruno de Boisgelin, Auain de Montgomery, the Count of Haro, the Marquis of Moustiers, the Viscount of Garets, the Viscount of Mieulles, Prince of Lucinge.

Their uniform is very gallant: brown satin breeches, for-two-tone brown satin stitch, forming the rings.

Messrs. the bumblebees, who have just awakened with the dawn, make around the hive, on which they cast knowing glances—ers stop in front of masterpieces. The bees, which the aurosy-fingered rore brought out of the hive, approach the gallant bumblebees and, after a chase, bees and bumblebees mix.

The queen bee (Countess of Gontaut) chooses a king:

graphic, and the couple flies away, swirling in the middle of the groups of dancers, among which we notice the Countess of La Rochefoucauld, the Duchess of Gramont and the Marquise of GallifTet.

This is what Christian women did in May 1885, to crack the desecration of the church of Sainte-Geneviève (1)! There is no indiscretion here, no allusion to

(1) At the farewell banquet of the Catholic Workers' Circles, this dou- This happy rapprochement provided Count Albert de Mun with the motive of one of his finest oratorical movements. The speaker, interrupted by the applause, was more than five minutes without power to speak again.

The boos, the jeers, the contemptuous jokes fell na-

II 11

J82 JEWISH FRANCE

scandals known to all, no reminder of the stories more or less less piquant or more or less sad, which run through everything, there is the story of a complacent newspaper, the document human.

All this to get a mention in Arthur's journal.
Meyer!

This Meyer is the true master of the Parisian world, the arbiter of all elegances, the organizer of all the holidays. Never has Jewry produced such a type successful. Son of a dress-braid merchant, he started in Paris, some twenty years ago, as Blanche's secretary d'Anligny. He combined these functions, which should not be a sinecure, with those of reporter; clinging to everyone to have information, we heard, all the beautiful representations, shout: "names! names! " The names collected, he wrote them down feverishly turally like hail on these deranged people who had given thus, in public, the spectacle of their ignominy or rather of their stupidity. Let us quote, as an example, the conversation of the Echo of Paris, that a courageous Catholic newspaper, the Pilgrim, placed as a legend below a drawing reproducing a ball scene.

The Duchess of Bauséant presents the Baron des Argousses to the Marquise of Gassenoisette.

The Baron:

—That's strange, Madame la Marquise, I seem to have already had the honor of meeting you?...

— Indeed, Baron, at the Princess of Sagan's ball. I was costume-pinned in a pin.

— What, that delicious bug, was that you?

— But you didn't recognize me, you ungrateful man?

— I apologize!

— Were you a suckling pig?

— Perfectly.

—And your sister?

— As a sewer rat.

— Charming I charming)

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 483

on the cuff of his shirt. He signed with the pseudonym of Jean de Paris. It was then, in 1869 I believe, that Mr. Carie des Perrières, who signed Curtius at Nain jaune, and who published an interesting volume on the world of players: Paris who plays and Paris who cheats, the bed figure in his gallery of wax figures.

The study, moreover, is charming, it has a lively and the mocking verve of a ballad by Heinrich Heine.

Clothes for sale! Old clothes! Old braid! Hats for sale! sell !

It was the family motto. Let's face it, this motto is theirs. always remained faithful. At fifteen, tired of his apprenticeship in the trade of spyglasses, Duke John equipped one hundred lances to come to Paris.

Paris, this is the way, this is the center for such an induster than that of Duke John.

In Paris, the Duke did a little bit of everything, he tried on opera glasses, as in Le Havre, but it no longer worked for him and, not wanting to deviate, above all, he threw himself into the arts. This is to date from Celtic terrible way.

In Paris, Duke John quickly understood the advantage he could take of the vanity of some, the coquetry of others. The first year was nevertheless quite hard. He made an expedition to Trouville-sur-Mer during which it was proven that Duke John knew a lot better handle the king of clubs than the Durandal.

He was therefore expelled from the Casino. Nevertheless, he managed to hang on there to a personality of elegant literature. Following him he entered into the world, not into the true, but into the false world that frequent young people and journalists, and, thanks to the influence from his chaperone, he came to have the right of citizenship among the youth—who has lunch at Bignon's and dines at number 6 of the Maison d'Or. But what a right of citizenship, my God! What an existence to spend for the grotesque and the breastplate of a circle of young people, constantly rubbing shoulders with high life, dinners and girls and not having—never see anything but the crumbs of some and the gray hairs of others.

18 i JEWISH FRANCE

This was Meyer's first method. He moved quickly thanks to the great Jewish surge that took place after the war. Today he has been trading, gambled on the stock market, swindled, he has a coupe, a hotel, a newspaper. It does not excite desire or even contempt, but rather as an immeasurable astonishment—nement. Having noticed that some people in the world affected a certain stiffness, in rather bad taste remains, he imitated them, but imitated in charge; he does not move more, he no longer turns his head; with his pale complexion, his ivory skull, his shiny beard, he gives the impression of a Semitic mummy wandering in the middle of Paris with the help of a spring that we cannot see.

This fantastic being, this rascal of such implausibility roguery literally stuns with jokes made cold-blooded people who knock people down. At the time of ob-Emperor's suites at Chislehurst he wanted to march to the sides of the imperial family; he mourned the Count of Ghambord and announced gravely that he would not be able to attend at the feast of Ischia because of the death of the King. All this I repeats, performs seriously, silently, without laughing.

It really has a kind of role in elegant life; it was he who put into circulation these words of "pschutt" and of c(v'ian » that our gentlemen repeat with a gri-stupid mace. At the dog show, the du-biters The Uzès chessmen ring the honors when he arrives (1), which would be understood at most in an exhibition of fish farming. This Tom Lewis, rubbed with letters, is mixed up in does the shopping. He is the one who intervenes in the trial of Sarah Bernhardt and the Jew Koning, it is he who will take

(1) Gaulois, May 31, 1884.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 485

at Meissonier the portrait of Madame Mackay and which rap-take the money to the painter.

You can guess, with such an intermediary, what the negotiations. M[™]® Mackay portrays Meissonier in the secret place where Saint Simon had put the portrait of Dubois. Meissonier dishonors himself by his greed for gain, by demanding seventy thousand francs for a painting which asked him for a few sessions. At the moment when everything is going well arrange, the Jew Wolff, who sees his friend Meyer in-pledged, comes to pronounce on the case some of these pa-roles of which he has the secret: "If in such a debate, said this austere man, I could hesitate for a moment, he should give up raising one's voice on artistic issues-ticks; I would sign my own downfall."

—So your Paris is a den of brigands?
foreigners sometimes tell you.

— But no. Paris is still full of good people.

If, instead of living in this world of schemers who wait-tooth travelers at the station, like the interpreters and the pickpockets; if, instead of surrounding herself with Jews, Mrs. Mackay, who is said to be an excellent woman, had lived with Honest Parisians, she would have known how to make a artificial increase on works of art as on shares of financial companies; she would have found three hundred in Paris painters who have more talent than Mr. Meissonier; she would have dealt with an artist who would have behaved towards she as a well-bred man, and she would not have been defamed in the newspapers.

When he has nothing else to do in town, Meyer organizes-celebrates with the duchesses. During the Alsatian festival ciens-Lorrains, it was he who was to open the ball with the Countess Aimery de la Rochefoucauld. At the last moment, the poor countess had honor and was content to take a walk in the room on the arm of the little Jew. Isn't the exhibition

186 JEWISH FRANCE

I admit, these humiliations always afflict me. Isn't it not saddening this pretty name of Aimery, which has I don't know what Middle Ages perfume, and brings to mind Victor's Aymerillo Rugo, this great name from La Rochefoucauld, which recalls centuries of heroism, battles won, Maxims, – all this sullied by the promiscuity of a former secretary of Blanche d'Antigny? I'm a bit like Veuillot and I finds that "these people betray me personally, steal something from me" by disposing of a name which they do not have the right to dispose.

Make no mistake, however, Arthur Meyer is the only literary personality that people of the world can endure (2). After books, what they hate most are

(1) The love of the Jews, moreover, is very developed in this family. She is a relative of Countess Aimery – if not the Countess herself – who nearly drowned for love of Jewry. She was in her villa on Lake Geneva when she was told that Baroness de Rotlischild came from Preigny to see her in her boat i steamer. Transported by the honor of such a visit, the Countess rushes forward, overturns everything in its path; on the footbridge which con- led to the boat, she wants to take the three times of the reverence like at Versailles, it capsizes, it falls into the water, and the Jews indulge, about this fall, in jokes of a dubious taste- tens.

(2) There are exceptions, however, but they always happen. in favor of the Israelites. The Jew, flattering, insinuating, cajoling, lulls the patrician, rocks him gently; the Frenchman, who would tell him frankly- ment the truth, which would bring him the echo of life, would disconcert him, would disturb him, wake him up.

The Duke of Chaulnes, whose mother was showered with insults by the Jewish press, was the devoted protector of Eugène Miintz, of whom we we were talking about earlier; he helped him continue his work and the day before of his death, he took, by a touching foresight, the dispositions

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY ^87

the men who make it. They only understand the writer in the form of a well-informed, well-dressed, intri- "Killing, stirring, agitating. M. de la Rochefoucauld, Duke of Bisaccia, receives Rothschild and Mayer, he does not invite Her- Villy at a party where one of his plays is being performed. The episode is still significant and the letter, full of brilliance, written at this subject by the author of La Belle Sainara to one of his friends, worth reproducing.

I'm in a very bad way in the corner from where I'm writing these lines. I have: enlarged liver, jaundice; I am yellow with gum guttate, and moreover my weakness is extreme. I get up very little and cannot walk. It's been going on for a month now. I wouldn't want to die without having told how this famous great lady which has been talked about so much, and which is called French Politeness, is died three times rather than enter my house, and that about this Sainara whose leaves call me "the happy author."

Imagine that, for this famous Japanese festival, we came ask me for opening verses. I did them, they were the poor. I was not even acknowledged for this work of-summoned. And we didn't even send an invitation to the author for the party. It's steep necessary to ensure the publication of the volume entitled The Renaissance; in Italy and France in the 5th century, during the reign of Charles VIII.

Mr. Miintz, moreover, paid a just tribute to the Duke of Chaulnes. and it is a pleasure to see appear, in a few pages of his introduction, this benevolent figure of a curious great lord of everything, interested in everything, coming with crutches, after having was seriously injured in Goulmiers, take his law exams in Poitiers, studying workers' issues, publishing a remarkable work on the sculptures known as the Saints of Solesmes.

The Montesquieu family also helped the famous doctor a lot. Worms in its early days, but no great lord, again, would not do for a Christian what he does for a Jew who knows Tentor-liller, take it.

188 JEWISH FRANCE

I must tell you, of course, that I would not have been at the dukes. But the dukes and vidâmes owed me an invitation, if only for the collection I make of these illustrated boxes.

Moreover, having noted the death of French politeness in the noble suburb, I thought that it was the third time that This happened to me, in the name of the poor, with the same Saïiiiara. Here the anecdote:

The first time, the Duchess of Magenta asked me to give for the poor, at the Odéon, the first of Saïnara. Lady! it- It was hard! After three years of waiting, sacrificing my first! I nevertheless, for the poor.

The good old lady having learned that I was at the Rappel,

She did better: she threatened to reach the middle. Which was a fall for me.

She didn't come at all (thank God!), but nobody didn't thank me. One!

The second time, it was Ms. de Metternich who asked me to give – by giving up my rights – Sainara to Vienna, on the Court stage, with her as an actress, for the benefit of the flooded with Szegedin. I gave up the rights. I wrote a letter of French people happy to see their verses being useful to Hungarians! We played. Great success. A lot of money for Szegedin. Not a single word of thanks. Two! I

With the La Rochefoucaulds, just politeness.

Three! 1 1

I believe that these notes are not necessary for the history of a race that is going away are lost. So I bequeath them to you. It is good that these things will be said one day or another.

To you,
E. d'hervilly.
June 26, 1883.

No, my dear colleague, these notes must not for the history of a race to be lost, that is why I reprint the letter here.

The Duke of Bisaccia nevertheless remains a strong man. devoted to his cause, very ^enerous even on occasion, but obviously he got lost in bad company, in the company of Jews, this flower of delicacy and courtesy which once characterized the French nobility English; he no longer knows how to make the appropriate distinction between a poet, an artist who is a being of selflessness and work and a vulgar financier who gets his hands dirty in the handling of gold.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 189

One day, Papillon de La Ferté, the steward of the Menus, reported to Marie-Antoinette a quarrel he had had with Sedaine, he always repeated: "Sedaine has me said, I said to Sedaine... »

—When the king or I, interrupted the queen, speak of a writer, we always say Mr. Sedaine.

The Duke of Bisaccia no longer has a sense of these nuances, he would certainly say Sedaine and Monsieur de Rothschild as big as your arm.

If I speak at some length of the noble duke it is that he is, as I have already said, what the English call: "A representative character.)) He is instructive and It is painful to see in what society a man lives who naively believes himself, and who is really, for the crowd silly, the incarnation of the high aristocracy, the represent- both ideas of chivalry, honor and faith (1).

(1) In the month of April 1885, we see the poor man, still co-marked by Meyer, attend the ball given by the Municipal Council at the City Hall. The leader of the right, as they say, parades nearby of the baronne of Ange, to which a municipal councilor has opened before the hour the doors of the living room where we dine; he exchanges poi- handshakes with all those advisors who chased the Sisters away hospitals, tore down the cross from cemeteries, persecuted in the most dirty and in the most ignominious way everything that honest people bother respect. Frankly, was this the place of the Duke of La Rochefoucauld- cauld-Bisaccia?

Everything is false, moreover, in this window character.
II 11.

190 THE JEWISH FRANK

Meyer admires the Duke and the Duke loves the trade of Meyer (1). Meyer's name is among the elite assistance who crowded into the ball on April 48, 1884, in the midst of beau- Hirsch coup, some of which are called Maurice and others other Theodore. Deeply struck, no doubt, to see himself There, Mayer declares that this ball is one of the biggest events- ments of the century. It is to Le Figaro, however, that the palm of enthusiasm. A staircase especially delights him because We are in the century of stairs. This one, it seems^ "defies description."

Made of rock fragments, bordered on both sides by blocks of granite covered with moss, on which water gushes from a invisible source falls eternally in fresh cascades, it is like a rising forest where, in a gentle warmth, flourishes, all the flora of enchanted countries, where the palm trees which seem The masters of each anfiactuosity project towards the sky, to verti- ginious heights, their long spears of dark green, among the

Cliambre, he calls July 14th "the feast of the assassination" and this day-

Assassination Day, why are you lighting it up? If it's a national holiday oale, why do you call it "assassination day?"

(1) To understand what is significant about such an association, From the point of view of the morals of an era, one must read the Druid, a roman à clef, by the Countess of Martel, which introduces us to what is happening passes into the interior of the Gaul. There is everything in there, the ten-attempted assassination through vitriol, pimping, blackmail. We learn there that it is a girl, a former actress at the Variétés, who writes the social mail and teaches the women of the suburb Saint-Germain, how should one behave in church? This is where it is a certain aristocracy has arrived, the aristocracy of pleasure.

As a complement to the Druid, one can also read the dis-lecture given by Meyer, in August 1883, at the Evian regattas* Meyer always calls Prince Brancovan "my dear friend," and he calls Bartholony to witness his words: "Isn't it, my Dear Bartholony? " To say that I left the countryside, by a sea-bright summer day, expressly to vote for this Protestant, friend de Meyer, who claimed to be a conservative clear reflections of the lights sown in the foliage. It turns, turns, the staircase, and, in its grandiose evolution, finally ends at the greenhouse – the ecloa of this fantastic decor – which, by its situation and its Babylonian proportions, brings to mind the gardens su-hanged men of Semiramis. A radiant illumination gives the illu-tropical sun, and the lush vegetation that spreads out there that of transoceanic Eldorados. And it is a miracle to see, in the narrow paths with flowery borders, which cross and intersect cross, ecstatic groups circulate, shoulders shine naked, pearls and diamonds sparkle, silk blends with flo-green reasons, and all these sparkles merge into a kind of vaporous kaleidoscope where there are no more women, nor flowers, no satin, no greenery, nothing but the great symphony colors and the bitter intoxication of perfumes!

I

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 191

Le Figaro is right: "Let's flee this disturbing paradise!" let us tear ourselves away from this opium dream!" to take refuge in the chapel. There is a chapel, in fact, and one re-would regret that she was not there; she recalls a certain religion that is fashionable. The La Rochefoucaulds go there moan about persecution, before entering the ball, when The Hirschs have not yet arrived. Their God does not exclude not the pleasures of dancing, even in the time of Diocle-tia; it is somewhat related to that of Béranger.

We are admitted into his empire
Under the crown of martyrdom
And under the crown of flowers.

Confessors of the faith and martyrs, many great lords are ((among those privileged people who, from ten o'clock from evening to four in the morning danced, chatted, had supper, then danced again, talked again, had another meal and who, valiant in their pleasure, only surrendered with the dawn." They hope to do well one day in the stained glass windows, only the instruments of sup- accomplice that the saints carry on their hand in the naive

i92 JEWISH FRANCE

images of Gothic Tart, will be replaced this time by a party favor accessory.

If you want to see how much the destiny of a journalist Christian is different from that of a Jewish journalist, re-keep the men surrounding Meyer. Go to the Gaul, you will find, next to the pale Meyer, a handsome rider, a gentleman from Béarn who looked a bit like Henri IV. Brave, not only in a duel, but in the street, he Ta proven during the demonstration in Place Vendôme, Mr. de Pêne remained, despite his incessant production, a writer- vain of race; among the thousands of articles that he has improv- targeted there is not a single one that does not have a feature, a sentence where the artist who knows how to hold a pen well is revealed. What Did it help him? He is now erased behind the little circumcised boy whom he chaperoned in the world; he has not was able to keep a journal of his own.

Take, if you still want, Gornély. He was called € a perverted choirboy." I don't think the word be fair, but I am inclined to believe that he suffered a little, at moment of success, this unhealthy vertigo, this pesti- lens that emerges from the boulevard and which is terrible, sur- everything for those who lived in the provinces. I knew him poor- vere, worthy of all sympathy, in this truly interior- charming story of a young father who feeds the his own work. I can speak about it with complete independence, for I have never had anything to complain about or to praise. 11 certainly knew that I would have enjoyed defending my I had ideas at his house, he never offered it to me; he confined himself a little too much then, in my opinion at least, and from the point of view of the work he directed, in a somewhat restricted environment and boulevard.

Despite everything, he still managed to create, to make read, to keep alive an avant-garde newspaper which made immense services to the Conservative Party. After losing two thousand subscribers at once, by rallying to the Count of In Paris, the Clairon had no fewer than 5,375 subscribers; at the time of his disappearance he had a daily circulation of 11,000 copies.

The slightest help would have kept this newspaper afloat. Gornély did ask the Count of Paris for this help. He did not want to not even receive the person the young man sent him writer who, after all, fought for his cause with bravery, with enthusiasm, even with success.

Don't you find the abandonment of this being distressing? of initiative, activity, goodwill by people who have more than a hundred million of their own?

I do not have to discuss whether the princes of Orleans were well or badly inspired in demanding, after the war, their confiscated goods; I would rather know this money in their hands than to see it wasted by the Republicans. It is not no less certain that these goods do not have the narrow character—personal possession of a property bequeathed to his children by someone who became rich in the wool trade and oils; these are appanage goods formerly granted to the family often in to support its rank, maintain a princely train, enhancing the splendor of royalty. The princes of Orleans do not have, in conscience, the right to enjoy exclusively of this fortune, they have a moral obligation to take it to devote it to the service of France, to devote it to the propa—great monarchical.

No one, probably, dared to say this to the Count of Paris, teach this prince, who is not only a honest man, but a good Christian, whom love exceeds—capital is a cardinal sin. Defending the interests religious in France therefore finds itself having as its organ, less in a certain public, the diary of a Jew and a Meyer(l)..

104 THE JEWISH FRINGE

The conscientious journalist, in love with his art, is the object of the same hatred as the writer. The Press, too, has almost completely transformed in recent years years; to understand the new conditions in? in which it is placed, it is first necessary to the one who does it.

Nothing is more absolutely honest, more completely disinterested than the journalist of French and Christian origin—yours, and this, without regard for opinion. He has a formidable means of action, it hurts or caresses at will the vanity of each, at a time when this feeling has taken hold almost morbid proportions and the temptation never touches him to derive any benefit from the praise that he grants,

In this respect, there is no doubt, never even one n*had the impertinence to promise a gift to a critic drama, to a book critic or to an art critic to speak favorably of a piece, a work, a table. Are they therefore absolutely impartial? No. Unfortunately, attaching only secondary importance to to what they write, they are accessible to the camera—derision, flattery, personal approach made near

(1) In Hungary, moreover, some calligraphic newspapers, such as the 'religious week and the CaUwlicus Galad^ are also directed not Jews.

JEWISH PARLIAMENT AND FRENCH SOCIETY J95

of them, they award the epithet of "eminent" or "sympathetic,)) as if it were a simple cross of the Agricultural merit. Such as would indignantly reject a sum of money, will not resist a woman's smile, to a gracious word, to the very insistence of a stranger who seems to attach exceptional importance to what people say about him. The party spirit, moreover, almost takes away from the journalist the right to have an opinion. If conservatives don't remember hold only rather weakly, everything that comes from a rep—The American is admirable for his own people.

We no longer even influence journalists through dinners. as under the Restoration. The paintings that the writers Germans have traced literary mores are painters—backward ideas that have no relation to reality present. It is no longer only abroad, or at the bottom of the pro—the most remote vines, that we still imagine that the journalists spend their evenings behind the scenes drinking champagne with the actresses. Circles, protected by the police and sponsored by Jews, were founded to to attract writers, deprave them and take away from them, through play, their small savings, but they are hardly frequented than by a special world which has no relation to the

Only the editors of news newspapers, boulevard newspapers, as they say, are, in some way manner, obliged by the very nature of their work to a some disjointed in existence. Others live with perfect regularity, the further from the center they are can, only mingling from a distance into the noisy existence from Paris. Most are married and faithful; many also, I must admit, are cohabiting; they have met a woman who loves them, who doesn't bother them

196 JEWISH FRANCE

their papers and they attached themselves to her without taking the difficulty in regularizing their situation; they practice all the virtues of marriage without the benefits.

It is precisely these virtues that diminish independence-dence of the journalist, who incline to concessions a natively straight character, which make a press decon-Derée has, as editors, worthy men personally-ment of any consideration.

If the editorial staff of newspapers, in fact, is composed of healthy elements, management, ownership, to be more exact, is too often in the hands of absolutely me-worthy, crooked financiers, unscrupulous shareholderspulous who see in a newspaper, not a means of to spread just and fruitful theories, but to support shady combinations, to obtain concessions that ministers, objects of universal disgust, grant without bargain with those who have the sad courage to rent them.

Gambetta's conception of the press was an exclusively Jewish conception. A horde of cosmopolitan scholarship holders met one morning, heard with the Genoese and came to chase the French from a newspaper who had actually created it, founded it, accredited it in the pu-public through their intelligence and their work.

One day, a Belgian financier, Werbrouck, intimate the order to the editors of the Gaulois to have to change convictions in twenty-four hours. A few months later, He is a Russian Jew, Elie de Gyon, forced to come down from his chair, in St. Petersburg, by the indignant students and decorated by the French government, which comes at the head of This newspaper teaches us what policy we must follow.

Another union is trying to take over France

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 197

the same way. In June 1882, Waldeck-Rous-selle, worthy disciple of his master, has brutally expelled-them, without even warning them the day before, all the editors of the Reformation who sign a collective protest against the crudeness of this process.

I still remember talking with Escoffier at the moment where Gambetta's gang had set its sights on the Little Journal.

The opinions of the Petit Journal nQ are not mine,
but it is impossible not to recognize moderation,
the honesty, the spirit of morality with which Escoffier directed this sheet which, by its enormous circulation, could undoubtedly do a lot of harm.

Gambetta appreciated skill, application to his task of the writer who had raised the print run so quickly of the Petit Journal^ considerably reduced following the condemnation of the Jew Millaud. He had brought him, and he had offered a very brilliant situation if he wanted to take-to lead the management of the Little Republic.

Our colleague had accepted, but, informed of the system on which Gambetta relied to maintain his popularity faltering, he had, although anti-clerical himself, formally declared that he would not associate himself with a campaign of defamation and slander against our priests and our Brothers of the Christian Schools.

The vindictive Italian had promised himself to remove his modest situation to the man who refused to make his own caudatary and he almost succeeded.

Faced with this shameless intervention of dirty money in questions of doctrine, the writer feels his heart leaps with indignation, he wants to resign, but he is often married, I said, father of a family; he is seized by

198 JEWISH FRANCE

the fear of seeing misery suddenly enter this happy, peaceful, almost coquettish interior with its books, his old plates, his drawings of friends on the wall, his flowers in summer; he reflects and almost always, in such a

This explains why the Jews very easily put to the chain of men who are absolutely superior to them and who, if they had come together, would easily have been right two.

For the Jew, the newspaper is nothing more than a tool for blackmail. The most scrupulous agree and are naively surprised of the joy you experience in chiseling, for a modique, an article that you feel, which is in your conviction. – Why don't you write the opposite? you say– they often feel with a sincere feeling of benevolence, that would earn you double!

The famous Hugelmann was Jewish. Fiorentino, the only critic of a French newspaper that was convicted of blackmail, was Jewish (1). His brother or cousin translated into Hebrew, 1853, first poem by Eliezer and Nephtalide Florian. David, the financial journalist, was convicted of blackmail before to be sentenced to ten years in prison, naturally in absentia, for having removed a certain number millions to unfortunate shareholders. Zabban was prosecuted for blackmail, but I must add that he was acquitted.

Mr. Albert Christophe, Governor of Crédit Foncier, has

/ (1) He was the one who wrote at the time of the debut of an actress poor man, who had asked him to wait a little for the payment of the grant: "Mr. X.. promises a lot, we lock it if it revealed, in full Chamber (1), the way in which the Jew Eugene Mayer had raised funds to found the Lantern. Mayer had started by trying to intimidate with articles in the Financial Reform, but these articles have not– had not produced the expected result.

JUTF PARTS AND FRENCH POLITICS f99

What do we do, says Mr. Albert Christophe, we bring these articles together in a volume; this volume is put on sale in bookstore windows. A fairly legitimate, fairly natural emotion takes hold of those who had the management of this establishment.

So this happens: the edition is bought, the price is set; a sum of 30,000 francs is paid to the author of the book.

The sale, made by payment, was carried out at the same time time by the total delivery of copies. The entire edition sold, and there probably remains nothing of this book another copy than the one I have.

A member on the right: "He has value."

Mr. Hamille: "We must put it in lottery 1"

Albert Christophe: Now, gentlemen, what were the authors of this publication? Who were the makers of this booklet, those who put it on sale, those who made the shameful traffic that I denounce to you? Gentlemen, these are the ones same as we find in the current debate; these are the ones—
the very ones who received the money and who stipulated this sale,

(1) Official Journal of July 2, 1879.

Mayer claimed to have received only twenty-five thousand francs, which would have been given to him, out of a sum of two million intended for be distributed to the press of all shades, to support the inte-Egyptian interests.

A jury of honor assembled affirmed that this unflattering allegation, moreover, for the press, was false. Here is his statement: "He results from the facts that the twenty-five thousand francs that Mr. Mayer recognizes—born having received were paid, not by a financial syndicate and for advertising costs in Egyptian affairs, but for a cause for which Mr. Mayer could not give any satisfactory explanation—making. » ^

^<^ -^Z^- ^iv-<_ ^:î2- ^

200 JEWISH FRANCE

These are the same people who then used this money to to invigorate and make the newspaper La Lanterne 1 prosper

This is the fact that I leave for your appreciation without adding to it—no comment. This is the fact that I can, without excess of language, call it an act of financial blackmail.

A man in Mr. Christophe's situation could not obviously affirm such a serious act of blackmail to the tribune without having ten times the proof.

The fact is therefore not doubtful, but what is a thousand times more interesting, from the point of view of our study than the made himself, it is the terror that this man inspires. H It was enough for Mayer to treat the most honest magistrate as immediately sacrificed by Martin-Feuillée, the docile executioner of the orders of the Lantern. In December 1883, Mr. Denormandie reproached the Keeper of the seals who found nothing to answer.

For the court of Angers, said Mr. Denormandie, the Lantern of the August 21 reported a magistrate named Maury as in front) to be revoked. And he was a few days later.

On August 29, the same newspaper contained these words: "Come on, quickly a sweep; » on October 6, the three magistrates reported were swept away.

For Mont-de-Marsan, it is still the newspaper La Lanterne which denounces the president of this court, Mr. Tourné, as a forger* and unworthy to preside any longer.

Naturally, his dismissal was not long in coming.

But this is not enough for the newspaper which, in a new article, declared that all the judges of this court were forgers, and that they had to be made to come down from seats from which they were not worthy. He published their names with comments of a extreme violence: and a few days later, they were dismissed.

Mr. Denormandie continues his quotes by speaking of this which happened for the court of Pau, for the tribunal of Vannes and Dax.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 201

"Come on," insisted the newspaper I quoted, "come on, mon-Mr. Keeper of the Seals, you must come to Clermont and give the sweep you gave to Mont-de-Marsan and Pau I »

Mr. Denormandie could have added that in drawing up these lists of proscription, Mayer avenged personal insults nelles, because he and his family had had a little to do with the judiciary of all countries. He had particularly on the heart the judgment of the court of Valenciennes, of 20 August 1879, which had severely qualified the means by which Mayer had used it in one of his newspapers, La Réforme financial, to launch a shady business: the Company Northern ceramics. The court had noted that the Financial Reform had claimed that the factory was free of all charges, debts and mortgages, while its price had not even been paid, and declared "that the pre-The resulting damage results not from the facts themselves, but from the

and guilty; " he had finally established that the maneuvers guilty had been committed "by Mayer, publicist and banker in Paris, in a newspaper, the Financial Reform-cider.))

In the affair of New France, there was no hesitation to pursue Mr. Sumien, who was only a simple journalist-list inserting announcements or notices, but it would have been chi-America to think that Loew, or any magistrate new layers, continued Mayer who had organized the same dishonest company. Nevertheless, this blames everything platonic still displeased him and he took the opportunity to get rid of it revenge.

2C2 JEWISH FRANCE

Our French officers themselves are all little boys. in front of this Jew.

On the occasion of July 14, 1883, the Lanterne public I do not know what infamy against M. de Vaulgrenand, colonel of the 22nd Artillery Regiment, at Versailles. The next day the The newspaper office is full of officers, the colonel of the Valette and Morlière, the first to arrive, meet there with a squad of officers from the 22nd Artillery Regiment. What are all these gentlemen doing here? Asking for a reparation to Mayer? That would be a very chi-America. They are coming, the newspaper tells you in italics, to bear witness in favor of their colonel.

Isn't this still valuable for psychological history?

/ gic of this time, these heroes, these beautiful soldiers of the great battles, these French people bothering to come and plead the

^. because of their colonel in front of a filthy Jew from Cologne, half singer, half spy?

These are the aberrations, the weaknesses, the moral gallicisms that are almost impossible to make understand an Englishman or a German. The officers Germans, these disciples of IL^gel in uniform, who want explain everything by philosophical theories, you embar-particularly irritate with their endless questions view.

– Finally, your officers are very brave, we have them seen in the fire, they are superb; how do they leave themselves

The absence of any intellectual courage is always the only explanation that can be given. We can only do reread to foreigners, to demonstrate this absence of everything spring to resist, the execution of the thirty-seven gendarmes and guards of Paris, as hostages of the Commune. These men in the prime of life, of intrepid in-questionable, they proved it by their death, allowed themselves led to the slaughterhouse by an escort of thirty-five men-my who only asked to let them escape. All the along the route, the population, which was in favor, the en-courageous to leave. At the top of the street *de la Roquette, a woman shouted to them again: "Run away then b

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 2f 3

They went to the end, calmly, marking time, said Maxime du Camp, as if they were going to Tinstruc^ lion. "

Basically, the events that have taken place over the past ten years in are the proof, there is hardly more brain activity, of decision-making power in a colonel than in a guard municipal.

This activity, this decision, this intellectual courage, Eugène Mayer owns them.

Look again with me at this Jewish CV.
Study man in his own, in his moral formation, in its development and you will be amazed at what that a Jewish family, taken somewhat at random, can to stir things up, to disturb people^ to free up mo-tively around her.

One of Mayer's uncles, protected by the Wolff stewards and Gaffriot, was in charge of military supplies in Crimea and in Mexico he gained an enormous fortune which he lost in speculations, was put at the head of the agency of the Memphis el Paso, started a bacon business and ended up by leaving the United States to take refuge in Brussels.

Another of his uncles was, from 1860 to 1862, director of the Cologne pawnshop, committed countless de-torments and came to seek asylum first in France, then to England. He was sentenced to forced labor at built in a Piccadilly shop and now ins-carved in Paris.

It was at the home of a cousin of Mayer, Mrs. P., that suddenly a marshal of the Second Empire.

As for Mayer's father, he was locked up for a few days in Mazas, under the Empire, and released thanks to the protection of the marshal; involved again in another affair, a few years ago, and seeing himself lost, he hanged himself in his property in Jouy en Josas.

Our Mayer, Benjamin-Eugène, had another role in the tragic Rappaport affair.

The Rappaport case deserves a separate mention. This Rappaport or Rapoport (1) is a true modern Jew, a figure as today's Paris has thousands of them, he lives on the street from Piichelieu a luxurious apartment, he frequents the res-fashionable taurants, he plays and always wins. Although he would have had Wilna as his homeland, if he had stood for election municipal, anywhere, in competition with a brave Christian whose family would have been, for two or three centuries, the Providence of the district, he would have been, not elected but acclaimed like a Camille Dreyfus. All the Jews and all Freemasons would indeed have marched to the polls as one man, shouting: "Name-Mons Rappaport I » while honest people would be stayed at home moaning about themselves.

How exactly did the drama in which he was involved take place?

(1) A Salomon Rappaport, born in Lamberg in 1790, was one of the most renowned rabbis of Germany, he translated into Hebrew Esther de Racine. On June 9, 1860, German Jews celebrated in great pomp on the 70th anniversary of his birth.

I

BET? JEWISH AND FRENCH SOCIETY 205

disappeared on December 12, 1882? This is what remained problematic. Let us first cite the story of the Lantern, admirably placed to be well informed, but also-interested in concealing the truth.

The material facts of the crime are known. In the morning, a window suddenly opened, on the fourth floor, and a young rut, violently pulled back, and the window closed. A moment later, the sound of a detonation was heard. Guards peace were required, and the door of the apartment was opened question.

This apartment was where a diamond broker lived, Mr. Georges Rapaport. He had stabbed his daughter and then brainwashed.

These are the brutal facts, in their simple and bloody horror.

But no newspaper has exactly explained the causes of the crime. known. The murder was believed to be the desperate act of a father washing away his daughter's dishonor in blood. Nothing is less true. The truth is this:

Mr. Georges Rapaport, born in Poland, diamond broker in Paris, had married, in 1864, Ms. L. Davis. Two children born from this marriage: a girl, – yesterday's victim, and a boy, fifteen years old today.

But disagreement soon broke out between the spouses. Rich in vices and poor in moral sense, Mr. Rapaport wanted find in his wife a fortune, and his attempts to traffic to get her, to sell her to rich friends forced the honest woman first to take refuge in her family, then to ask and obtain a legal separation, which was pronounced in 1876.

The judgment decided that the two children, then in boarding school, would go out to their father and mother in turn.

However, the girl grew up and became beautiful. The father unworthy, as he had wanted to sell the beauty of his wife, his was speculating on his daughter's beauty. He pushed her towards the theater and got her into the Conservatory as soon as she left boarding school, in 1880. Ms. Rapaport was then 16 years old.

II 12

206 JEWISH FRANCE

The mother protested indignantly and summoned her husband to ob to have her daughter reinstated in her boarding school. Unfortunate ment, in her summons, she treated the Conservatory as a bad will take place. The need to protest against this qualification, risky, was imposed on the court. The judges therefore declared that the Conservatory was something like a temple of morality, and that, consequently, it was very legitimate that U, Rapaport y brought his daughter in.

walk everywhere, to the theater, to the woods, to the shady parties and always in sensational toilets. The desperate mother does not could do nothing: The judgment was there.

The child, however—for she was still a child—did not didn't want to be sold, defended herself.

Some time ago, Mr. Rapaport, not despairing of finally overcoming his resistance, had the idea of installing it sumptuous—ment to make it more fashionable. He therefore rented it to her, at her name, avenue d'Antin, 29, an apartment of 8,000 francs per year, and he had it very richly furnished. He was to move in with her the 15th of this month.

The young girl only persisted more in her resistance, which the wretch called "ingratitude."

Last Sunday, Mr. Rapaport sent his son the letter that we are going to read. From that moment, seeing his hon— dreams collapse drastically golden, he had resolved to kill the one who did not want enrich it.

Here is the letter;

Sunday, December 10, 1882,

My beloved son,

Your ungrateful sister pushed me to the limit. She insulted me "last degree, — on all sides I am unhappy. Your My sister is cursed by me, — death is preferable, — I "I'm sorry I can't say goodbye. I wish you all the best." all possible happiness.

"I kiss you for the last time.

"Your father who loves you."

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 207

Let us add that the poor child, to whom this letter was addressed, did not receive it. He still knows nothing about this whole tragedy and \ he is in the infirmary of his pension, quite seriously ill, by following the terrible emotions that had caused him, during his last— last outing to his father, a terrible scene between him and his sister, a scene which followed a hundred others of the same kind. The wretch found his plans so natural that he did not hide them not even in front of this child.

Some newspapers said that Ms. Rapaport had a lover and a few minutes when she was hit.

This is a slander, and it appears from the medical examination that his father stabbed her while she slept.

For several days, she had been pursued by sinister apgrips and locked himself in, but his father, at his unbeknownst to him, he had a duplicate key made to the room.

Other newspapers present the drama from one angle completely different.

Rapaport, say the Paris News on the date of December 14-
December, was originally from Russian Poland, an Israelite by religion...
In 1862, a mutual friend introduced him to a lovely young woman ■daughter, Jewish like him... related to several musicians... na-too artistic and too delicate for this half-savage... he-married and had two children. But one day, his wife, ^^~^^ tired of his prosaism, abandoned him to follow a young man... whom she left for another... so that she finds herself, today-today, the close friend of one of our colleagues, and that, recently at / rOdéon, she - much against her will, moreover - played a role in ''^ ^ - ' \ scene of violence which interrupted the premiere of The Marriage '/^ y_ André. ""^

The most common opinion in the neighborhood was that ^^ Rappaport had been murdered by a semi-autype individual ((/t^.
tick, which had been seen fleeing precipitately, a few t/,^)/ moments after the crime, and that the girl had been .
hit while trying to defend her father. Yes, like the ^^

208 JEWISH FRANCE

claims the Lantern^ she would have been stabbed during her sleep, one would not understand that she had pushed, at the window, the cries which, the Lantern itself recognizes, gave the alarm. Besides, according to the neighbors, M^^ Rappapot was dressed when she appeared for a minute at the window, which would tend to demonstrate that it was not her throat cut in her bed.

According to the general conviction, the active intervention of a Jewish magistrate would have stopped the investigation at the moment when it was going to result. What is certain is that the autopsy will ment demanded by everyone, was not done; a rebate-bin came to take the body of Rappaport who, victim or guilty, went without any procession to the Israelite cemetery.
This counterpart of the Rue Morgue Affair has not yet found Edgar Poë to tell it, nor Dupin to Imagine a Christian dragging all these souvenirs behind himnirs, mixed up in all these dramas, splashed with all this blood, his life will be completely darkened; he will be prey to an insurmountable melancholy, he will try not to put himself in evidence. The Jew is in there like a fish in the water, he wriggles, he is happy; this atmosphere of trouble perpetual is its natural element; it attacks prefreference to the institutions which would seem to inspire him a salutary fear; he calls our officers "clerica-makeup, church Pierrots, sacristy Punchinellos (1).

Actually, this man is very brave, make no mistake.
not, despite his insurmountable aversion to games of the sword. In a time when we live only by the brain, he has the audacity that is needed, the boldness of the brain. Examine carefully

(1) Lantern^ issues of May 1883, passim.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 209

this little Cologne urchin. He has everything against him, he wears a dishonored name, he has no literary talent; he turns around even on the pavement of Paris, he finds a way, with the funds raised as you know, to organize a big business like the Lantern, to stir up opinion.
Now look at some of our Catholics: their family has been in France for centuries, they own two one hundred thousand pounds of income, they have neither galley slaves nor hanged men among their own and, even with good will, they are helpless, annihilated. "Certainly, it would be necessary to do something, but what? What an era we live in, my good sir!

How do you expect that with guys of that caliber de Mayer, always working on a case, a combination-his, of a scandal to agitate the others, which country remains to live the good life of old? Let them free again twenty years and they will blow up Paris, France, Europe.

If only we could stick to those who are in the house! Alas! there are several million on earth who arrive successively hungrier, more restless, more ardent than those who are already half-fed.

To see where French democracy is and even cosmopolitan democracy, from the point of view of dignity and of the moral sense, to take its measure, it is equally appropriate-
It is important to look at Mayer's position in the party.
republican. The Lockroys, the Bradlaughs, the Aurelio Saffis speech on the virtues of democracy. As you must laugh, my old Lockroy, laugh and also despise you, when you put your sentences in such a place î To say that the poor people believe all this!

In the 1885 elections, Mayer was the big elector.
II 1-2.

210 LA. franhp: Jewish

The leader of Paris. It is the Lanterne that triumphs. At the banquet given by Mayer to celebrate this victory, so urgent deputies: Lockroy, Bourneville, Delattre, Dreyfus, Farcy, Forest, Yves Guyot, de Heredia, Hude, Lafont, from Lanessan, Pichon, Roque de Filhol, Benjamin Raspail, deputies of Paris; Beard, Colfavru, of Jouvencel, de Mortillet, Remoiville, Vergoin, deputies of Seine-et-Oise; Letellier, deputy of Algiers; Brousse, deputy of Pyrénées-Orientales; Jullien, deputy of Loir-et-Cher.

Do you know what Lockroy calls that conference defeated by blackmail in the House? Eminent director-author of the Lantern, my colleague and friend (1).

This is the moral level of the first elected official of Paris and he is born- It is necessary that all this be brought up so that we can explain ourselves later how France rolled so quickly into the fiasco (2).

Everyone is there. You know Anatole de la Forge.

(1) Lantern of October 27, 1883.

(2) This so-called reformer of Humanity, seems, moreover, Rostoll always lived hand in hand with all that there is of aspect in Paris. It seems, it is Wolff himself who tells us the made in the Figaro of October 31, 1885, that the pseudonym of Méphis-Topheles was once a pseudonym common to the first Chosen One of Paris and to the Prussian Jew. "It was Lockroy," said Wolff, "in his language always distinguished, who operated under this pseudonym in collaboration with me." Wolff doesn't want to be ungrateful to anyone ((who operated with him. Guess who he compares little Bobèche boulevardier? To the nephew of the great Emperor, to the heir of the name of Napoleon. "A special name was found for him, as was once done to designate Louis Napoleon, who was not a simple President of the Republic; he was called the Prince-Pre- " All these details, which go unnoticed by the rude today's public, will have flavor later, to put back the men of the day at their point, to see by whom we have been

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH POLITICS 2H

He is "a gallant lioname." All the newspapers say so and Ignotus repeats it (1). What is a gallant man to our time? There are thus, at the end of this century, words wandering, phantom words, floating in the air without settling nowhere, like those posthumous people that the English, vague forms of a vanished organization, calques gazeiforms of beings that have lived.

Is it enough, to be a gallant man, to be part of all fencing societies, like Anatole de la Forge, to be strong in arms and to be able, according to the expression of Dumas père, take a fairly fine counter of quarte for to pass through a young girl's ring? Certainly not. This expression seems to imply a particular delicacy—a particular level of awareness, a refinement in feelings, a kind of superfluity in honor. Isn't it mock the world than to allow oneself to be awarded, in all occasion, this title of "gallant man" and to call public-only my old friend, a blackmailer (2)? Isn't he

(1) In an article of November 26, 1884, Ignotus compared Ana-sheet of the Forge, the servile member of a complacent majority, to Charette! This is where a writer of undeniable value can arrive when he leaves, as Montaigne says: "Mortgage the freedom of his mind, "when he does not want to break with convention—tion, when he deals with the judgment of the boulevard instead of thinking resolutely by himself. I believe that deep down the true model of Ana-sheet of the Forge, it's Captain Bravida. You know, this captain who constantly twitched his formidable moustaches and who cried out in a thunderous voice: "I am Bravida, captain of clothing!"

(2) On October 24, 1884, Anatole de la Forge wrote to Eugene Mayer:

"My dear Mayer,
K Your two articles in yesterday's Lantern, about the distri-prizes of the first regional shooting competition, make the most great honor to your character. They do not surprise me, panse

212 JEWISH FRANCE

no shame when you get appointed, for a short time
It is true, president of the League of Patriots, to congratulate a Jew from Cologne who pours on officers every day
French the vile insults of which I gave a sample—

We are far from this Titgenhund {Association of the virtue), where the Steins, the Scharnhorsts, the Bluchers, the Arndt, the young stoves and the old generals are preparing—would free Germany from the yoke of Napoleon.

One cannot take a step in this rotten society, without impostures and lies starting to appear run under your feet like those rats that scamper past you when you walk through the scenery store of some old theater. Everything is false. You think you have before you a temple, a palace, a cottage, it is a frame painted with a broom. You think you are in the presence of a man representing an idea, actually having the character attributed to him, scrutinize not only private life, but public acts and you discover that he is only a clown who plays a role, who has only one desire, to be re-elected deputy and who will dishonor himself a thousand times over to achieve this result.

I know that you are a firm republican and an ardent patriot.
"To you from the heart,

"Your old friend,
to Anatole de la Forge. »

This gentleman, moreover, appears to be completely affiliated with the gang. Jewish. We see him protesting against the sending of V Anti-Semitic, that his duty was to read as a deputy, to get up to speed—of one of the most important questions of the time. In the month, of October 1884, when he reports on his mandate to his electors tors, in the Grand Orient, he has two Jews as assessors, Bloch and airsich.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 213

The most astonishing, however, of all journalists singers, it's Simia. Simia, frankly speaking, is a phe-special nomenon at the time. No century has produced a type of low corruption comparable to that, no century will ever happen. The modern Jew is embodied entirely in this hybrid and singular being.

One day the Queen of Romania asked Blowitz, who had inaugurated the lightning train, to which country it belonged. <(My God, Your Majesty, replied the Jew, I don't know anything about it, I was born in Bohemia and I live in France where I write in English. (he could have added for the pleasure of Prussia). As a cosmopolitan, WolfT is even more complete; he has gender. This neutral, again, is a unique product which does not fit into any existing classification.

Baslien-Lepage painted this mixture of amphibian and antropolithecus and the portrait appeared to be a likeness. Each, indeed, one day or another on the boulevard, glimpsed this strange creature that reminds us of those fat people that we see in some houses with bonnets flowers on misshapen heads, breasts dangling in cardirty missoles and a truly comic solemnity in the accomplishment of their mission. Of these foreign matrones, Simia has the engaging and sinister smile, he has them also the prudish way of speaking of good tenaked from the house of letters discussing the questions dirty things that attract him preferably.

We must do with the pen what Bastien-Lepage has done with the brush. This work, indeed, would not be not complete if Wolff were not included. We have^ for guide, moreover, one of the most characteristic productionsques of this time, the monument erected by a young Jew literary to this Jew who arrived: Albert Wolff, story of a Parisian chronicler, by Gustave Toudouze.

914 JEWISH FRANCE

Like many of his fellow press members, Wolii was born in Cologne and it was not until 1857 that this Uhlan of the journalism deigned to come and eat our bread by preparing our invasion. Kugelmann brought him in ^wFigaro^W^ shone quickly What we call "the Parisian spirit, X) I have it already explained, is something artificially created by the Jews and it is natural that those who coin this slang are those who speak it best.

At that time WolIT was not expensive. For five louis lentSjil overwhelmed you with a thousand compliments, it is true that when it came to giving back he would cover you with invectives.

A poor man, named Guinou, who lacked philosophy in the face of insults, brought his case before the tribunaux. Gambetta, who pleaded for his co-religionist, attested the all-powerful gods that had never been understood so that Wolff the dignity of the press.

The judges who, in those backward days, still had prejudices, were not of this opinion and on Friday 29 de-December 1865 the criminal police court rendered this stop which is one of the beautiful jewels of this existence that probity.))

Whereas the newspaper Le Figaro published, in its issue of last Thursday, November 22, an article entitled: A tra-towards Paris^ beginning with these words: "The world of letters" ei ending with these: "gave me thirty-five gold armchairschest, » signed Albert Wolff;

Whereas the first six paragraphs of the article in question-tion contain the most insulting expressions and impumost defamatory statements against the complainant; that he is especially funny, miserable, Vereutoan businessman,

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 21 0

of vaudeville swindler, joining to the trickery of the usurer the bas-the servant's presence, bearing on his face the traces of all these shames, giving himself up in the evening, after having reaped on his way the disgust that it inspires, to the study of the penal code to know exactly what he can do without falling into the police net; not having of friends that two or three resorts who sometimes agree to sit sit at his table, but who say to themselves when leaving: "Can we go-to be a scoundrel like we just did?" as it is reported there, in furthermore, as making the business of buying receivables on unfortunate writers, to acquire at a low price the vaudevilles of young people dying of hunger, yet daring to come and sit at the among the writers he strips;

Finally, whereas the fact recognized as constant against Wolff is all the more inexcusable since, a few weeks before, the 2 November, he was on almost friendly terms with Guinon, whom he treated him as dear sir in several letters ending with these words: "Compliments or a thousand compliments," letters in the-that he was requesting a new extension for the payment of a debt of one hundred francs, the recovery of which was entrusted to Guinon, engaged-keeping his word that everything would be settled before October 22 and that it is obvious that Wolff, in writing and publishing the arti-
the above-analyzed key, gave in to a feeling of personal revenge caused by the seizure of his property on October 25, at the playwrights' cash register and at the newspaper cash register Figaro;

Sentences Wolff to six days in prison and Wolff and Jouvin (I) jointly and severally liable to a fine of three hundred francs.

For me, I find it very valuable, for the study of life modern French, these details which show us well re-evolution of the foreign character among us.

Go to Germany, try to borrow a hundred francs there.

I spent, like any traveler, my fifty francs

(1) It is unnecessary to point out that Mr. Jouvin, who is a writer very honorable, only appears there as manager.

216 JEWISH FRANCE

per day in Cologne without people having parted with a cold politeness. In England, we close the carriage doors—res when it rains to prevent passers-by from taking shelter there—ter. The Jew of Cologne finds here all the facilities for live and his first concern is to insult the native, to him to lavish unpleasant epithets and names of me—swimming (1).

Do we dare to do to this insulter what he did to the others, he raises his arms to the sky and declares that those who dare attacking him are infamous and slanderers.

You have heard of Mr. Marchai de Bussy and these unfortunate French heads are so incapable of having a personal idea, they accept judgements so easily—all made up of Jewish press material , which you may be watching to be this man as a scoundrel. In reality, there is no a word should be said in all that has been written on this matter of Inflexible.

I

(1) This is the sign of the Jew. Our workers literally suffer hunger; there is not a day when you are not accosted by a man, whose physiognomy is honest despite the rags that cover him; He says to you, holding out his hand: "I give you my word that This is the first time this has happened to me, look at my booklet, I please, and you will see that I have always worked. The Jews of Paris have persuaded us, through their lamentations, to do still a place in this ruined home to the Israelites of Rus—sie. Do you know what these foreigners spend their first money on? GTgné by them in France? To applaud the assassination of a Frenchman! These people, on whom the Rothschilds wanted to soften us by claiming that they had been subjected to violence, are not in—core sitting that they warmly approve the most criminal of violence. We have all been able to read, in the Cry of the People of February 16—February 1886, this significant mention:

The society of Russian-Israeli workers, residing in Paris, sends, with his contribution, V expression of his deep sympathy to the avengers of

This book is full of promises and projects, I say every moment: "Later, I will do this, I will do this," mentally adding, what I always added Victor Hugo when he spoke of the future: Deo volente. risk of repeating myself, I must write e^icore: "More Later, I will write a brochure on Marchai de Bussy. for sure, it will be moving and piquant, it will make you cry, If I don't lack talent, all those who have a soul.

We put back on the lapis, about the prince of Polignac, the question of bastards. In which man does the fatality of bastard- Does tardiness appear more tragic than in this son of Philippe? Dupin? When he came into the world, Dupuytren, the friend of the family, pulled out the poor child's brains in pieces and, Throughout his life he remained unbalanced, incomplete. A hostile fairy seemed to have cursed him from birth and with the gifts the rarest, a stunning mind, an exquisite distinction when he wanted, a generous heart, he ended miserably an existence that was almost continually troubled.

Without doubt, in this agitated existence, there were de-failures, however superior Ikissy was in everything Albert Wolff, but the unfortunate man's great misfortune is of having belonged from afar to the conservative party, of having written books against the Jews, notably a Life of Judas, which has some very vibrant pages, to have taken the defense of the Church. Like those soldiers who go to collect under the bullets the bodies of their comrades, the revolutionaries de-split the corpses of their own, whoever they may be. The preserve-vators don't just not defend, they trample and they spit on those who have fallen.

It is impossible to imagine what it is like, in such conditions, the struggle of a single man against an entire nation. See II 13

^S JEWISH FRANCE

V Anti-Semitic. The Hachette bookstore, which has a monopoly stations, refuses to take charge of its numbers; the^joste misplaces his/ copies; he rents an office in Paris, 1, rue from Provence, a German Jew, a large tenant, gives him leave; he deposits his collections with a dealer, we makes the merchant sell by authority of justice and, in contempt by all rights, we understand, in the sale, collections

At a given moment, the unfortunate man thus hunted does not know no longer distinguish his friends from his enemies; he insults the former, he trusts in others. Then the disease that we call The persecution delusion is naturally grafted onto the very lucid, very exact, very reasonable notion of a very real persecution suffered. The Jewish and Frankish doctor-mason, who is at the right point, confuses everything and defames the dying, claiming that he had lost his mind because that he was drinking. /<cc^/S^ r^ ■^i-^^'^A^^ "yt^y^^

Sometimes even, without the Jew getting involved, a sensitized person, brother of the one you met earlier, acts alone.

— Ah! What a bandit this Marchai is! When you think what a man he had the audacity to insult — This man was weak, no doubt, a peacemaker, he had respected everyone; poorly organized for the fight, he was no match for himself.

— Yes, sir, that's right.

—And what is the name of this moaning turtledove without strength against the talons of a hideous vulture?

— Mr. Henri Rochefort!

In both sensitized people, imbecility is an infirmity physiological; they experience, in the emotional apparatus, the disorder that others experience in the musculoskeletal system.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY If 9

The first, instead of being moved by the ruined French on the Stock Exchange by the Rothschilds, speaks, on the contrary, with a grotesque admiration, of the owners of this immense fortune. The second, instead of pitying the writer, who has started an unequal fight against an opponent a thousand times better armed than him, is even indignant that someone dared to attack to the terrible pamphleteer, who spent his life attacking the others, who overthrew, by sarcasm, an Emperor and a Dictator.

Both are depraved in feeling, accentuating still the dominant note of the time: a flattening of lackeys before anything that has the appearance of strength. Again today, very young people, who don't know a word of the question, come to dirty insult a poor person volumes, some of which are not without value. The Clairon, where Armand Yvel reigned, hiding there, for the edification of the Catholic clientele, the name too significant of Armand Levy, vomited on this dead man, some time before disappearing himself. That the Bugle, who held close to the boulevard did not dare to rent Marchai, this is understands; but why not keep silent? What harm, I pray you, has done to the cause that Cornély defends the man who wrote: Why I was a republican and why I am not anymore, the RegicideSj Marie-Magdeleine 9 What souls have been corrupted by reading the Philosophers in the pillory; courtesans become saints, V History of His Holiness PielX, Let's Save the Pope!

Little by little a legend is formed under the influence of the Jews who play the role of scribes in certain societies primitives, who alone write history and who write it in their own way. The death of Mr. Marchai de Bussy, in April-

220 JEWISH FRANCE

1870, did not prevent a newspaper from including it in the massacre of the Roquette hostages.

Although the whole press, as was to be expected, had taken the side of the German Jew against the French, the Vlnflexihle's campaign was not a good one for WolffT. The Court, given the legislation on defamation, could not be insensitive to his complaints, but when he knew some edifying peculiarity of the habits of this a singular man of letters, he allocated him only this that it was not possible to refuse him: Twenty sous. It was a lot; and even today, although the price of everything has increased, I hardly see a court, even if it were composed exclusively of Jews and Freemasons, who would venture to estimate Wolff's honor beyond of a small crown.

Threatened with expulsion following so many scandals, Wolff had proudly replied: (L If anyone dared to touch me, I would return at the head of three hundred thousand men. three hundred thousand men came and some others too with, but Wolff, who has always professed holy horror fighting, was not with them. - He appeared when all was finished.

It is in the panegyric of Toudouze that we must read the story of this return. Everything is pretty in there. There is the episode Bourgoing, which is a pearl. During the war, Wolff was in Vienna where Mr. Bontoux, the enemy of the Jews, as Tyrol, ten thousand francs which he would certainly have refused to a Christian. If you had been part of the embassy of France, you would have obviously said to yourself: "Here is a Prussian to whom I will avoid entrusting the affairs of my country." Wolff himself seems to have understood it this way.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 221

So he went through the city, says the biographer, fleeing the French, almost ashamed, when he unexpectedly met with Mr. de Bourgoing, First Secretary of the French Embassy. He immediately came to the journalist and asked him why, since he was in Vienna, he did not come like the year previous, to visit his friends at the embassy.

The chronicler, very moved, replied that, in the circumstances current, fearing a painful reception, he had not dared.

– Come then, replied M. de Bourgoing graciously, you are a friend to us and our feelings towards you are not changed in nothing.

The editor of Le Figaro then went to the embassy where he was welcomed with open arms and where he could now come every day to inquire about the progress of the war–

After the spectacle of this embassy secretary going himself to look for a Prussian Jew who does not ask him nothing, to tell him our affairs, it would seem that it would be necessary pull the ladder, let's be careful. It's the return to Paris which is curious to see.

It is undeniable that the Prussians had a service admirably organized espionage, almost as well organized than that which functioned under Napoleon I, time when there was still a France. The men, who had thus informed them, must have been intimately mixed up in French life, having had access everywhere. It seemed so it is quite natural to do to the real Prussians, to the Prussians his own proven, to those who had fought us frankly–ment, the chivalrous and gallant welcome that we had did the Russians after Aima, the Austrians after Solferino, and at the same time to challenge those who had shown an equivocal friendship.

22 JEWISH FRANCE

) The French of decadence did the exact opposite. They in deplorable taste in front of the Germans who had them defeated as they themselves had once conquered Europe; They rolled at the feet of those who had betrayed them.

Good Schnerb, as a Jew, was the first, Mr. Toudouze always teaches us, to declare that Wolff was the model of the patriots; all followed this example. The interview between Gondinet and Wolff is a scene from boulevard customs which clearly indicates the level of in-current intelligence. Wolff, here again, seems to have had more of delicacy than the French; the first time he came dinner at Brébant's he didn't dare show himself. He was there, dining alone, in secret, in his study, when one knocked on the door, "The boy came to inform him that a passant, whom he did not know, having learned that Mr. Albert Wolff was back and having dinner there, asking to see him.

<(The door opened, and, arms outstretched, eyes moist, The newcomer walked towards Wolff. "Gondinet!"

Isn't this kneeling before Wolff complete, in the still distant hope of an advertisement, of a man who, after Dumas and Sardou, is at present one of the triumphant on the French scene?

I am wrong to blacken so many pages to write history. psychological of my time, this story could be written in five words: This century is frighteningly cowardly.

It is a perpetual lie that is resorted to for to conceal this universal cowardice. There is not a word of what is written that is not an offense to the truth. Among these writers, who speak at every moment of patriotism, not not one person had the idea of doing what I did, of going to the Ministry of Justice to ensure whether this Prussian, whom they receive-are worth in the midst of them, in front of which they conversed openly about everything, had kept his word, if he had naturalized vaincic.

JEWISH PARTS AND THE FRENCH SOCIETY S?1

Or never WolffCa was naturalized French; jamaig he did not ask to be. By a decree of May 7, 1872, "Mr. Wolff (Abraham, known as Albert) was authorized to establish his domicile in France. " This authorization places him, it is true, under a regime of tolerance; he can make civil acts, that is to say grocery or food businesses beautiful letters without being exposed to being expelled, but, I repeat, he was never naturalized French, - which

And it is this Prussian who treats our gentlemen with contempt when a scandal occurs, who speaks in the name of art national, which reprimands masters who, for fear of Figaro, don't dare put this man in his place!

Thanks to Le Figaro, Wolff works in the artistic world the terror that Eugène Mayer exerts in the political world—that. The improbable Turquet cites this Prussian as an authority in a solemn speech. I have seen painters, valiant artists whose legs trembled literally be them when this hideous puppet passed by in front of their paintings in the days preceding the opening-ture of the SyJon.

The writers, who welcomed among them, at Le Figaro, this blackmailer, are they like him? Are they therefore able to cover with invectives in their articles a man guilty only of demanding a hundred francs from them? Certainly not. Francis Magnard is a skeptic but a fine scholar, very helpful. Saint-Genest was a brave soldier before being a journalist, who has courage, rarer than one does not believe, to repeat the same thing a hundred times to try to

224— JUVENILE FRANCE

to engrave it in the frivolous minds of its readers. Saint-Albin is an accomplished gentleman who has only one weakness, that is of not wanting us to talk about serious things in the Sport: "It would sadden our subscribers," he said. The baron de Platel, Léon Lavedan, Racot, are men of a perfect respectability; they suffer Wolff because this miserable is imposed on them by the Jews.

If an unfortunate Christian had done a quarter of what If this Jew did, Christians would not have enough anathemas against him; the Jews, on the contrary, support and defend their coreligionist.

For Israel, Wolff's literature is a pre-solvent heavens.

There are treasures in this literature. Against a background remained Teutonic and onlookers burst out rockets of Jewish pride naive in his cynicism. What a vision Wolff, a replacement alone the former court of the Marshals, judges of honor in delicate matters I The great circles have it consulted on the case of Mr. de la Panouze, unfortunate husband of the Jewish Heilbronn, and he weighs his verdict at length. "Is there a crime? Yes and no. Young man, rehabilitate—

"My dear father-in-law!"

Everything that a man of good company ordinarily avoidsmentary touch is a pretext for Wolff to spread-long. The coffin has not yet been nailed shut Gabrielle Gautier, let him tell you in depth about this false household, that he tells us roughly what no one asks him-said and that he tells us that this dead woman was the mistress of a Jew who was half a slideshow maker and half a playwright name of Ernest Blum. This Blum, who takes advantage of the opportunity to have an announcement made on the corpse of his com-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 220

loincloth, rises up with indignation, in the Reminder^ against the weaknesses of a Henri IV or a Louis XIV.

But it is Sarah Bernhardt who inspires Wolff the most happily. The Figaro columnist blesses the child, â blesses the husband, he blesses the mother, he compares her "to an angel which has spread its wings over art, and it spares us nothing on the inside of the Damala household. He opens the night table, he spreads the sheets at the window with a wink both distressing and lewd, which Gérôme lent to one of his characters. When you read this abroad, in three front page columns, among peoples who already share our spoils, nausea rises in your stomach lips. How men, like those we Let's speak louder, don't they protest against this filth?
How do they not think that their newspaper is almost the only one that we consult outside and that one can see all this shame falls on themselves?

There are, moreover, five or six of them in Paris, five or six puffists, always the same, which constitute real plagues of Egypt. They even take away its poetry from the universal sadness, which is everywhere at the moment, they prevent this world, which feels itself disappearing, to return to itself to finish decently. They are always on the move, incessantly-ment on the poster, continually occupying Paris with their noisy and vain personality; they attract each other and serve as echoes to each other. Sarah Bernhardt cannot take a step without Wolff blowing the trumpet; Arthur Meyer immediately gets involved; Marie Colombier intervenes and it's such a racket that you can't hear yourself anymore. When you think you're calm, Deroulède shows himself and, shortly after, Ms. Adam turns the city upside down to organize some party.

II la.

Jewish neurosis, of course, has a large part to play in this trepidation, it is not natural, in fact, that one cannot to rest and leave the others there. For these enthusiasts of advertising, even sleep seems not to exist, they think they are dead when they no longer hear any noise around them two.

On these particular states of mind, which reveal a disorder indisputable in the nervous system, one will consult until-Léon du Saulle who, in his book Vilystérie has seen and described well the sick side of these demonstrations-tions. The learned doctor explains very clearly how the virtues themselves have become, for these theatrical beings, an opportunity to appear, to be on stage. Charity is no longer this movement of the heart which pushes us to take-dream about our excess, sometimes about our necessity, to discreetly place an offering in the hand of the one who suffers; it is a charlatan act that one accomplishes with a large orchestra, calling the crowd with bass drums cash register so that she comes to look at you, it's a triumph of this ostentation that Bessuet calls the plague of good works.

Among those who push this monomania of publicity far-quoted, M^{re} Adam comes immediately after Sarah Bernhardt. I know the care that we must take with sex and I would not have beware of missing out. It seems to me necessary, however, to to include in this book this curious individuality without to be very original at heart, which held a certain place in recent years.

Is she Jewish? I don't know. The last name is not There is no specific indication here. Lambert, the husband of a Piotlischild, is Jewish, General Lambert also.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 527

but there are the Lamberts who are not Jewish. Edmond Adam, in any case, was one of the successful eclipses of the Jewish politician and financier, from the Jewish Jew of Jui-verie, emancipator of people and maker of millions. When she spoke about it in the Jewish newspapers, Mrs. Adam willingly called her husband "the chivalrous Edmond Adam. » How was he chivalrous? He is still a of these problems that we will not take care of re-to solder.

In our old chroniclers, as in Homer of the leave more; they serve to recognize and to paint a character. For Villehardoin, Conon de Béthune is always Conon mult bien seize^ Dandolo, the doge aveugle, is always the old man who tastes does not see. 11 in is thus in certain Parisian circles. Likewise that Anatole de la Forge is still such a gallant man, even when he approves of stealing a poor man's bread 80-year-old priest Déroulède is still "the patriotic Déroulède, "Delpit" our friendly colleague. Adam was "the chivalrous Adam."

Involved in the affairs of the Discount Counter, this man chivalrous hardly proved his chivalry except by acquiring-making an enormous fortune, thanks to the Mexican expedition. How could such a pure republican be involved in what we called "imperial shames?" It would be necessary not to not know the party to think of being surprised by it. It is for fatten the Jews that our soldiers succumb to, under the Republic, typhoid fever in Tunisia or cholera in Tonkin; under the Empire, they succumbed to vomito negro in Mexico - that's the whole difference. The mass is trained for that, moreover. A man of self-denial, a rescuer, a devoted servant of the disinherited would have present to the elections against Edmond Adam, that the workers would not have wanted it. The people are always fooled by the Democratic Jew who deceives him with fine words and who enriches himself at her expense; he loves her, it's his madness, France dies, it is our misfortune.

228 JEWISH FRANCE

Adam entered Sheol, his widow, who had put a a kind of halo around this clever nothingness only for her own interests, thought of haloing herself. Robert de Bonnières showed her to us making incantations to Gambella and announcing to him that all the clubs were out, which is, as we know, a sign of money. It is through this that she took all these atheists, superstitious at heart as Cafres; she was like a sort of younger Cailhava and posed in the party telling people's fortunes who had no destiny.

She was really beautiful then, she had a way of living room, which delighted all these bohemians who had never been only at the tavern. She appeared to all this Jewry triumphant, with the air of the Queen of Sheba. If she had not not, like Flaubert's charmer, "a bro- dress card divided regularly by frills of pearls, jet and sapphires, enhanced with color applications that very well dressed. For a moment she hoped to marry Salomy then in all its glory; but Gambetta did not testify that a mediocre eagerness and she did not want, and she was right, of this big Jeroboam Spuller.

This happy time seems to have passed. When the opportunism was on the decline, M^{'''} Adam tried in vain to go give performances abroad. This Parisian puffismhis, these boyish looks are not objects of exportation. In Russia, the tsar and tsarina refused, with an energy that is understandable, to receive the widow of the Jew revolutionary^ who had contributed to throwing his adopted homeland-tion in disorder and anarchy. During his trip to Vienna, in the month of March 4884, M^{'''} Adam found all the doors closed; of all the Austrian aristocracy, that she imagined herself, no doubt, quite ready to open her doors to him arms, she could only see the Rothschilds where she dined. The French embassy, which had opened all large in Wolff, in 1870, was hospitable to the traveler. M^{'''}6 Adam sat at Foucher de Careil's table, "alone candidate decorated by the hand of the Emperor" who, before the war, went from newspaper to newspaper bringing us news small advertisements for his conferences on Boulevard des Capucinas. This memory stayed with me, because at Liberty, it was mine, as a newcomer, who was reserved the duty of receiving this annoying periodic, which returned with regularity of an epidemic, and that the boys knew about it not.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 229

The reception seemed thin to the director of the New Arthur Meyer's Revue and Gaul showed just that crumpled; he would have liked "banquets of three hundred covered, torchlit walks through the illuminated streets, people marching with banners head, enthusiastic ovations. " What do you want! Bis-Marck and M^{'''} Adam are at their worst, no one is unaware of it^ and Germany had threatened to send three hundred thousand hom- *mes at the border if Vienna abandoned itself to demoon- too strong reactions. Austria obeyed "the order of Berlin. » She organized around Ms. Adam – the enemy-Bismarck's death – the conspiracy of silence. We have well kept from speaking of the author of Greek and Pagan for fear of displeasing the vindictive Chancellor i> {\),

230 JEWISH FRANCE

pick like tasty fruits grown in greenhouses hot from advertising, to set them like pearls which will remind our nephews how much we were able to movequer of us.

Faced with the indifference of peoples and cabinets,
M^m6 Adam withdrew into herself. The blue stocking prevailed over the queen, but the blue stocking at Mrs. Adam's has never been anything but cotton. It's neither Corinne, nor Sapho, nor Lélia, it's not even Olympe Audouard. This Muse, in reality, is indeed departmental; there is at Turcaret, which painted Barbey d'Aurevilly, like a memory of Hermance Lesguillon, the woman of letters of 1830 wearing socks and an umbrella to strike the barbarians who remain-would turn cold in front of his prose.

Api ^3 having dreamed of governing Europe, the director d'UiXî ilfuteq, which we read as little as possible, is reduced to to >5try the effect of his manuscripts on a small circle of invities, false novelists, false poets, false scholars, that the satisfactions of the stomach have prepared for the indulgences of the spirit; she has, for them, a town house for the winter and country house for the summer. Blanche of Castile founded the abbey of Vaux-de-Cernay so that Mrs. Nathaniel de Rothschild could buy it with our money and live there as-moderately. I don't know which other sovereign built the abbey from Gif, where M^m® Adam, as a cheerful baker, makes people dance the Mexican Loan coins. What is certain is that that we are very well there. We take guests into our homes, we

(1) Gaulish of April 9, 1884.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 231

transport them by mail coach, we water them and we fed; in the evening we bring them back after recording their full names, in order to include them in the the next day's newspapers. The column even says that departure we give, to those that Pagan has moved, the round coin to go to Mélissandre's.

What will the ending be? I admit it worries me a little.
There is a mark, not tragic, but bad-happy, on this woman towards whom Fortune seems to have exhausted his smiles and I have been unable to retaken to defend myself from this painful impression. Perhaps will we see M^m^^ Adam, on some fifth floor of the rue Goquenard, still playing the big game and offering to the Abeille de Lonjumeau some novel of which this journal

We understand the melancholic feeling in front of these spectacles word of de Leuven.

—It's very boring to die, he said, but I almost consoles me, thinking that I will not hear again speak neither of Sarah Bernhavdt, nor of the great Frenchman!

How is it that Mr. de Lesseps does not understand not that it dishonors a life that was beautiful and hard-working, all in all, by this unbridled sycophancy? For—why bother getting your children involved in all these financial claims? cières, constantly exhibiting these poor little ones, as in Pelez's painting, have each person describe their nursery moment?

How would the Corps of Engineers welcome someone? who would bring him a volume of verses? In what capacity Mr. de Lesseps presents himself to the French Academy, by the unique reason he dug a canal?

At Mr. de Lesseps' age everything is excusable; but that

23-2 JEWISH FRANCE

think of Mr. Pailleron who pays his welcome to the Academy by helping him? There was something that imposed still esteem in this little corner of France, reserved to letters, where politics sometimes penetrated, but where the money matters were unknown, where good deeds were only those that were reported for the price of virtue. Under the pretext that his Panamas would ride up when we would see on the broadcast announcements: Mr. de Lesseps, "member of the French Academy," Mr. Pailleron did not had no rest until he had mixed up in stock market operations noble institution of the past. Here is Mr. de Lesseps admitted, tomorrow it will be Mr. de Soubeyran or Mr. Lebaudy; a value will fall or rise depending on whether the director of the company will be received or rejected at the Mazarin Palace. When we are embarrassed in the discussion of the famous dictionary, we will ask Pingard to go to Mazas to seek the advice of some member in town—giature in this prison for distribution of dividends fictitious.

What a magnificent role the Academy could have played, however: represent in this general shipwreck the respect of all that which had constituted old France, to encourage with his approbation, to increase by his suffrage those who had remained faithful to a generous ideal, and, to put it simply,

She's pretty, the French girl! She's going to take the hand accomplice of Offenbach, the Jew who, after having obeyed his race in disguise, to the bursts of laughter of the crowd, the pure ^ creations of the Aryan genius of Greece, worked conscientiously-devotedly for Prussia by teaching soldiers to I insult their generals, mocking the panache of the leader who /L once floated above the frays like a sign of

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 233

rallying, the saber of the fathers which, brandished in the charges heroic, has so many times saved the Fatherland (1).

The demoralizing work, I admit, is successful and truly Jewish. The man who wrote it was aware and knew of what it was all about. The words of 4867 seem as many

(1) A great Christian who, after having been an intrepid soldier, became a first-rate speaker, told us the impression that he had experienced when hearing the memory of General Boum mentioned suddenly in 1870 in the retreat of Saint-Avold on Metz. We were walking at night, in the sadness of present defeat, with apprehension of the disaster that was felt to be coming. The heads of the columns of the regiments merged with the generals' staff. Suddenly, an old colonel, who had been furious since the beginning of the cam-loincloth, began to talk about the Jews, Halévy, Offenbach, the Great Duchess, to curse the histrions and mockers who had learned to France to despise the flag. What response to the choice of the Academy that this conversation on the road to Metz!

This march, moreover, deeply struck all those who were there. It is mentioned in the journal of the siege of Metz, that the painter Protais wrote and that he does not want to publish yet. The short fragment, which the author was kind enough to communicate to us, is truestrikingly:

"We are leaving. The night is gray. Large clouds are running over a pale sky. The moon is completely veiled. At times it falls a light, cold rain. We follow in step, silently, hooded in our coats, the road to Metz, lined with large poplars, which outline their long black silhouette on the sky. No other noise than the dull sound of our horseshoes on the wet ground. To our left, in the distance, the pale glow of the fires of bivouacs. Not a word, not a gesture; from time to time a horse that stumbles. We walk like this, each one absorbed in his own thoughts. I don't know who my neighbor is. It's really sinister We pass through a village; the horses' hooves resoundon the pavement. A few windows light up, open, and a riders. We pass and here we are again on the road. The fires are nothing more than vague whiteness far away. I deeply saddened, I think of those of us who may- to be dying. This night seems never to end. The day seems finally, sunless, gray, gloomy, freezing, but it's day! We're getting back-forecasts for 1870. General Boum, who declares that the art of war consists of "cutting and enveloping, y> ra- tell us in advance our misfortunes and it is indeed our poor ar- which goes "by three paths to a single point where she should focus."

234 JEWISH FRANCE

Undoubtedly, the Variety audience is hardly ac- transferable to very high feelings and yet, to the re- taken, when we heard the clown, who represented the general Boom, shout: "Who is the enemy? 2) there was everything Suddenly there was a great silence. For a minute, in this room full of these gummies, these scholarship holders, these actors, which make up what is called the Whole of Paris, stood the specter of invasion and the painful ghost of defeat. We see our generals questioning the horizon of this France again. whose paths they did not know, our regiments always surprised and our unfortunate soldiers falling by thousands under the bullets without knowing where they came from.

If we had asked one of the girls in plaster casts who were there what she thought of this work which seemed destined to to extinguish in advance every valiant flame in hearts, she would have cried out: "She is vile! y> Camille Roussel, the learned historian, Alexandre Dumas, the author of the beautiful Letters from Junius Sardou, the author of the moving drama of Patrie jOni says: "This work is beautiful and rewards us- We are the author by granting him an honor that has not been obtained nime; we're getting a little closer to each other. The rain has stopped. We light cigars and cigarettes, and talk in low voices as if we feared to disturb the peace of this sick country. Before us the silent generals march. The news is bad. Far away to be victorious, Marshal Mac-Mahon would be in complete disarray, but we don't know anything positive.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 235

neither Balzac, nor Veillot, nor Gautier, nor Proudhon, nor Paul de Saint-Victor (1).

the summit of Niederwald the proud statue of Germania,
The Academy wanted to sing the Pean in its own way; it has-summoned to mingle with the trio of Boum, Puck and the Prince Paul and in a slightly shaky voice she intoned:

He will be defeated,
He will be beaten.
His artillery,
His cavalry,
His infantry,
All this will be,
I can already see it,
Crushed, brushed,

Broken, scattered

And in the paths,
And in the ravines,
He will leave some,
He will forget some;
We will pursue him,
We will hunt him down.
And the enemies
From our country,
They will enter cheerfully
And will spread

(1) The dramatic authors have at least the excuse that they voted for one of their own, but what about a man of the vatheir and the character of the Duke of Broglie, who was master of reelection?
He was left free, out of deference, to choose who would be in charge to praise his brother-in-law, Count d'Haussonville, and this A sincere Christian, this eminent writer dismissed candidates like Mr. Oscar de Vallée; he insisted that this funeral oration be pro-announced by a low-level buffoon, who had turned into a ridicule everything that makes a nation honor.

T>\ JEWISH FRANCE

They will burn everything,

Will plunder everywhere

It will be well done 1
From the choice she made
This will be the effect!
And we, rejoicing,
Seeing this mess,
We, unable to take it anymore,

The point that must always be clearly seen is hypocrisy, the lie, the convention which are the stamp, the stigmata of the time. The academics, in fact, are not honestly and frankly playful, they speak solemnly—ment, they declare that talent is not enough to enter to the Academy, that good use must still be made of this talent.

They are told:

"It is therefore making good use of one's talent to rattle, with all sorts of juicy details, the story—still very Jewish, by the way—of a mother who sells her offspring, like M^{me} Cardinal, of a father who lives in comfort at the expense of her daughter's lover? So this is it literature that you offer as an example to young people people?))

They imitate the venerable old men who are just surprised coming out of the wrong place and who, a little out of breath by the exercise they have just undertaken, are waiting for some—a few moments before having resumed, with their breath, the attitude of big official days or family gatherings.

Then they decide to whisper: "Yes, sir, the Academie is a big body, we like te[^]iiiiie, we de—let us commission works which excite patriotism, which elevate hearts: Sursum corda! »

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 237

As an example of Sursum corda! we must remember this which happened at the time of Victor Hugo's funeral. Nothing better shows the degradation in which the Academic fell. It was Mr. Maxime du Camp who, as of acting director, was to be in charge of the speech of use and it should be said that, very determined not to recover, he immediately prepared his speech by saying that he would pronounce it with two revolvers in his pocket. The discourse, let us add, was a complete eulogy of the poet that Mr. Maxime du Camp admires more than anyone.

The Academy, the first literary body of France, is aff—fola in front of the threats of a few cabbage leaves spread—late and, deviating from all customs, she withdrew from Mr. Maxime of the Camp the right to speak on its behalf.

It was Mr. Emile Augier who was designated; there was no need to fear with him to displease the plebs. Former Parasite outlawed, insulter of Veuillot when he no longer had newspaper to answer him, he consoled himself that he did not have to ask, like the senators of ancient Rome, the placing among the gods of a Tiberius or a Caracalla in suffocating, under praises that sounded false, the poor man great genius whom the love of popularity had brought down from so high (1).

(1) We find there the eternal race of freedmen, idlers Opportunity against the poor, against those they believe to be weak, against those who refuse to bend the knee before idols and always ready to intone the litanies for the divine Emperor or the divine Marat.

"Claude Auguste, you are the model of brothers, fathers, friends, senators and princes (eighty times); Claude Auguste, deliver us from Auréolus (five times); Glnude Auguste, deli-

238 JEWISH FRANCE

This is why, while Morny's plagiarists are in the government, his servants enter the Academy.

The truth is that no one wants to be embarrassed, no one does not want to sacrifice his immediate advantage or his fancy to a general interest, no one wants to do their duty. Each betrays to the extent of his strength and in the sphere of its attributions. The Academy cannot deliver our arsenals since she does not have supervision over it, she delivers it to the Jews the deposit of honor in her custody, she capitulates as the Senate capitulated; it grants to a financier or to an operetta maker who is persona grata of the Rothschild, what she refused to Jules Lacroix, this great old man who was convinced of art, who wrote Oedipus the King Caesar's Testament, Valeria, the Youth of Louis XI, V Infamous Year, which brought King Lear and Hamlet to the stage, translated Horace and Juvenal.

Once again, people who shamelessly miss tell us about Zenobia and Victoria (seven times); Claude Auguste, that Tetricus be nothing (seven times).

To these litanies to Claudius the Gothic, which Trebellius PoUion has given us preserved, respond the litanies in honor of Marat; "Marat, the friend of the people, — Marat, the consolation of the afflicted, — Marat, the Father of the unfortunate, — Have pity on us!

adulation, our dear and glorious Victor Hugo, and that a republican, less servile than the others, ciugle in the face of this contemptuous word: "No overbidding!"

It is Renan, writing some time before: o Let us imagine a man about as sensible as Victor Hugo's heroes, a Mardi Gras character, a mixture of madman, Jocrisse and actor," and suddenly declaring, to please the crowd, that "Victor Hugo was created by a nominative decree of Providence, slum that other men were created only by a collective decree. This word, moreover, is invaluable; it is a lapidary word, a word late, a true senatorial word from the time of imperial Rome.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 239

and consciously to the mandate of literary justice, which implies that the functions with which they are invested, look at each other as the elite of the nation and they always have on their lips good advice for workers.

Halévy, moreover, will not stop there, he will be secretary perpetual The place is important. In reality, it is the secretary who calls the shots in the commissions, which guides the choices. Little by little, the Jew will eliminate all works that have a Christian and French accent and, without noise, without anyone noticing, imperceptibly, the Jewry will be the mistress at the Academy as everywhere (1).

A general hamming seems to have spread from the theatre to the society. Society, to put it better, has become an immense theater where everyone tries to draw attention to him by featuring himself on the poster in gigantic letter-tesques.

The theatre itself has taken on an abnormal importance, almost monstrous, which is explained by the sole fact that the Most of the famous directors and artists are Jewish. The profession of actor was to tempt the Jews; he reports much, indeed, it satisfied a certain subordinate vanity and it doesn't require any genius; they rushed on this career with real fury.

All the theaters in Paris are in the hands of the Jews, either

(1) The election of Eugène Manuel, who was running at the same time that Halévy, is only deferred. After him will come William Busnach, who put on the V Assommoir and AV theatre; "a. Eugène Manuel, inspector General of the University, has written nothing, at least, to mock our army or corrupt our country. This explains why we have synagogue on rue de la Viciuue and which, it is said, had a voice pleasant; he was born in the environs of Daritzick.

240 JEWISH FRANCE

by directors like Carvalho, Koning, Simon, Mayer, Maurice Bernhardt, Samuel, either by sponsors and associates like Godchau, long-time cheerleader, as well as the late David Cerf, of the Opera; either by secretaries-like Mendel, Derenbourg, Emile Abraham. The best-selling authors, the Halévys, the Millauds, the Hector Crémieux, the Decourcelles, the Dreyfus, the Blum, the Wolffs, are Jewish as was Mortier, a Hol-Landes native called Mortjer, who was the creator of the Parisian evening.

Jews also promote concerts and tours. artistic, the famous impressarii, the Colonne, the Maurice Strakosch, the Bernard Ulmanns, the Mayers of London, Schurmann, mahout of Madame Judic in Spain (1). It was a Jew still than this curious character who, without being nothing in appearance, was the law in the world of theaters. Darling, his name is Joseph Abraham.

The rather regrettable Vaucorbeil, whose wife was Jewish, and who had a Jewish brother-in-law, Mr. David, as-socialized with our pastoral Myrtil Hecht and populated the Academy of music of Jewish employees. The choirmaster is called Cohen, the singing leader Hector Salomon, the general manager-ral is a Mayer – another one!

Thanks to the radicals in the House, our unfortunate peasants bleed themselves dry so that a band

(1) This SchurtnaDn was not successful in his expedition and his grievances were echoed in all the newspapers. The mayors who, despite the Jewish invasion in the big cities, still have real blood of Spaniard in the veins, put him almost in prison, nothing than on his face, and it was necessary for the ambassador of Fraoce to intervene to deliver him, to which, you can well imagine, he set about with UQ unparalleled zeal.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 241

of Jews have each year one hundred thousand francs to distribute-to pay tribute. In Vienna, in Berlin, at the Pergola in Florence, at At La Scala in Milan, fifteen to twenty operas are put on every day year, we barely put one up at the Academy of Music, and our Republicans think that's excellent.

11 happened there, moreover, what happens everywhere where the Jews appear; they sow disorder and ruin on their way. The Opera which, since Abbé Perrin (1671) and LuUi, had always been about, abruptly stopped to walk as soon as the Jews got involved. It was same question of renting the room three times a week to a Italian impressario. We hear nothing but lamentations; he There is a cat in the throat of the coryphaeus, a toad in the ophicleides and a hair in the paper clips. We discovered—green a deficit of four hundred thousand francs in the cash register retirements, and seventy-year-old choristers continue to represent Sylphs, only because we are unable to pay their pension.

Most prominent artists are of Jewish origin; in otherwise, finding only hostility in the press, they would have achieved nothing and they would have been reduced to running around the provinces. The famous singers of our time have been famous above all because they come out—were from Jacob's family. The Stolz, the Patti, the Sass, Fidès Devriès, Rosine Bloch, Heilbronn, M^^^ Isaac were Jewish. Judic, named after her husband, Ms. Israel, Reichem—berg, M'i® Milly Meyer also belong to the Jewish world. We only hear about Solomon and Melchizedek as singers. Worms is the son of a butcher from the rue Vieille-du-Temple, which sold “kosher” meat. Is Van Zandt Jewish? In any case, she wasn't bap—

11

14

242 JEWISH FRANCE

Worn out, that's why the Rothschilds received it. at home, covered her with their protection, imposed on her found in Paris (1). She has, moreover, like Ms. Nevada, like Krauss^ the advantage of being foreign at one time where every French woman is severely ostracized. I still recalls the melancholy with which a young girl, that family setbacks had forced her to enter the theater, answered me one day that I spoke to him about his future: “Oh! I won't achieve anything, I'm French.”

Naturally, as long as Van Zandt was having dinner at the Rothschilds, she could not have anything comparable which laughter was allowed. It was a creature in some kind of supernatural. Miss Fauvette, M[^] Bengali. His venerable mother was not forgotten in the papers printed, we were shown her sitting to the right of the baron and we seemed to be told: "You don't have any mothers like that in France, we have to bring them from the e-foreigner (2). »

(1) As a 'contrast to the ridiculously prudish airs that towards the French men and women, Parisian society which opens wide in front of women who started in the ditches of Mainz or Gracovie, I have already noted (book!«■) the cordial welcome given by the Jews who arrived to the artistic bohemia of their race. Nothing significant like the ceremonial meal that was given, at the from February 1885, Alfred de Rothschild, of London, to Mayer the imprint-sario, to M^{'''} Hading and to Koning. You can see little Koning from here, the King of Diogenes and Castellano, Bibi the Jew, sitting next to him of a colonel of the outer guards, who fits admirably into the decor, Mr. Damala, adds the Figaro correspondent, could not miss at the party; he was sitting between Sir Richard Wilson and Captain Finch.

(2) A regular at Princess Riancovan's salon told me that when Van Zandt was there, the guests were embarrassed, observing each other were going and did not dare to say in front of this lily of candor what was au-would say in front of women of their world. Some meaning

\

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 243

The surprise was therefore violent when, at the premiere of the Barbier, M[^] Van Zandt revealed himself to the assembled crowd in a completely unexpected light.

My readers already know me well enough to know that I am too French to share the pose grotesque of this All of Paris which speaks of the theater as a church, which makes solemnity about trestles. Had the boulevard accuse me of lacking moral sense, I admit frankly, that an actress, who drank a glass of Too much champagne and who presents himself with his hairstyle a little crooked, nothing that shocks me unduly. M^e Laguerre greatly amused an audience, which was not exclusively composed of rastasquouères like today, when instead of playing Vlphigénie en Tauride, she played, according to Sophie Arnould, Vlphigénie en Chamloincloth. Tdiurdiishienwanted to be there when Frederick, in front of a whole screaming room, advanced in front of the blowhole-blew his nose in it...

It seems, however, that that evening Miss Van's plume Zandt was tall and truly excessive for a subsidized scene. This bon vivant from Gouzien, commis-government minister near the theaters, had never had any contemplated a more considerable one since the day when one had to lower the curtain on a member of the Comédie-French - that other sanctuary whose newspapers do not speak only by crossing themselves out of respect.

whatever it is, this detail clearly shows the gullible side of this society. that the Jews are fooled, as the provincials were once fooled, making them believe that they had to wear white gloves to paint 4 the lady who ran the Café des Mille Colonnes.

24 i JEWISH FRANCE

What is delightful is to see with what skill we operated the rescue. Since Rouvier, nothing had ever been so completely successful. From dawn, Arthur Meyer, Blo-witz, the Jewish doctor Lov[^]e hold council on rue Christophe-Columbus. Heilbronn protests. Carvalho, an expert in these questions, because he is considered professed in the order of the Coteaux, declares that nothing turns you grey like orange blossom water. Lowe claims that it was the phosphorus that thus ignited the unhappy.

A few months later, the divination reappeared again-calf in front of the public. In the past, these returns took place kindly, in a good-natured way. Without falling into exaggeration-current rations, it was admitted that certain considerations were due to spectators. As is still practiced in province, the actor or actress at fault was obliged to do excuses. Usually, Frederick still found there the opportunity to indulge in some enormous fantasy. Sometimes the tumult began again; then everything ended with a thunderous applause before some beautiful gesture in which our great French public of the time had re-known a master of art. Others, like Déjazet, com-began, said: "Ladies and Gentlemen," and did not didn't end... At the first smile of the Parisian woman, at the first accents of this voice so melodious and so frail,' the The public had found Frétillon and sent him their forgiveness in hand clapping.

It couldn't happen like this for a protégé. of Mr. de Rothschild. It was the public who had to make excuses. He made some: Carvalho took the liberty of forbidding the crowd the State, that is, everyone's money. All the American

The canines of Paris invaded the room with their pooping noise.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 245

toes, their complexion in the colors of an equivocal pink^ their presumptuous pretension to impose their will.

In fact, these precautions were not necessary.
Cowardly as always, all of Paris was ready to obey the slogan of the Jews and to celebrate the actress who had insulted him.

The street got involved. This anonymous being, who is so mistaken often, had, this time again, more heart than the elite and came straight to whistle in the square. This government without name which, without making an effort, had allowed to be outraged in his chair the successor of Cousin, the eloquent philosopher, the respected writer, made for a ham who had shamed himself—what he had not done for Caro. We saw there are three police commissioners on duty: Santucci, Evrard and Clement, the Clement of decrees, whose place was marked in such a matter. Clement who was the most vile, because he alone dared to put the tricolor scarf around his flanks to stop those who did not approve of the little bacchante.

This noise of the people, despite everything, has the privilege of espousing—always boasting about Rothschild; he gave the order to the director' to stop the performances.

These amplifications about actresses, which contributed to irritate public opinion against Van Zandt, have passed into ha-stupidity.

As soon as the daughters of Zion were mentioned, the terms previously used for those who had graced the stage national authorities were no longer sufficient. I have already indicated on many occasions cases this special habit of the Jewish race to enlarge everything she touches, or rather everything that touches her, to see everything, in some way, through a mirage, of accu- *
to mutilate the exaggerated epithets familiar to the peoples of rOrient. For them, Israel's last ham has become n 14.

V—

the ten sephiroth and we should thank her on our knees for to make themselves heard by us, for a fee.

The apotheosis began with Rachel who was, says Tour-Gueneff, "the strength and the flower of this Jewry which has already seized pockets all over the world and which is seizing-will soon be reappeared, for whoever has the pocket has the woman, and whoever has the to the woman to the man." The true portrait of this strange creature was drawn by Philaretes Chastes, and it is* so finely touched that I cannot resist the pleasure of it reproduce.

This little Bohemian tiger, lascivious Jewess, vast forehead planted on hyena shoulders and on a charming Menade torso, sublime of intelligence and closer, by the soul, to the carnivores than men, seduced all her contemporaries worthy of her and that his great quality, ferocity, has intoxicated. Veron the fat one has \doted on her. Ricord would have hanged himself for her. The archbishops "^ blessed. France mourned her. Once, a little slut in a shirt who, bowl in hand, picked up pennies in the mud of the taverns, all broken down for ten years into three-six, into plan-w ches, with fat lamps, loving the stew of vice but more en- ■ 4 core the stew of money, she represented the savagery of the V Pariahs, that of the Jews, that of the Bohemians summarized, concentrated \j and refined by the wildness of the streets of Paris.

^ Needless to say, the Jews did not stop there,

^ they did not rest until they had made us accept

^c a Rachel of fantasy in whom everything was pure, noble and beautiful (1).

1

i,

V-.

^ , {\) A. read, on this subject, a very piquant study, published first \ vvrS in the Revue politique et litttiraire, and then published in volume ii at Hetzel, the Autographs of Crémieux. Rachel did not have the

3 With the slightest knowledge of spelling, it was Crémieux who served as his

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 2^7 ^

When it comes to a Jew or a Jewess, in fact, 18 \ ordinary conditions of morality are changed. You saw Wolff beat the cash register on the body of a poor girl actress of the Variétés; Meyer does not want to let herself be distance. Rachel had bastards: it is a question of it, in ^ 1883, in a lawsuit brought by Ms. Lia and Dinah Felix. to Sarah's heirs. These are excusable weaknesses ^ in the life of an artist and similar, after all, to those >^ that the debates in the courts reveal every day. The Gaul does not hear it that way; he shows you, in three columns, that these bastards are loves of b-late, bastards like they don't make anymore, bastards as had never been done before Rachel, and thereafter obligatory apotheosis of the incomparable race.

Although I have already touched on this point more than once in the course of this study, I do not fear to return to it, because it is essential. The Christian is always blushing of someone or to deny something, to tell his embarrassed brother: "Nescio vos." The Jew is absolutely closed to any stupid feeling of ridicule or falsehood modesty, he deeply despises opinion, perhaps because that he knows how it is created.

secretary. Rachel sent Crémieux a rough draft, written in the style of a cook, and he sent him a little masterpiece of grace and spirit that Rachel only had to copy. Isn't it nice this lawyer who is tirelessly busy, whose office is overcrowded from morning until evening and who finds the time to render a diligently a service, subordinate in appearance, but which has, in her games, the advantage of growing up a co-religionist? Quote me then a Catholic who would do the same? On the other hand, Rachel would have learned, in the bed of a prince or a statesman, a new interesting for European politics, that it would have imme- immediately warned Crémieux. This is how the Jews are always Admirably informed; they help each other.

248 JEWISH FRANCE

Take an example in another order. This is, I declares it, of a perfectly respectable woman; she was called Agathina and she was a milliner. Suppose a Christian man with a wife who works as a mo-diste and bearing the name of Agathina, he will not boast about it. Our colleague Alexandre Weill does not share this opinion, he clear that nothing has been so spiritual, so seductive, so modest as this milliner.

Oh! my Agathina! I invoke you on my knees!

Rise up in your grave and, standing up, tell us,

You who were chaste and pure and whose slightest word

Was always so loyal and sometimes so superb;

Tell us what you were like from the age of twenty?

Virtue combined with incessant labor.

You wear a nimbus, a halo on your forehead.

Whose charm worked even in your words;

The first at work, the last at rest,

Eager to instruct him and deaf to low talk;

Prompt and nimble in duties, slow in worldly pleasures.

For all the unfortunate with deep pity.

Idol of your mother and all your relatives.

In all houses admitted to the front rows

Dignified with the hunt, affable to the worker,

You were nowhere haughty or proud;

Everyone who spoke to you became your friends,

Even to your devoted and submissive servants.

Faithful to their customs, the Jews have therefore constantly organized a shameless advertisement for theirs. They told us presented as an inimitable artist this poor Sarah who stammers, who no longer has a correct gesture and is in agreement with what she says^^ which would not be worthy of untying the buskin

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 249

of this great and dramatic Rousseil in which seems palpable the heroic soul of tragedy.

Not a single protest is raised. This so-called high-life, This selected society, as they say, has less initiative and independence in his judgments than the little clerk of prosecutor who for 15 cents would whistle Attila. The pieces praised today would not go to the third scene with the terrible parterre of yesteryear. For the mondains, there is only one criterion: a. Does it please the Jews? In this case, everything is fine.

What more striking proof of this fact than V Ami Fritz? We know what a disgusting task the Erckmann-Ghatrian, the "Homers of the workplace." Raised in among the Jews of Phalsboui g, they took the soul hair-nous and sordid. Their work deserved to be called: The Villainy of Fear.

When Friend Fritz was announced, Mr. de Saint-Genest rapped, in the Figaro, that these men to whom we went opening Molière's house had covered our heroic army of Metz. More degraded than the Jews, who came to strip the corpses, these future collaborators of the Flag of Déroulède had stripped our dead of their shroud of glory; they had cast the epithet of capitulation-larders and cowards to these officers who, in the front rank under bullets and shells, had defended this cemetery from Saint-Privat where the Prussian guard had been decimated, near from which a path still bears the name of "Ghemin de death of the guard." M. de Saint-Genest was not satisfied of affirmations; in six issues, he put before the eyes of its readers the most significant extracts, the passages the most anti-French and the most dishonorable.

The first one arrived. In this French room there was had widows, sisters, mistresses also off-fallen under the walls of Metz. Not one protested, not a single Frenchwoman had the courage, in the face of pusill-the animosity of men, to stand up and hiss at these insult-tors of death. All these beautiful people were waiting impatiently that Rothschild would deign to give his opinion. When Rabbi David appeared, there was unanimous applause. All the Jews radiated. Just think, a rabbi appearing for the first time on the French scene and appearing natural there-ly as the model of all virtues I

250 JEWISH FRANCE

Long in advance the Israelite Archives had drummed the good news: "The Théâtre-Français of Paris, the world's first stage, they said, will see will give in the first days of December Friend Fritz, of Messrs. Erckmann-Chatrian, about whom so much has been said advance. One of the least attractions of this piece will not be not the presence of a rabbi on the scene. One of the principal-

One of the characters is Reb David, a real type that the writers vain have undoubtedly idealized and whose original is none other, it is said that the predecessor of the great Rabbi Isidor himself Phalsbourg.))

Encouraged by the immense success they received in the press
Jewish, the Erckmann-Chatrians imagined blackmailing •in charge, at the beginning of the Rantzau, the Kyrie eleison. How touching is this supplicating and sweet appeal that one repeats with a sort of plaintive insistence, at the beginning of the Mass, as if to draw God's attention to the faithful gathered! Chateaubriand, hearing him sing in a monastery on Mount Athos, was moved to the tears and Brizeux said the poetry he took in the small churches of Brittany.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 201

The women gently sent for reply
At the Greek Eleison, the Breton hymns.

When the notes of this Eleison were sung, there was transports of joy in this Tuesday audience, you know, this famous Tuesday public which serves as a meeting for the aristocracy and which seems to conservative newspapers like the resurrection of old France. They were there beating hands to please the Jews who were watching.

How much more I esteem the Jews of Breslau!
In 1876, a parody of the Lecho dodi, the beautiful melody that we sing the night before Yom Kippur (1). They came every evening, showed their fists and said to the artists: Try!

It is appropriate, I know, to recognize that on the pretense great ladies who appear constantly in the book gold of the society newspapers, the number of those who

(1) The Lecho dodi was composed by Jehuda ben Halévy, the famous Rabbi of Toledo. Read on this subject the exquisite little poem*, at the same time tender and mocking, that Henry Heine wrote - on this subject and where he evokes the figure of some Jewish poets of the Middle Ages in connection with Love lessons:

"The beres we sing of, Jehuda ben Halévy, had doL>," lier.

"It was not a Laura whose eyes, mortal stars, had lit on Good Friday, in the Dome, an illustrious fire;

"It was not a baileen woman who, in the dazzling finery of the youth, presided over tournaments and awarded the crown of lau-laugh;

"She was not a casuist of the jurisprudence of kisses, nor a doctrinaire who, in a Court of love, professed sententious-seeding;

"The one the rabbi loved was a poor little beloved, sad and painful image of ruins, and it was called Jerusalem 1 r

252 JEWISH FRANCE

belong to the old French race is relatively very limited.

Americanism has invaded Paris almost as much as the Semitism. * & j ^ - : ; » ^ J ^ ^ . ^ ^ i ^ ^ ^ ^ - v ^ ^ e ^ / ^ ^ ^ .

What spicy stories to tell, if we do not want to-lions remain faithful to our principle of philosophizing alone-ment on what is in the common domain! The great lord, dreaming of making an opulent marriage, was, in the
In most cases, the most candid of dupes. Some fa-thousands of Yankees, originally from Germany and having left their Jewry in the crossing of the Atlantic, embark one fine day for Paris with a small fortune, two or three hundred thousand francs, that girls spend bravely in one year with a deafening noise. The chronickers blow the trumpet, the leaves well informed-They embroider stories of mines as best they can fabulous, colossal trading houses. You see from here the novel that is built in the head of the Aryan, Isn't industry the queen of the modern world?
Long live industry! With these countless millions I will rebuild my castle, I will have the most brilliant carriages in Paris, I will do good... »

The wedding is taking place... Here is the little Yankee duchess, Marquise, Countess. The hour strikes when the happy husband judges that it would be time to cash in some nuggets of these inexhaustible mines, to have some ar-people from these banking or commercial houses.

Alas! the mines were flooded, the bank house given a trousseau, but who had promised an annuity huge, has gone mad. The awakening is hard for some-ones. This one takes his side, sells his castle where

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY?33

Louis XIV had received hospitality, sends to auction the old furniture and even his grandmother's screen to satisfy the whims of a spoiled child. This one, ahattu by such a blow, disappears from circulation, puts himself in bed, without being sick, and now lives lying down. This other give up everything, go to America, work there bravely-ment, discovers real mines and returns a millionaire and republican.

Sometimes the adventure gets complicated. He comes from extra-vagants of even more extravagant aunts, not possessing neither penny nor mail, but having a passion for whisky that an actress's mother shared with her daughter; the poor thing The husband is obliged to clothe, feed and water all of this.

You will tell me that the victims are not very inter-santes. I grant you; what must be noted is the impos-almost absolute inability for the true Frenchman to draw any benefit from his compromises with conscience; he is not organized for this. The straight line of duty would have al-days were more advantageous for him, even materially, than so-called skills where he invariably ends up the role of Jocrisse.

Whether it is the stock market game, the marriage game, of the game of politics, of financial business launchers, of American husbands, from center-right Machiavellians to the Assembly of Versailles, the law we are talking about is verified always.

Apart from a few exceptions that everyone knows, these American women are, as a rule, very unpleasant creatures. tures: boisterous, excessively spendthrift, loud-talking, laughing loudly, always first for eccentricities in bad taste and, what is prodigious, also foolishly infatuated with their fresh nobility, as impertinent as
II 15

254 LA. FRANCE JUIVK

The true great ladies of the past were simple, indulgent-gentes and Lonnes... EUesont contributed to give society Parisian the incoherent and bizarre physiognomy that she has

The sore point again is the way in which we reward—think of the hospitality we give to everyone, the rebuffs from which we pay our advances.

The professors of the School of Fine Arts, in contempt, moreover, from their most elementary duty, welcome preference for American students; the Salon jury grants to the Yankees medals that he refuses to old artists for which would be a joy, a recommendation also to—near today's imbecile public. Everything that the painters—Very Americans know, they learned it from us, from us. The first care of Congress is to vote a right so exorbitant on the entry of works of art that it is equivalent to absolute prohibition.

What an episode again, the statue of Bartholdi: The Liberty Enlightening the World! For years, the Committee repeated in all tones: <c Our dear sister America adores us; his ambassadors, in all the capitals, proved it to us well, during the war of 1870, in bu—vant to the success of Prussia and the lowering of the France (i); we subscribe to erect an impe—laughable of the love that unites us.

(1) It is appropriate to recognize the noble attitude of Victor Hugo, who sometimes remembered, despite the promiscuities to which he was lent, that he was the son of a soldier. He had been told of the visit of Granl, the president-gambler whose language, or so we know, is touibéo rotten, no doubt from all the insults he had vomited against us in 1870: "Let Mr. Mac-Mahon receive him, if he wants to," said one day the poet before us, if he appears here, I will have him thrown into the

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 255

When the statue was finally finished, after appeals from incessant funds, the Americans declare that they do not want them—slow at any price, that they will not give fifty cent—times for the pedestal. Congress refuses to vote on the lesser amount. In a country where a million people are raised dollars in a few hours for any sub—description, individuals shrug their shoulders when we offers them to subscribe.

Doesn't the heart sink when we think that it is enough of a few agitators to reduce our France to this role of poor dog who runs to give his caresses to everyone, and everyone kicks it away? ^

all the foreigners who got us into complications where we are intrigued, as their journalists have put us in the subscriptions where one fiddles, that it would have been magnifi-that once again the role of our dear Homeland.! To have emancipated America, freed Italy, com-fought everywhere for what seemed to us justice and-to die peacefully in the contemplation of the vanquished î Au after ten years of this proud rest, one would have come humble-ask us to give our opinion in the councils from Europe...

With such an audience, the Jews and Jewesses of the theater do not hesitate, they behave in conquered country; chaany of their fantasies becomes an event. Paris, at door! » Who does not remember, in V Année terrible, the piece entitled Bancroft and especially Grant's Message;

... Ah! Be cursed, you unfortunate one who mixed
'On the proud flag that a wind from the heavens shakes

To the drops of light a hoe stain!

200 JEWISH FRANCE

month of February 1884, spoke for fifteen days of M^{^^} Fidès-Devriès. Of all the Hebrew actresses, this one, from remains, is the most annoying. She was at the Opera when, a beautiful evening, she was bored when she realized perhaps that she bored; she married a Jewish dentist and left the theater.
Good riddance to us! You don't know the Jews;
They always have to disturb the next one. One evening, the Jewish baronesses mysteriously announced the return of their coreligionist: "Do you know the great news? The all beautiful, all charming, all divine Devriès goes come back to us!" What an honor for us! said the du-chessmen to court the baronesses. The newspapers stylish announced the return, then denied it, then announced it again.

After a short stint at the Opera, where only Jews applauded her, Ms. Fidès-Devriès decided to go and sing at the Italian Theatre; she consented, out of pure disinterest, to pocket 68,000 francs for twelve performances, then suddenly the husband had himself surreptitiously handed over, "to name of his wife, a check that she had no right to touch." Here, it is the director, Mr. Maurel, who speaks and I am only repeating what he wrote in the newspapers.
In short, here is the singer who will join the Jew Jules Cohen

Carlo, while the impresario is tearing his hair out, and Another Jew, Hartmann, writes astonishing letters to the newspapers.

Notice the change that has taken place even in the customs of the theater. Without doubt the wings have not never been the sanctuary of Virtue, but the good heart, affection for comrades redeemed many things. Déjazet would have played dying so as not to lose a forty-cent fee to an extra. This Jewess who comes to receive a fabulous sum for a few notes per-times quite false, which, at the second representation of Chérodade, put the knife to his director's throat to get a little more gold, don't ask for a minute if his sudden departure will not be a ruin for the theater, if he doesn't put all these little artists out on the streets subordinates, employees, pledgers for whom the closure is a disaster.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY ^257

These considerations are completely foreign to any individual of Semitic race who counts the other abso-lutely for nothing. Why would he bother, again times? Once upon a time, an artist who would have allowed herself such a thing escapade would have been met with blows of cooked apples, if she had decided to reappear before a Parisian audience. Nowadays, Jewry only had to make a gesture to this so-called "arrestocratic assistance of the Opera" so that when she returned to school the following January, Ms. Fidès-Devriès was covered with applause (1).

As soon as the Jews held the first rank there, the theater himself has transformed. As long as the actors were simple Christians, the profession of actor remained a little considered by itself, but that the greatness of the talent, the The artist's personal attire was relevant on the occasion. It is necessary to have lost, in fact, all moral sense and all common sense for admitted that, in the social hierarchy, the jester, whose profession is to receive kicks in the butt—behind to amuse the assembled crowd, be the equal of a soldier who risks his life for his country, of a sailor who faces the storm, of a doctor who braves epidemics. Without doubt histrionics has reigned in all civilizations corrupt. Enslaved Athens gave Polus a talent per day, ^sopus and Roscius were gorged with gold. Two mimes, Pylades and Bathyles filled the Rome of the late Empire. Paris, which Caligula had beaten rods for having hesitated to declare that the Emperor chan—was better than Jupiter, had a bit of the appearance of a soci—of the current Comédie-Française.

(1) A newspaper had reported, in preparation for this return to school, that Lisbon, M^{me} Fidès-Devriès had been recalled a hundred and twelve times in a single evening, which, according to our colleagues, would have represented, just for the journey from the wings to the stage, a six-minute walk kilometers. This is what the Jewish Barnums are making this "Paris which had once such a quick and fine perception of everything that was ridiculous and rude!

Even in its shame, the Roman people nevertheless kept a certain respect for human dignity; he put his love pleasure above all, he testified that he wanted to get—to amuse himself at all costs and that he forgot everything to achieve this but he never declared that a man of joy was the equal of a man of duty and sacrifice. Seneca, who was a voluptuary, Petronius, who was a debauchee, would have broke their stylus rather than write the pompous tirades that the journalists of the Jewish press devote each day to "honesty, to the nobility of the profession of his—trion.))

If the Empire, thanks to Fould, gave for the first time the cross to an actor, Isidore Samson, because he was of Jewish origin, he did so again with formal reservations; he decorated the professor of the Conservatory and the playwright—tick on the express condition that the actor would not reappear more on the boards.

With their bias to debase the army, the Republicans of—

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 259

would change all that. You have to read in the newspapers of the era of Delaunay's decoration scene. It is a true picture of decadence, but of a special decadence, declamatory and burlesque.

As happens on the eve of all major events—strange rumors had been circulating. Delaunay had 'put the market in hand to France; he had announced i3cs last performances. You understand the worry—study that reigned in the House. England had just to drive us out of Egypt, which had seemed like a small thing; The news that Delaunay was retiring was much more serious.

laws, had spoken sinister words. "He had been heard whispers: I was told on January 1 that it was necessary wait for Easter, at Easter only the prize distribution was not far away.

In these oscillating and perplexed hours when the decision will be made destiny of the world, the strongest feel restless. Febvre, however, was very calm; "he stood motionless in his office; D  roul  de, more nervous, went from the room to the hearth and from the hearth to the room.

Seeing his shadow come and go on the canvas,
The dogs, who still believed in this star,
Accused Fate of l  se-majest  .

Suddenly Ferry arrives with General Pitti  , head of the military house of the President of the Republic, and it read to Delaunay: c(I decorate you on the battlefield. » You can see the battlefield from here: pots of red 't of white, a hare's paw, hairpieces, perukes, and that special smell of actors' dressing rooms "made of l) perfumes, rancid, of pharmaceutical mixtures, of powder

^i!60 JEWISH FRANCE

of rice and oppoPONAX. You see this old makeup diluting his rouge by crying over Ferry's sideburns, and General Pitti   in the middle of this scene, saying: "It is equal, what a lesson for Mr. de Moltke!"

"Of course, in the room, Mr. Bischoffsheim spoke-born from having, as an astronomer who loves Progress, discovered the star of the brave on the chest of a member of the Com  die-Fran  aise.

In the upper classes, histrionics have a character-completely Roman territory.

At the Molier circus, elegant young people, dressed in clowns, give two performances each year: one for the women of the world, one for the women of all the world. Invitations are eagerly sought, and French women are there, looking at their sons or brothers performing recoveries on the high bar, dancing on the rope, passing through the hoops. These actors dressed of soft colored jerseys, covered in sequins, loaded of tinsel, grimacing, frolicking, walking on the hands, are called the Count of Nyon, the Count of Pully, Count Bernard de Gontaut, Count de Maulle, de Beauregard, of Qu  len (l). Count Hubert de la Rochefoucauld, gold, shouts: music to the orchestra, with the intonation of clowns. ; ; ^ ^ . . ^ ^ ^ ^ . l. é ~ ^ c c. :: : ir - ^ - ^ . ^ : ^ v ^ . ^

There is a real pathological case, I repeat, in this need to degrade oneself, to dishonor oneself, but This doesn't shock anyone. The newspapers, which defend the society, seriously insert the program between a tirade

(1) Figaro, May 6, 1883.

JEWISH PARTS AND THE FRENCH COMPANY i2Gi against the vices of the people and the announcement of a sermon, insist-"tent" on the numbers, explain at length the genea-family theory (1).

The strongest in this genre is the representation of the Circle of the rue Royale, where the Duke of Morny appeared dressed in woman and danced a step from Excelsior's ballet. It was a rapture. The newspapers discussed it for a whole week to find out if the Duke had done the right thing in cutting his mustaches. The Gaul was very affirmative: "He was right- his, he said, is very bold! » Le Figaro, more reserved, said there were pros and cons.

No more than at the Théâtre-Français, not an old man represents- feeling of old honor, not a woman having any feeling of dignity in his heart, did not have the idea of getting up, of to protest, to whistle at the sight of this man disguised as a woman and dancing with double-sided gestures tent. All of Paris did not have the modesty of Athens which allowed only slaves to dance the obscene dance: the Motlion.

Isn't it curious, in this perpetual recommencement- of history, in the incessant wriggling of this snake biting its tail, to note that the deca- dence is always translated in identical forms, from

(1) Let us not forget a nice trait of morals. In a newspaper which belongs, Voltaire, Mr. Albert Ménier had charged one of the editors- to brand these great lords who dishonored their ancestors he dressed up in clown finery. A few months later, he founded himself a circus in Neuilly, the Clique Alberti, and invited everyone Paris to come and watch him perform acrobatics. This trait of Bourgeois-Gen- modern man, from Republican Bourgeois-Gentilhomme, is he not exquisite jjas? Doesn't it prove once again what useful examples could have given the last survivors of rareloc>aie, if they had liked something other than hamming it up, gambling and girls?

SGS^ THE JEWISH FRINGE

see that after so many centuries have passed, the decomposition social, like physical decomposition, is absolutely the same in its manifestations? The duke, dressed in a ball-rine, eti'Héliogabale in Syrian dress, with enlarged eyes with henna, with blushed cheeks, do they not seem to be one and the same being? Are these titled clowns not not a new incarnation of the degenerate patricians of Juvenal, from Damasippus who declaims on stage the Spectre of Catullus, of Lentulus who hires himself to play the role of Laureolus, or of the unworthy Gracchus who descends into the arena, carrying

The r^

A memory of vanished civilizations haunts you every moment in this colossal Paris.

In 4867, when the Empire, already doomed, had Tair of a bacchanal mounted to its paroxysm, in the middle of this Babel of the Universal Exhibition where we heard resound in all languages what Bossuet calls super-bement c(the neighing of lust, " two passers-by met in this promenade where the people seemed to have arranged to meet for a cosmopolitan orgy. One was Henri Lasserre, the other Ernest Hello, a man of genius, who will have crossed this century without this century having preview.

-One thing surprises me, said the author of the man in the future author of Our Lady of Lourdes, I just watched on the Tuileries side, they are not yet burning

We experience a similar feeling and wonder how does this society still hold together, where selfishness and vanity foolishness, the love of pleasure, the absence of any feeling of devotion, of all thought of sacrifice, of all instinct even conservation are at the top, where hatred and envy are down.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 2C3

The printing identity stops there. Paris has no aspect joyful, the air of confidence, the bewitching power that he

to move, it exudes a cadaverous odor. The heart is—as if invaded by an insurmountable sadness and more than one would ratify what an Englishman, Mr. George Sims, wrote some time ago about this Paris which was ours dear loves.

I have known and loved Paris all my life, says the author of /?i the ranks, and I never spent a dull hour there, except today. Two years ago, I was having coffee on the boulevard, seeing the ebb and flow of Parisian life pass by. At this At that time, a change was already noticeable: Paris was going down slope whose base he reached today. Here he is on the ground, in a heap, calling in vain for the man who will lift him up to bring him back—to the top. "Petropublic, your name is bankrupt!" shouts a well-known journalist, and although I am not quite sure that it is precisely the fault of the Republic, I must note that there are a lot of bankruptcies. The best houses of businesses are closed or in liquidation; theaters, with few exceptions near, make bad business; the asphalt sidewalks are in worse condition than in London, thanks to our administrative transfer.

All classes are under the influence of a malaise. The only ones suitably dressed people are the English and the Americans. Paris is in extremis. I close my eyes, to wake up in me the image of times gone by, of the splendid displays of shops, daylight streets, elegant women, magnificent crews, "brilliant uniforms, the noise and the movement of a city in continual Sunday clothes. I reopen the eyes, and I find a population miserably dressed, exiguous provisions of old-fashioned articles in London, and above all that, under a gray sky, we read the word: "Ichaboë" (island of the coast West Africa, famous for its i^uano).

"264 JEWISH FRANCE

The city, where life was once so overflowing, where the cobblestones themselves laughed at the passers-by, gives a louse the sensation of Munich. In the melancholic and icy Munich, he lack of glory, of movement to fill this setting of palaces, of temples erected to absent great men, of magnificent avenues. Paris had this glory, it is full of memories of heroism and grace, of immortal legends—such, illustrious ghosts, but all this seems to belong—hold on to a past that has been forever abolished. Some regions remain seem like Pompeii and one wonders what catastrophe made them suddenly silent and desolate. Elsewhere, the activity is feverish, but with a sort of somber disquietude

The hotels of the Faubourg Saint-Germain keep their shutters closed for ten months of the year. Almost all the beautiful hotels in the Champs Elysées and Monceaux district are for Jews; sometimes, through the windows open, we hear in the solitude the echoes of something concert, it's some random Jew who is treating his neurosis. The book so French, the book that makes you think, the book that) which held so much space in the 17th century no longer exists; it is the mu- "sique, all-sensitive art, art of the softened and the sickly, which holds /7 the first rank. After the crocodile, the Jew is the most me- ^ lover of all animals. All Jews are musicians or instinctive actors. Camondo plays the cello r^ M'^^ Saly-Stern sings the operetta as Judic. Herman t^ ->^Bemberg composes. We see, in satin programs, The bust with the disturbing nose of the author of Djinns, stands- ^. Bant in the middle of laurel branches above band.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 2C5

rolls where the names of Haydn, Gluck, Mozart and Beethoven. Ms. Goldschmidt also gives superb concerts "in rooms that are in a row." Between two pieces, Bemberg, that Haydn's fame prevents you from sleeping, asks M^{me} Isaac to sing a little romance. The Bugle, when he lived, was willing to give us learn that the program this time is printed <* on a sheet of orange vellum eaten away by a volcano! yy "What a beautiful decoration, what masterpieces!" exclaims Meyer always delighted. ((Entering under the peristyle, the Houdon's masterful statue, the Apollo, takes you look." I imagine the master of the house must have taken us once something else to give such beautiful parties... The Ellissens are also very cheerful and find that life is beautiful. The misfortune of our poor rag-pickers congaiety, and they made it the subject of a play which inaugurated their hotel on Boulevard Haussmann built on the site cement of the gardens of Princess Mathilde. When we drove into the vault and you could see straight away a large poster written as follows:

Folly-Ellissen

Free performance on May 14, 1885

RACK-REVIEW

A spectacular play, banned by the Censorship, and performed by special authorization of the Municipal Council, with the assistance of the capital's leading artists.

A crowned head will honor this unique event with his presence representation.

Electric light, Bengal lights, firecrackers, Apotheosis.
MILITARY MUSIC

266 JEWISH FRANCE

In this conquered Paris, we even meet Jews Indians, the Sassoons, a family with fabulous adventures who owns half of Bombay. They come to give evenings at our house. Ms. Gubbay, daughter of this Sassoon, arrives suddenly, invites people she has never met seen, and to which she was never presented and each iccourt. And there are naive people who claim that high Parisian society is opening up with difficulty!

Despite everything, this Jewish world is hardly interesting, in despite the noise he made. Mr. Robert de Bonnières had started in mind to paint him in the Monach, and he went everywhere repeating: "I will strangle them with a silk cord."

[I lacked stomach, as they say, and he did not had the necessary intrepidity. Without doubt, he saw clearly the lowering of our aristocracy before the enriched Jew by dishonest operations; but the energy made him fault to paint what he had before his eyes; he indicated only the bad education of the German baron recalling at every turn the price of everything he has at home, entering a church with his hat on his head to mark it change the rood screen; he only half highlighted it, in Lia, this cunning, selfish and hard side that Jewish women hide in languid attitudes enhanced by a cabo- originality tine; he did not dig, like the author of Daniel Deronda, he remained on the surface.

To this deliberately insufficient and feeble touch,
I thought I saw a man who is afraid of burning his vessels, to close the door of what is called "Society," which trembles at never having around again from him this little noise of Semitic and upheaval press-which he takes for fame. The author wrote to me that he did not have this character and what I was told about his situation

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 267

personal • confirmed me in this idea. We must see there only a lack of determinism, an impossibility to conclude contrasting with a firm and precise style which seems to have been sharpened by constant reading of La Bruyère.

Mr. Paul Bourget may have better grasped another aspect of this society. The author frequents the Ephrussi and the Gahen where the women of the dealers, charmed to be taken for real great ladies, sympathize with a exchange of concessions to a slightly melancholic affected, with a dandyism that smacks a bit of the study master dressed in tailoring, has With their alternating cares-healthy light and shivering melancholy," the books of the novelist reflect well what is false, artificial,
of unreal in all this Parisian Jerusalem.

We wonder where we are in these novels which have neither the poetry of works of imagination, nor the powerful attraction and healthy works of sincere and true life. We are in the Jewish world, in this improvised and very old world, born of yesterday, but born decadent, anemic and faded. Tears, there are no longer the noble tears which relieve the human being-hand and strengthen it, by its very tenderness, comra(3 the rain from heaven soaks and fertilizes the earth; they are nervous effects and only come as a result of emo-theatre scenes; the laughter is always shrill and jerky.
We never hear a fair and frank word, a word at the Sé-vinified or even Montespan, Ghampfart or even à la Dupin. The writer is only appreciated for what he wins, the painting is only valued for what it costs.

As soon as we talk about a painting, the instinct of the broker or the bazaar holder finds himself at the gentleman's house who seems say: "Let's keep our eyes open! Here's the deal!" All these aesthetic Keals-like, these nonchalant, morbid beings

268 JEWISH FRANCE

and refined reverie, straighten up at a word, at a new

for their interests.

Just now, the apartment full of flowers at the par-heady fumes seemed like a tomb that these deta-
The lives of those who had prepared to die there in a harmonious ecstasy; but the Judische, the Hebrew patois-German, in which we discuss the profit to be made, quickly silences the piano where the plaintive melody of Schû- dies mann; the voice that, a minute before, was a caress, a murmur of Aeolian harp, resumes like by magic the guttural whistle.

In natures that observe themselves the most, this instinct is almost irresistible. Old Baroness James was a superior woman who contributed a lot through her tact to to ensure the Rothschilds the social situation they have today. One day, it was at the Duchess of Galliera's, I believe she was in the middle of an elite assembly;
the conversation had turned to the most elevated subjects and the baroness had held her place there. We came by chance to talking about diamonds. Suddenly the Jewess from Frankfurt reappears.
"You don't understand anything!" she cries, and there she is comes alive, reviewing the diamonds of all Paris, indicates the weight, the brilliance, the number of carats, the value venal. It was only in the face of the silence that fell that she comes into possession of itself and remains for a few minutes as shameful of this return to the primitive profession.

The most remarkable work in this genre remains the Baron Vampire by Mr. Guy de Charnacé (1). If the author

(1) One word will suffice to characterize the difference which seizes the Baro?i Vampire of the Monach. Oueiidorff had written a novel in Charnacé

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 209

had widened his frame a little, he would have come very close of Balzac. How alive this Rebb SchmouU is. The little col-Bohemian porter who earns a few million in bad-own speculations and which, suddenly, presents itself, under the name of Baron Rakonitz, in Paris, where the high nobility welcomes him with open arms! What a trait of Parisian morals that this alliance of the baron and the Jewish actress Sophie Fuch! The baron throws the actress to use her as a instrument to take revenge on a man of the world, the Viscount of La Landelle, whose disdain he endured, and when this girl prostituted herself to all of Paris, the Viscount solemnly marries her. Thanks to the Duchess of Ermenoncity, the baron in turn ends up marrying the heiress of a

Germain attends the wedding.

The portraits are strikingly true. Each one names Ra-Konitz, seller of non-firing guns, launcher of mines which contain no more gold than those of Uru-Guay, creator of fantastic railways, restorer-finance minister of the Gulistan Empire. Here are some per-and had undertaken to publish it within a very short time; he made however, sent his manuscript to the author of Baron Vampire, telling him that a rabbi to whom he had submitted the work had declared it publication impossible. When the Monachs appeared, Charnacé was-thundered that OUendortr edited a volume on a similar subject, after having refused the Vampire Baron: a Oh! it's not the same thing! The rabbi to whom I showed the Monach told me that this book was very flattering to the Jews."

I do not, of course, blame Ollendorff for having addressed himself to a priest of his religion. I myself consulted clergymen on my book, to see if it did not contain any heological errors. If one had slipped in by chance, I pray the members of the clergy to be kind enough to point it out to me.

270 JEWISH FRANCE

well-known names in high life: Schavten, "the little Jew collector of earthenware, enamels, appraiser sought after trinket which, slipping first under this pretext in the salons, now sits there insolently;)) Mrs. ^, Stein, » wife of a Swiss broker, pretty, intelligent-gente, who knew how to be accepted by the young clan duchesses, who dine at her house when her husband travels for the house." Let us greet again, or rather let us not greet not, Mrs. Langman, a Polish Jewess, who is one of the dowagers of gallantry, Lise Adler, a German Jew-Mande who was a nanny in Warsaw.

((All this rubbing shoulders with the sons and nephews of valiant men who made the rance by the blood shed, by the sacrifice of their well, by their value, their diplomatic intelligence to ti^a-to Europe! What a sight!"

Ah! Yes! What a sight! And how we understand in front of these ignominious promiscuities the indignations of an artist with a straight heart, the anger of a true gentleman like Charnaceous.

In the neighborhoods that the Jews chose for their hotels, we can at least collect ourselves without being disgusted by pimps and girls, they shamelessly stick it in there, they insult passers-by and make honest women blush with filthy words.

This is Macé's book, the Security Service by its old clief, which must be read from one end to the other if one wants to have an idea of what the Republicans did to Paris in a few years. In its administrative brutality, in its dry and cold language of minutes, the work exceeds everything that has been written about contemporary Paris; it reveals wounds more cruelly than feathers would more eloquent. Naturalism has never given us a most appalling human document.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 27 1

The chapter on pimps is truly sinister. The author successively parades before us the supporters of the high society, of the bourgeoisie, of the demi-monde, the worker pimps, the pimps of the to-houses - lérance, the low-level married pimps, the pimps pederasts, the pimps prowling the barriers.

Growing immorality, materialistic doctrines or-harshly preached, poverty, the scarcity of work have created categories previously unknown in Paris. married men live in great numbers in dishonor of their wives, themselves monitor their debauchery.

The married woman does her business anywhere, but al-days away from home. During the day, she solicits at train stations of railways, in public gardens, in the Bois de Boulogne, and prostitutes herself in the cabarets or hotels in the neighborhood.

The husband follows her from a distance, either to warn her of the presence agents, whom he seeks to know, either to protect her against some customers who have difficulty paying. In this der-In the last case, he intervenes as a husband, makes a scene with his wife and to the individual he calls his accomplice; to avoid any scandale, this one sometimes gives much more money than if he had paid the woman the price agreed in advance.

Children aged 12 to 15, corrupted by example, of-come apprentice pimps.

Some girls bring young children with them who witness the most ignoble scenes. There is in the chapter entitled: Children in the possession of women debauchery of details that it is impossible for me to reproduce.

The army of criminals is recruited from among the pimps.

272 JEWISH FRANCE

Every day a new gang forms. We rob houses in the suburbs and surrounding areas of Paris; Passy, Auteuil and Boulogne are constantly visited by the criminals.

They shoot the commissioners and peace officers, all of them in the evenings the rare peacekeepers who do not make a pact with the criminals are forced to fight. We have—sassiné in broad daylight, in the middle of Paris, on the bridges, in the Tuileries Garden; in the Bois de Vincennes an old man is strangled a few steps from the shooting competition; on the Boulevard des Capucines, in front of the Hils restaurant, we throw a lasso around a man's neck to rob him.
stops cars in the streets like they used to on the big ones paths. In January 1885, a lady returning from Bordeaux takes a cab at Orléans station at eleven o'clock evening; rue Contrescarpe, three criminals jump to the horse's bridle and the lady is obliged to give everything that she owns.

Passengers are killed in the carriage, girls in their beds, the wine merchants at their counters (1). The police

(1) Here, according to the newspapers, is the balance sheet for a week in January–February 1880:

Paris: Assassination of Ms. Laplaigne, wine merchant, rue Beaumont; assassination of Mr. Barrême, prefect of Eure; assassination of Ma-Aguétan village, Caumartin Street; attempted crime, 103, Poteau Street, where the man named Victor Bocqueteau was seriously injured with a cane his wife and his mother-in-law; in Glichy, Victor Arynthe hits his aunt with two stab wounds, then commits suicide by swallowing acid sulfuric.

Departments: In Viry-sur-Mont (Somme), Mr. Jacques-Fran—I kill you, with a billhook. Ms. Piedocq, widow, and her daughter; in Horgny (Somme), Basset (Alexandre), laborer, aged fifty-eight, is cut at the place called Cavée-d'Horgny; in Gusey (Haute-Marne), a basket maker is stabbed by his worker; in Garnerans (Ain), Ms. widow folds his arms in front of all these crimes, absolutely powerless—health (1). The murderer of a girl from Monsieur-le- Street leisurely strolling through Paris covered in blood and go and ask for a place at an employment office without anyone thinking of stopping him.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 273

Women's breweries are at once brothels, gambling dens, cabarets. Once entered there, every son of an honest man family is lost; we intoxicate him, we make him play, we de- in a thousand ways. Perhaps never human nature- Maine was not further degraded than in these unfortunate- his women whose profession is to drink, who are drunk for a living; who are called lazy when their esto Mac refuses work. Some absorb up to 40 and 50 beers a day! Read this and reread after the tirades pompous about the regeneration of humanity through democracy (2).

Ferrand was strangled in her home in Deboste; in Beaune, La- Mothe, a winegrower, on his way to Dijon, was struck by a bolt of fire. sil; in Le Havre, Mr. Laplante strangles his mistress, the Belle Nan- silence; in Villeneuve-sur-Lot, the man named Fiasse, detained at home central, after throwing vitriol in the face of the goalkeeper Bonnassie, deals him several blows with a cleaver; near Saint-Valbert (Eure), Mr. Charles Nardin, forest ranger, is knocked down by an individual who stabbed him several times in the head.

In total, nine murders and five attempted murders in six days.

(1) The police cost sixteen million more than in 1869. Under the Em- worse, it was content with 9,332 agents; today it employs sixteen thousand.

(2) These brasseries now have a dedicated newspaper, Paris noc- turne, which claims to have a circulation of six thousand copies and declares ready to prove it. He gives the health certificate every week, the price, the specific details of the staff of each establishment- ment. We read, for example, that at the Brasserie du Square "Jeanne

274 JEWISH FRANCE

Pimping has spread to all classes of society. owner who rents accommodation to a prostitute for triple the price price it is worth; the landlord who accommodates it in the same way as the pro- owner; the wine merchant who attracts him to his home to attract him at the same time the customers, and which, if necessary, protects it against agents; the coal merchant who sells him the fuel at false weights; the grocer, the fruit seller, the merchant at the toilet, the seamstress who make him pay more for the goods than another, until the laundress who overcharged him for his ironing (expected, all these industrialists, in different capacities, are in reality as many pimps who push them to debauchery because debauchery attracts them reports.

is still charming, but wanders excessively. Bullier is under ball of predilection; she often goes there with her friend Félicie, a good girl of Brabant, which is now completely recovered." Bachel makes the delights of the Brasserie du Bar. "With her languid gaze she invites you to come to her tables. Like her friend Valentine, she is an enemy of drunkenness." The newspaper announces that it will do admit into the main balls of Paris a new polka of Henri Cohen: Paris Nocturne.

Albert Delpit published an interesting study on these breweries which gives a good idea of what Freemasonry means by réducasioQ:

(The whole Latin Quarter, he said, is infested with breweries of women. The middle school students go there, abandoning the class or the exam, escaping, to run after these low-class prostitutes. And I was talking about poor mothers who believe their child watched! Their child who is threatened with ignominy, when he cannot still defend themselves, and that the unconscious curiosity of early life delivers to entrepreneurs of debauchery. I entered successively-ment in half a dozen of these breweries and everywhere I saw the same disgusting spectacle. Women priming and caressing middle school students aged fifteen to eighteen, pale, withered beings and already old people! »

– Ah! If we succeed in founding the Republic..., said one Eugène Pellelan in Pontmartin, who recounted this conversation, you will see... you will see!... his first care, his first biôû-fact, will be to moraUser France!

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 275

Mr. Macé sends reports upon reports, requests upon requests to the police prefect to be authorized to clean Paris; he comes up against a formal refusal and he gives us one the reason (1).

The majority of the City Council agrees with the exploiters of vice.

In some elections it is the supporters and the repeat offenders who provide the necessary additional votes. Mr. Macé's testimony is very serious on this point. <tThe Most of the supporters are voters and vote; with their map they penetrate everywhere. Many have, however, suffered make use of their status as citizens. Very recently, individuals arrested and with criminal records, were found with their voter cards cut up at one of the angles, a sure sign that they had used it.

(1) The police, who hunted down and forced to disappear all these excen- innocent sticks, all these fakers, all these street musicians which gave Paris color and picturesqueness, does not touch not to the pimps; she declares herself powerless against them, to avoid admitting that she is an accomplice.

Let us recall the scenes that took place in the Latin Quarter in April 1883? A few students, less degenerate than their comrades, wanted to accomplish themselves the task whose self- rity refused to take charge. In one evening, they had cleared the district of the aquatic population that infested it. What did the com- Police Commissioner Scbnerb, the German Jew, the pornographer's brother Schnerb, who was then director of the Sûreté? he put his head of a gang of pimps and agents and rushed at the students who, beaten, bloodied, knocked out with blows from a head, had to retreat. In other times, people would have been indignant at the cynicism of this police, making common cause with the men nameless people who ransom prostitutes. The moral meaning is so com- completely obliterated, that we were content to laugh, and offer to Comes- breaks a sheet metal breaker of honor which greatly amused the prefect and the shameful entourage in which he lived.

276 JEWISH FRANCE

The cilioses happened in the same way during the first Revolution where the ex-convicts were masters sovereigns in the sections.

These owners of infamous establishments are pure betrayals the pure, from a republican point of view; they serve the good cause in their own way by rotting the younger generations, by destroying in the masses any honest feeling which could help the country emerge from the mire. We note- We will further, moreover, discuss the close connivance of the heads of democracy with poisonous wine merchants.

The law on repeat offenders, proposed by the Franks - Masons, is not a solution, it is an instrument of proscription against all French people without distinction, that's it everything. We can close down the places of prostitution and put the girls at Saint-Lazare, as before, without making a law which allows to send an unfortunate person, who has stolen a loaf of bread, or, in a political brawl, hit an agent, die at the Guyana, where the ordinary temperature is twenty-seven European cannot live more than three years.

The representatives of the right have, once again, allowed themselves to take from common places (1). None among them, outside of the Count of Mun, who pronounced some generous words, did not have enough breath to consider the question

(1) Without understanding and without indicating that this law will become a real expatriation law for all those who displease, Mr. Buffet, however, by his sole instinct as an old lawyer, showed, in the session of the Sub-national Assembly of February 8, 1885, what was baroque and abnormal—bad a project which neither fixes a place for relegation, nor a deadline, nor a specific condition:

a The legislator, he said, must define exactly the penalty or penalties

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 277

from above, to draw an exact and vigorous picture of the current decomposition, to shake up the republican ministers—Americans on their bench, to tell them:

"Well! This is what your Republic has produced, who accused previous regimes of corruption? You are calling for the mass proscription of French cou—liable to have no pensions, you demand measures which all the governments that preceded you have passed to maintain order!"

If most of those threatened by this law are few worthy of sympathy, the law is no less monstrous—truer. Solvere pœnam, pay your sentence, said the former. Once he has paid his debt to society, the The condemned person is free. No one has the right to graft onto a condemnation a new punishment, a punishment that formerly regarded as the most terrible of all: the pri—perpetual vation of the soil of the homeland (1).

penalties he intends to inflict. Now, do you dispute that relegation has life imprisonment is a punishment, and do you think that this punishment will be seriously defined if, in the commission system, the Govern—nement may, ad libitum, apply this penalty of these two, ma—nières: or send repeat offenders to harrow the wheat of Beauce, to weed beets from Soissonnais or digging canals at the Gujane in the middle of the pestilential marshes of this colony?

"Or could," he added, "by sticking to the wording of the com—mission, to summarize the bill as follows: repeat offenders will be,

who will send them wherever he sees fit and subject them to discretion-ment to the regime he deems most suitable.

(1) "At the risk of being accused of sentimentality by the Minister of 'interior,' Mr. Buffet said again, 'I do not hesitate to declare that, In the sacred interest of its defense against the worst criminals, the society has no right to violate the rights of these degraded beings rules of justice.

he 16

278 JEWISH FRANCE

The law, which everyone declared unenforceable, was voted, despite everything, because the Jews wanted it. French people of yesterday, The Hamburger Reinach(1) finds it very easy to hunt
from the ground, to exterminate, according to Racine's expression, men whose ancestors have been on the land for centuries of France. For what crime does this newcomer ban former French land and water? For vagrancy!
that is to say for a completely relative offense, for the fact of being poor, to have had parents too honest to get richchir, to have slept in a wood, on a walking bench-nade, instead of sleeping in a bed, having spent the night in the beautiful star.

On this account Homer, Camoëns and Nerval would have been vagrants.

Never the invasion, first gentle, then brutal
The Jew's character has not been more striking.

The house is mine! It's up to you to get out.

The rights of man and of the citizen, proclaimed with so much of fracas, are translated into application by real laws-

(1) Consult the Recidivists, by Joseph Reinach, dedicated to the Franc-Mason Quentin. See also the petition of the Freemasons of the lodge of Work and Persevering Friendship of Paris. "We ask-gifts, say the petitioners, that any man or woman convicted for the third time, including previous convictions, for the offense of vagrancy or theft, or expatriated for life to a overseas agricultural penal colony." We know what that means this word colony. Like the men of the Directory, the horamcr^ Today's tools don't kill, they make people die. We can guess what tool murderer will be such a law in the hands of the judiciary current sink all those who will hinder the Freemasons and the Jews.

ment very human. The scale of punishments, which Beccaria and the school of the 13th century wanted to lower, now rises to the proportions of Jacob's ladder.

The Catholic deputies did not consider these things as it should have been; they did not think about defending rights imprescriptible and sacred even in these beings perverted by the current government, systematically deprived of the en-religious teaching that could have helped them get back on their feet after a first fall.

For the Christians of old, the poor man was Jesus-Christ himself, and the rule of Saint Benedict recommends formally to receive the one who presents himself to request-to eat a piece of bread, as if he were the Savior himself. same. At the threshold of the refectory of the Benedictines of Solesmes, we found the Most Reverend Abbot (at the time I came there, It was Dom Guéranger, laden with years and illustrious among all by his knowledge), who presented the ewer to the host and washed his hands. Countless stories from the Middle Ages are the staging of this idea. A wretch in rags sits under the porch of a church, and reaches out to the other-monk; suddenly the humble clothes shine^ and one realizes that it was Christ who was there.

In such a case, today's Catholics, Mr. de Mackau in the lead, would they go find the Freemason Caubetet would they say to him: "This man is poor, he has no home, he offends our sight, send him to die at home French Guiana (1). »

(1) In its issue of August 19, 1883, the Jewish Lantern announced, with triumphal fanfares, that a Franciscan monk" arrested at Briare, had just been sentenced to three months in prison by the court of Gieu. If this monk, as he must do to hear Qdèle from his

280 JEWISH FRANCE

Only four Catholics voted against this law. iniquitous that equates begging with a crime worthy of dead, they are: M[^]i' Freppel, M. Paul de Cassagnac, Mr. Daynaud and Mr. de Mun.

For many, after all, agony in a foreign land-management would perhaps be a deliverance. The proletarians are increasingly pushed between death by hunger and moral necessities, said the powerful thinker whom we we have already mentioned, God brings out the light of necessities of another order. If the Faith is no longer taught by the ear she will be taught by hunger (1)!"

The social revolution has an almost fatal character. Perhaps must be seen, in the conviction that he has of this situation, one of the causes of the Count of Paris's hesitation. He is, one knows, one of the three or four men in Europe who concern the workers' question is born in depth; it does not have, in the principle that it represents, the faith that would be necessary to undertake a social restoration which alone would save the France, and at the same time, he sees, with more clarity-clairvoyance than the politicians of his party, the intensity of the crisis that is brewing.

Work, already slowed down everywhere, will soon almost stop vow, continue to beg for the poor, he will be condemned to new and it can be sent to Guyana. Is this what they have wanted the Catholics of the House? Certainly we. Only they have, for the most part, no personal ideas; they have seen the boulevard newspapers were indignant because the girls cost more expensive when they had to feed pimps, and they formed an opinion on it.

Cl) B. Saint-Bonnet: The French Restoration.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 281

completely, thanks to the competition that the Europe and America.

The Parisian worker has lost the supremacy he had formerly and neighboring peoples tend more and more to move on from our products. This is the lamentable admission that "escapes from all investigations and all reports (1).

The fabrics, the flowers, the gauzes, what was called article Paris, all this, in a few years, will be exclusively-manufactured abroad.

According to the presidents of the trade union chambers, the exportation of Paris articles (tablets, trinkets, lorgnettes, brushes, fans, buttons), which reached, in 1875, the figure of 168,411,000 francs, had fallen, in 1884, to 91,930,000. From 42,189,000 (1875 figure), the exportation of artificial flowers and fashions was reduced, 1884, to 27,602,000. The situation worsened further in 1885.

Most of the furniture today comes from Germany. Magne and Mr. Marins Vachon, in his report to Mr. Turquet, gave us frightening information for us on the progress made by certain peoples. The Russia, for example, which seemed to be forever our tributary for everything related to elegance and fashion, has managed to do almost completely without us. "Furniture, which was one of the most flo- thanks to our trade with St. Petersburg and Moscow has almost completely disappeared from the Russian market.

(1) See V Survey on the situation of workers and art industries, Mr. Marius's Report on Museums and Schools of Industrial Art Vachon, and a volume by the same writer: The Industrial Crisis and artistic in France and Europe.

II iô,

S82 JEWISH FRANCE

In the Survey of the Art Industries, Mr. Beîvaleite states that the export of cars has fallen by ten million to four million. Mr. Pagny- notes that the indus- lace sorting, which employed 30,000 workers in the Calvados, is it in the most complete doldrums. » M, Gar-]>oiit!f^r, president of the chamber of gilders, admits that our workers no longer want to work except for grace and that they are incapable of carrying out what the Germans are doing and the Italians much better and cheaper. Mr. Hamel is obliged to recognize that the sculpture on wood is in full decline.

Here again Jewish theories have borne their logical fruit. ques. Even though he derives all the benefit from it, the Jew despises manual work, workshop and field work; it exclusively admires the broker, the matchmaker or even the actor who is also a sort of intermediary (1). The Christian civilization had guaranteed, ennobled, poeticized the labor, Jewish civilization exploits it by the capitalist Jew and defames him by the revolutionary Jew; the capitalist makes of the worker a serf, the revolutionary, in his books and his newspapers call him a convict.

Compare the atmosphere of ideas in which the proletarians of the past and the atmosphere in which they live those of the present, and you will explain to yourself that, by ana- I;! consequently, the coarseness of the feelings has en- gendered vulgarity in productions.

(1) "When the Church," says Blanc de Saint-Bonnet, "put us on guard against the Jews, against usury, finally against the abuse of the commerce, we didn't want to listen to him. Results: famine in the useful things, abundance in superfluous things, scarcity of masses and ruin, that is to say pauperism.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 283

If YOU had once entered some interior as a worker, you would have found these corporate images there engraved by the care of the trustees and the serving jurors and who represented the patron saints of each body of state. While more or less numerous drawings recalled the main episodes of the saint's life, the details of his martyrdom, others represented the tools individuals of the profession.

These engravings, which were distributed to all members of a brotherhood, constituted a rallying sign common in the same prayers and in the same faith. We hung them in the workshop and the saint, with his halo bright, in his clothes sometimes painted with colors garish, looked at the master and the companion, worker who had already made his masterpiece and still apprenticed it novice work their best.

What would you see today in the same place? caricature worlds that depict drunken priests, women with their backs turned up, scenes of sordid debauchery.

The Church gave the workers the saints of heaven for comrades, the Freemason and Jewish press assimilates them to galley slaves.

By a mysterious operation of the mind, this state of mind different is reflected in material creations. The work, carried out without enthusiasm by a man whose imagination is sullied by ugly readings, saddened by the conviction that his fate does not differ much from that of the forcat, no longer has the delicacy of yesteryear. The hand has become heavy as the thought became low and the fat pornographic and atheist movement of recent years-born, by taking away from our artisans all ideal, took away from them at the same time all their taste.

284 JEWISH FRANCE

To these causes of inferiority we must add competition disloyal who gives herself full rein, thanks to contempt

our trademarks and we put them on products which have nothing French about them.

What authority do you want them to have to complain? representatives like those who invaded our diplomatie? In Vienna, you have Foucher de Gareil, former can-official didat of the Empire, turned servile opportunist, who once stripped a poor private scholar of his work twenty years on Leibnitz, to put on the work of other-his trademark. We send, as consul general in Panama, to help him recover at the expense of the shareholders of the canal, the deputy Lavieille, who has just been branded by the courts for his financial improprieties. In Egypt you had Barrère, elsewhere an ambassador whose niece was sentenced to six months in prison, in Marseille, for having committed countless scams in posing as the Archduchess of Austria; in Rome, You have Gerard.

After the war, when Empress Augusta asked 'a French reader, he was told that it would be impossible to find a Frenchman vile enough to go and fill such a job in Berlin. Gerard offered himself, and half valet, half reader, punished when he was a quarter of an hour late, he accepted this horrible job of smiling at all the sarcassims that were launched against his mutilated Homeland in this palace which resounded, from morning to night, with noisy cries of joy victors. Gambetta, always in search of men so lacking in dignity that one could ask them everything-der, took Gerard into the domesticity of a German sovereign-order to make him a servant of the Republic.

i

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 280

While our workers are crammed into our cities at the search for work which is becoming increasingly rare (1), agriculture is abandoned. In some regions there is no wants to take a farm at any price; the land has lost almost three-quarters of its value. The report of the Society of Farmers of France on the situation in the department of The Aisne contains some distressing confessions on this point.

In the session of February 24, 1884, Mr. de Saint-Vallier noted that in the department of Aisne, formerly still in full agricultural prosperity, the land was depreciated in proportions such as 840 farms or markets of land did not find buyers even for the amount of 7,040 hectares, including 1,250 of smallholdings, remain—would be abandoned and fallow. According to the former ambassador from France to Berlin, half of the region's agriculture would have succumbed five years ago and more than half of this who remains standing would be at all ends.

In the investigation, which Méline refused to make public, Mr. Gentilliez demonstrated that the situation was as disastrous in the constituency of the Marie committee than in the constituency of the Laon comitia; he gave a total of 17 farms, representing 2,270 hectares, abandoned by the operators and that the owners are forced to exploit themselves, of 116 farms, representing 5,563 hectares,

(1) Eq 1861, following the anoexis of suburban municipalities, In Paris there were 36,713 households providing 90,287 destitute people.

In 1877, there was an increase of 3,153 households more.

Today the number of unfortunate people reduced to having recourse to public charity is 180,000.

286 JEWISH FRANCE

abandoned during the lease due to the ruin of the former operator and 1,603 hectares (plus 8 land markets of a unknown capacity) currently lying fallow (1).

What do you think Méline replied? He offered Mr. Gen— You should decorate him with the Agricultural Merit!

In this Republic where everything dies, art, literature, industry, the wine merchants' trade is prosperous alone. The figures provided by the statistics that we called Somewhere this "art of fact-checking" is terrifying.

The annual list of drinking establishments by the administration of indirect taxes, accuses an unprecedented speed in the increase in the number of cabarets.

The figure in 1869 was 366,507

— in 1882 of 376,520

— in 1883 of 402,534

— in 1884 of 415,327

This total does not include timber dealers.
sounds of Paris, the number of which is estimated at 35,000.

(1) The ruin is general. Most of the blast furnaces are extinct. The canuts of Lyon, once so joyful, so active at work, lament before their motionless looms. A long cry of distress arrives from Saint-Etienne, Montluçon, Besançon.

In February 1885, an official investigation, carried out by the Commissioner of Maritime Registration and Ports of Marseille, notes that there are, in the ports of this city, 43 navi-disarmed due to lack of employment, including 30 steamers and 13 sailing ships!

The immobilization of the equipment is estimated at forty million. Thirteen One hundred and fifty individuals were disembarked, most of them sailors and drivers.

In just one week, two thousand workers had to be laid off.
industrial establishments.

JEWISH PARTS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 287

Here, according to the tax return, are the proportions consumption of has increased in recent years alcohol in Paris only:

1877. . .

. 107,481 hectoliters

1878. . ,

. 123,111 –

1879. .

. 125,211 –

1880. . .

. 132,138

1881. . .

. 145,867 –

1882. . .

1883. . .

. 145,467

1884. . .

. 147,935

1885. . .

. 141429 – (1)

The Parisian worker in particular has truly need to drink excessively. Races decline, sons
The most robust of the provinces are quickly worn out in this Paris which corrupts and exhausts. Parisians are born old, are only supported by a nervous force which must incessantly-
to re-soak in alcohol.

We put certain drinks into our bodies, like we would half-sink a dagger into our skin, to to have a sharp tickle, a harsh, violent sensation that stirs, stimulates and shakes. Women, the weak, the sick people inject their arms with morphine, workers prick their noses with alcohol and both really experience-a temporary sense of well-being, an acceleration of movement,
a relaxation at the same time.

The brain craves these tonics more urgently.

(1) Since 1883, we no longer understand, in the introductions of alcool pure, the quantities of alcohol found in alcoholic wines titrated from 15 to 21 degrees.

78S THE JEWISH FRINGE

even though the stomach. Bacchus, who has borne so many names in antiquity, was called Liber as often as Dyonis-sios, he liberates, indeed, he delivers the disinherited from chains of reality, it unties hearts. In a rest stop at cabaret, the worker organizes the world in his own way between two tours; he sees this dream of a chimerical happiness fulfilled which always eludes him, he is in possession of the only ideal that was left to him. Like the Centaur in the Louvre, to which the Genie of drunkenness tied the hands behind the back, the people is the prisoner of alcoholism.

The terrible thing is that it is neither wine nor nameless, a veritable poison.

Masonry seems to have perfected or at least modernized some of its processes. Previously, it used ^ was a lot of Aqua tofana which made disappear so much * of men hostile to the revolutionaries.

The pharmacy, writes the author of Jews and Franks on this subject. Masons^ knows a poison, which she calls aqua tofana, the composition is attributed to a famous Italian poisoner of the name of Tofana who, because of her crimes, was strangled in 1730. This poison is extremely subtle and leaves no trace. One of the Freemasons, which they also call aqua tofana or tophana^ and with a slight change in spelling, is much more dangerous and much more formidable.

This tonic, in the composition of which, it seems, opium and cantharid flies, is as clear as water clearer and has no taste. It attacks the noble parts of the body and, depending on the dose absorbed, it produces various effects, either the instant death, or death at more or less intervals distant; it produces a disease of languor or idiocy or still well without colic, pain or particular symptoms, it leads to a state of weakness and consumption such that science is powerless and death inevitable. It would be, it is said, a

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 289

Freemason, pharmacist in Naples, who is said to have invented this poison, probably by perfecting the already known Aqua tofana. It would have worked only for the sect and probably under orders of its leaders; also the composition of this infernal tonic, which does not is made only in Naples, has remained their secret.

I guess the affiliated doctors found something better. in any case, food poisoning, paj liquids, is a great instrument of the designs of li Masonry. "Do the people," said Campanella, "know what What poison is the potion he is made to drink? The murderers very, more and more numerous, the madhouses full, The ever-increasing suicides attest to the frightening ravages produced by these beverages in which, apart from Water, does not enter any element that is not harmful to health (4).

(1) The number of suicides has more than tripled in fifty years.

The figure was on average, from 1826 to 1830, 1,739; it has raised, in 1883, to 7,213! The increase, which had been only 1 or 2 percent year-on-year, suddenly rose to 7

This total includes a number of children aged fifteen years old, fourteen years old, thirteen years old, twelve years old, and 1 having barely twelve years old!

In 1884, the number of suicides in Paris was 542; it was of 642 in 1885, which is an increase of one hundred for one only year.

"Madness is increasing," writes Mr. Legoyt in the Scientific Review; "it is growing everywhere and faster than the population. The growth-ment of those admitted, for the first time, to asylums, was, of 1871 to 1880, 55 percent, a truly enormous proportion especially compared to the population, which has not increased by more than 4 percent.

The number of insane people treated in asylums was 10,549 in 1833, and 48,813 in 1882.

In January 1801, the department of the Seine provided 946 alienated.

The 17th

290 L.\ JEWISH FRANCE

Faced with this lethal alcoholism, one begins to think of the time when the Wine Criers were at the same time Grievors of the dead and went away, dressed in a dalmatic strewn with intertwined bones, announce the name everywhere of the dead. It is their own death that the merchants today could announce in advance to those to whom They pour the absinthe and the three-six.

The Christian kings had made this question the subject of their most constant solicitude. Listen to Louis Blanc, himself-even, whose testimony will not be challenged.

Mixed with religion, he writes, the corporations of the Middle Ages had drawn the love of religious things, but to protect the weak was one of the most dear concerns of the legislator Christian. He recommends probity to the measurers: he forbids tavern keeper to never raise the price of high-quality wine, as a drink of the people; he wants the goods to be shown in the open market;

As of December 31, 1883, there were 8,907, an additional 7,961.

Thus, in 83 years, the population of the insane has increased sixfold in proportions which represent an average annual increase of 95 inhabitants of the Seine has barely tripled.

In the Vosges, the department represented by the Ferry brothers e\ by Méline, where Freemasonry, naturally all-powerful, everything can be done and everything is allowed, madness has made such pros although, in the session of August 1884, the General Council, consider- rant the large number of cases of mental alienation that occur in the country, expresses the wish: "that the Government severely represses- the frauds that are committed daily on alcohol, and presents a law amending the one which allows retailers of drinks to open their establishments.

"Crime," says Voltaire, great administrator of the Republic, spreads more and more, like a rising tide, and whose often the waves are red. Eu 187:ii, the total number of crimes and crimes tried in France amounted to 20,000; ten years later, in 1882, it exceeded 81,000! And it is Paris, of course, which provides the most strong contingents to the army of evil.

i

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 29i

that they may be good and loyal, and that the poor may to have his life at the best price, the merchants will only have after all the other inhabitants of the city permission to buy food(1).

If you consult any Passy or official economist, he would tell you solemn nonsense- nades on the mechanism of exchanges. The truth, like you can realize this with the help of your only reason, is that Saint Louis was very economical policy by directly linking the producer and the consumer; he placed, face to face, the two represent- feelings of work by relegating the inter- mediator, the parasite.

The current organization being Jewish is naturally the counterpart of the Christian organization of Saint Louis. In the wine trade, as elsewhere, we have made disappear- to see all these little houses whose sign sometimes centuries-old, a guarantee of good reputation and tradition probity, was a kind of coat of arms. The Jewish system destroyed both the guarantee of the individual honor of the trader- cient and the collective guarantee of the corporation to substi- kill all this with the vagueness of an anonymous company.

The number of crimes committed by young people aged sixteen to the number committed by girls of the same age increased from 1,046 to 2,839.

(1) All past regulations reveal these concerns of humanity, of vigilance for the little ones. The ordinance of the Book of Trades on Saracen carpets takes care to guarantee, with a delicate foresight, the health of the poor woman, of which our civilization has made a beast of burden.

"Remember that no woman should work in the profession for periz that they are; because when a woman is fat and the profession des-pieced she could bechier in such a way that her eufadl sendt perish and for many other perishes which are there and stink, future, for what they looked at because they should not open it.

292 THE JEWISH FRINGE

Today the liquid trade belongs to some-some big sponsors, more bankers than merchants of wine, which they hold in their hands, in a vassalage absolute, second-rate establishments. The merchant in retail is little more than an employee, a front man; he manages what is called a management; he cannot address himself elsewhere when it is served badly, because, usually, the rent is paid directly-by the store's suppliers. A debit can have five or six successive bosses, you will find there al-days the same liquids taken from the same manufacturers.

The wine trade has therefore become a trade of chemicals where all the inventions are tested tions, where gallization, petiotization, alu- are practiced swimming, salting, sugaring, plastering, where we combine the coloring matters of all kinds, the ingredients of all nature.

We can guess what disastrous influence this chemistry has exerts on public health. Natural wines, in fact, have principles of assimilation and the excesses themselves with them have only minor drawbacks (1). You have seen in Burgundy, for example, winegrowers whose face is rubicund, whose face has taken on the colors of the vine autumn; they are always cheerful, healthy, lively very old. Beverages made with essences, on the contrary, do not assimilate, they have the action of real poisons, they cause attacks of delirium tremens, fits of frenzy, refinements of ferocity of which man is hardly responsible.

(1) See on this subject the excellent report by Doctor Lancereau on alcoholism, read at the Academy of Medicine, at the session of November 17-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 29/^\

Take, if you wish, the sweeteners, to which they are particularly dedicated two zealous democrats from Hérault. Sugaring, as we know, is done by glucose. Now, we are told the report on the work of the Municipal Laboratory for in the year 1882, "the fermentation of starch sugar gives birth to a certain proportion of amyl acid of which the harmfulness is greater than that of wine alcohol. From there faster drunkenness, immediate discomfort, shaking-nervous system that regularly follow daily use wines treated using the Gall and Petiot method.

It would have seemed logical that the democrats, those who de-the friends of the people declare on every occasion, exaggerate even severity against traders who, to enrich themselves-chir, poisoned the working classes (4). Isn't it not doubly precious this health of the worker for which the least illness is ruin, shame for the his own, the hospital? Who would not feel moved by seeing the stories of all the frauds of which the unfortunate people are victims-which shameless merchants, maddened by the love of gain^ give fake goods in exchange for money who is true? Is there an honest man who is not the opinion of Alphonse Karr who, starting from this just principle that money is the equivalent of merchandise, demand

(1) The Israelites, to preserve themselves, take very wise precautions; they only drink wine whose purity is certified by a rabbi. We read at every moment in the Archives announcements like this:

Jules Simon

Special brand

Under the supervision and with the authorization of Mr. Kahn, Rabbi of Nîmes, successor of M. Aron.

Why don't Catholics ask the local priest ability to guarantee the wines we send them?

294 JEWISH FRANCE

that we punish the one who makes faax wine of the same penalty than the one who would make counterfeit money?

Freemasons don't think like that. Dumbing down through adulterated alcohol is one of their main means of acc-tique, in this respect, like the attacks of which the Laboramunicipal building was the subject.

The Municipal Laboratory is headed by an eminent who has, what was called in the 18th century, "the passion of public good.)) Incorruptible, which makes it an originality to our time, Mr. Girard has further arranged to even put out of a position to condescend to requests, to recommendations, to unfair demands whose accoun-Republican city councilors. He is admirreliably supported by a man as active as himself, Mr. Dupré, and by a legion of young scholars to whom the modest emoluments from their position as inspectors allow-are trying to complete their medical studies.

In a few years this Laboratory has obtained important results; it shed terrible light on the perils that threaten-the workers; he even stopped completely,
some falsifications more deadly than others.

Here is the number of analyses since 1881:

In 1881. . 6,517

In 1882 10,929

In 1883 14,686

In 1884 16,504

In 1885 16,184 (1)

(1) Of this total, only 6,962 ecijcUJUiluiKs were declared good or fair, 9,222 were recognized as poor. These figures are not enough-

JEWISH PAIUS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 205

The general proportion was, at the beginning, 50 percent bad on milk, 59 percent on wines. Thanks to careful monitoring, she had dimiclouded by almost half. Since the success of the Municipal Council, who succeeded in preventing the publication of the results of the analyses, the proportion has returned to what it was at beginning and, presumably, will increase further.

Instead of encouraging these beneficial operations of increato ment the attributions of this real Committee of Saiut public, the deputies of the left feared to see the return to reason the brains of the unfortunate proletarians that they

ly, brutally, shamelessly, the party of poisoning—
They organized a kind of union to guarantee to the wine merchant his dishonest profits, a ma-Fraud Insurance Fund against Punishment.

For the first time, Gambetta chaired a meeting who frankly set himself this contemptible goal. After the death of the leader of opportunism, Edouard Lockroy resumed the deal that seemed good to him and, in the meeting that took place place in the month of March 1883, at the Cirque-d'Hiver, he was surrounded of all politicians belonging to the Freemasons-nerie.

On the platform, we noticed next to him:

Raieul they do not have to prove what active surveillance the ccmirierce current must be the olijet?

The Laboratory transmitted 4,530 cases of falsifications, 2,207 of which resulted in convictions.

1,500 cases were closed without further legal action.

I assume that my readers know French and that they understand take what this last sentence means: "The authors (of falsifications, which belonged to Masonry or which were influential voters" escaped the punishments they deserved."

296 JEWISH FRANCE

MM. Brelay, Spuller, Barodet, Frébault, Anatole de la Forge, Cadet, Greppo, Gantagrel, Farcy, deHeredia, Lafont, Tony Révillon, Beauquier, Pelletan, Peytral, Gourmaux, Mud, Rousselle, Colonel Martin, Amouroux, de Ménorval, Delabrousse, Robinet, Dreyfus, Hamel, Marsoulan, Guré, JobbéjDuval, Deligny, Hovelacque, Ranc, Erjies Lefebvre, Germain Casse, etc.

From the point of view of the note to be taken, this quiet impudence is perhaps one of the most characteristic symptoms characteristics of the baseness of soul of these republican deputies.
What generous words a man could have spoken truly worthy of this beautiful title of friend of the people! What noble accents, he could have found to say to this audience popular: "Do not degrade yourself by drunkenness! Think of everything that is swallowed up in the slaughterhouses, to the woman, to children waiting for their weekly wages.

Among the flatterers of the people who appear in this list, pledge that the poorest servants of our campaigns. At least these favorites of the multitude could have said: "People, since you want to drink, we will make sure that we do not poison you, that we do not does not earn a scandalous fortune in a few years at the expense of your health.

From all these mouths came only a cry of encouragement—ment to the falsifiers and distillers of poison, a cry of disapproval against the institution whose aim was to preserve the worker's life.

The shameless way in which some speakers, like the Jew Lyon-Allemand, publicly outrage the truth in these meetings is unimaginable. It is stated, for example, that the Laboratory hinders trade by demanding an average of 10 degrees of alcohol and 20 grams of ex-dry line.

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 297

— Champagne wine does not reach this average, we add triumphantly.

However, these arguments are absolutely false. When the wine examined is declared natural by the seller, we compare the sample taken from the wine of the same vintage and, if it is found similar, we perfectly admit that it has only 8 and even 7 degrees. When the depositary does not want to indetermine the composition of so-called blended wines, we apply it to it that the habits of Parisian commerce, that we are well forced to tolerate by force of circumstances, some reprehensible however sensible they may be, and which consist of wetting with a fifth.

Let us also note that apart from harmful products, The Laboratory does not prevent anything from being sold; it only says to the wine merchants: Do not deceive, announce wine with added water, wine made with starch potato, cognac decorated with a bouquet of ether. In Whoever wants to drink will drink.))

It is this call to the most basic loyalty that revolts the Republicans who organized these meetings. They have won the case, in any case, and since the month of July 1883, the Laboratory is forbidden to officially employ cially the bad and harmful mentions. In 1884, Lyon-Allemand, responsible for the report to the Municipal Council, even voted for the attachment to the Prefecture of the

(1) The City Council is so at heart with the falsifications that, in the session of March 9, 1885, he expressed a wish for the repeal of paragraph 4 of article 15 of the decree of February 2 II 17.

298 JEWISH FRANCE

Isn't all this very Freemasonry? Men who refuse to the poor dying person, in a hospital, the cordial of some good word from the priest which comforts him and encourages it, are they not logical with themselves in refusing the workers the cordial of a glass of real wine who will give him a little relief from his fatigue? "Woe to the poor—" "Vre!" said the opulent Lockroy. Only the rich will be entitled to to have a little ideal in the soul, a little warmth in the estomac, a little hope for up there, a little cheerfulness healthy here below." If we could put the air we breathe in exploitation, these crooks would form a union to prevent the poor from profiting from it.

In the absence of air, our brave republicans had the idea to exploit the debris thrown at the terminal. Who would have imagined that a so-called democratic government could have only—the thought of prohibiting the disinherited from collecting to support their miserable existence, the rejects of the beautiful city, to pick up the crumbs of the party? This implacable harshness is hardly even conceivable. men of the day did not shrink from the odium of this measure.

The deal was good. According to the most moderate calculations—

1852, which deprives public poisoners of their electoral rights. In a meeting organized on March 20, 1885, at the Cirque-d'Hiver, under the presidency of Mr. Tony-Révillon, the deputies present were—committed to bringing this matter before the House. In the session of the General Council of July 6, 1885, Mesureur, the re-baptizer of streets, took up the cause of those who baptize wine, and Q^t vote a proposal to relieve them of their convictions.

This was not enough for this master of the time, who was called King Mastroquet. In the 1885 elections, there was a candidate from the wine merchants and millers, Auguste Hude, and thanks to Freemasonry he was named I

Here, the number of rag-pickers can rise to Paris, fifty thousand. Chacim earns, on average, three francs per day, or rather per night; but, by putting the things at the lowest, by fixing the average at two francs, we find that fifty thousand times two francs makes one hundred a thousand francs a night. One hundred thousand francs a night is three million per month and thirty-six million per year.

Thirty-six million was a pretty penny for people who think that money has no smell. At first glance it was claimed that an English company had offered to benefit from these thirty-six million which made live forty thousand human beings. The government indignantly rushed to have the Havas agency declare, that there was not one company, but several companies.

On the main case, the small case of the re-containers. A house on rue du 4 Septembre, whose company name hid two Prussian Jews, flooded Paris with leaflet to announce to the townspeople that those who would buy from her would now be safe from reports that were going to rain down on the simple mort-such. Faced with the protests that arose, they pretended to open an investigation but I will not surprise you by telling you that it brought no results. The thing was yet clear... The circular said:

Any owner who can prove the purchase of a me- box light to black house om swccwr,s'a/e will be exempt from contraven-:ion.

Any owner, on the contrary, who cannot give this justification, will incur the consequences of the prefectural order-toraledes tomorrow.

Either the newspapers had published a false piece or the merchants had made, without right, a promise which carried out a fraudulent maneuver, or high-ranking employees of the city had allowed themselves to be corrupted. In all three cases it had to continue.

300 JEWISH FRANCE

We stopped because we would have been forced to blame Alpliand, a Jew of origin still (Alphanderry, Halphen) for which the Municipal Council has affections that we includes (1).

beautiful that a vote count remained famous had to immortalize later, did not have a word of pity for the unfortunate rag-pickers. It was the Duke of La Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia who honored himself infinitely by taking in hand the cause of the unfortunate people who were condemned to die of hunger and defending it in front of satiated republicans who, sup-predicting in advance the part they would be given in the affair, laughed out loud as he spoke.

The young people resisted as best they could. The old people

(1) See the contrast of these Jewish natures. This man, who has his largely to an extent that is a real assassination, is full of heart for his family. The thought that a tree could bother his daughter drives him mad. The Intransigent has now recounted this trait which is characteristic :

"At the corner of Place de la République and Rue de Bondy, on the sidewalk where the Hive was located, a tree ended the line which starts at Boulevard Saint-Martin.

"Mrs. Kahn, daughter of Mr. Alphand, lives at number 24 rue de Bondy. As the tree obscured the view of the square, this lady did not find nothing better than to ask his father, Mr. Alphand, to have it removed.

"The order was given on a Saturday, and on Sunday morning this order was executed.

"Place de la République has one less tree; its regularity is compromised; but Mr. Alphand's daughter has satisfied his caprice.

"Citizens, bow down and pay the bill."

Jewish Paris and French society 30 1

slept in their huts and waited for death. Father Laplace, who had not eaten for forty hours, which, whatever Poubelle may think, is hard for a 74-year-old man, went out like a candle on the-what we blow, at a meeting in the Grafl'ard room (1). The Father Gouri, driven from his hovel in the city of Bleuets, ven,- said his rags to pay his debts and went to hang himself in a garnish on the boulevard de Belleville. An old woman wrote to a radical newspaper asking Poubelle "to to have her shot down.

This hatred of the poor, of the worker, which is without example in history, takes all forms. The republics-to push the proletarian onto the Jew so that the latter makes his prey more easily. Everything is good for the Jew, in fact; in deplundering France on a large scale with loans and so-financial companies, he did not abandon sordid usury

(1) The burial of the old lover of shadows, victim of the rapacity of the republicans, had a particularly touching character. A The poet, Mr. More, read a piece of naive verse at the tomb. naturally incorrect, but some passages of which were moving- Here are some of these verses, as a curiosity:

•This man died in the midst of your sorrows;
While gathered, honest workers,
You were trying to dry up the source of your tears,-

The blood ran cold in his veins.
He was an old wrestler; like you, he lived
Under the black sky, in the midst of the cold and dark nights;
Like all of you, he was an old lover of shadows

That labor, alas! vanishes (?)
Hail to this old man who falls head over heels!
His death casts a mournful shudder through your hearts.
May she stop the terrible storm

Who rises to the sky on the horizon!

302 JEWISH FRANCE

of old, pawnbroking. Such a banker, member of a aristocratic circle, is associated with the lower-class Gobsec who ransom the poor devils with advances on the recognitions of the Mont de Piété.

A German Jew, named Neuburger, had, some time ago- a few years, given a very considerable extension to this trade; he had created several branches in Paris that Timothy Trimm called the Neuhurgiennes. Unfortunately- Fortunately for Neuburger, it still existed at that time. a shadow of justice, we looked in his books and he was immediately granted a sentence of 2 months in prison.

Today the Neuhurgiennes are thriving. rity. A socialist newspaper, La Bataille, in its issue of January 28, 1884, gave some precise details on the operation of these agencies; they are linked between they too, by a sort of union.

The association has offices in each neighborhood; offices on the balconies: Sale and purchase of recognitions from the Mont de Piété. Elsewhere, there are filthy shops, dens of fences. to the shady stalls; second-hand shops of Jewish-style second-hand dealers.

The example cited by La Bataille is like the specimen of the way of operating which varies little.

A victimized citizen came to complain yesterday. Penniless, he enters an agency located around rue Lafayette. The street does not do anything to the thing, theft is the same in any neighborhood-third. He is given two francs on a reconnaissance. Then a small yellow bulletin, which we have available to anyone-who might find it of interest to consult it. This bulletin is called: purchase invoice. The loan is disguised. After a month, this citizen returns, he pays the new fees. The interest is 20 percent, which makes 210 percent for the year. We are far from the rate legal which is six. When, fifteen days later, he wants to withdraw-

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 303

to gain his recognition, after having made him come back seven times, he declares that she is lost.

Armed with his little yellow piece of paper, the citizen calls the lender before a commissioner. The lender then gets his hands on his heart, and claims to have bought recognition. As proof, he shows the word: Pmje, applied on the receipt and this notice printed on the Prerequisite: In order to avoid any misunderstanding, I remind the seller that the above transaction stipulates a sale and not a loan. Thanks to This treacherous line, pawnbrokers can fool people of all their customers.

The deal is still excellent. One could not imagine how much the poor hold on to certain objects, witnesses eloquent and silent of the mourning and joys of domestic life-tick, rattle or child's cup purchased in more prosperous days, the wedding ring. Some agree to pay double interest on condition that will give them a certain period of time to withdraw the recognition-session.

Elegant bankers provide the capital that is necessary and come, from time to time, to realize of what they produced.

It is not uncommon to see cut-throats stop in front of them where so deal - from Turk to Moor - with these sorts of affairs, the crew of some important personage. It is the financier settling his accounts. He has, in Paris, a certain number of en-rights where individuals at his command watch for the needy who gements.

When the day has been full of tears for others, that is to say full of gold for him, the banker, arrives all cheerful in some salon, and when the baron is announced of Haceldama, all the Christian women begin to mince

30 î THE JEWISH FRANC

and to smile: "The amiable baron, how kind of you to have come,
and our very dear baroness, how is she (1)?

Asked by some naive deputies on the issue of
to know if the administration could not carry out itself
even these loans on recognitions, André Cochut, the friend

(1) Credit auction houses, which sell each item on double or triple its value, are one of the forms of usury Jewish. In the Cry of the People of October 13, 1884, we will find some-some interesting information about the Schwariz house and the House of the Good Genius, directed by Gabriel Lévy, assisted by his cousins Isaac and Albert Lévy. For the acts of blackmail, exercised on the unfortunate employees of the security agents, we send back to the Laplacette affair (book Life), which is the model of the genre.

Radical newspapers, when by chance they are not in hands of the Jews, can say many things that would not dare not to say and that, moreover, the Catholic newspapers do not know, who remain too far outside of real life.

One will read with interest, in the Cry to the People of March 2, 1885, a study on the Jew Manasseh, whose specialty is exploiting the ebnists who have no advances:

"You need 1,000 francs, you bring furniture at Manasseh, representing a value of more than double, and Manasseh gives you 1,000 francs – less forty or so fifty francs retained for interest.

"Then one of three things happens: You are lucky; your furniture is for sale – cheap – please go to the checkout to receive the balance due to you; your furniture is not sold, but you found 1,000 francs to repay the loan that Manasseh did to you, and you come to take them back, provisionally-ment; finally, your furniture is not sold, you have not found 1,000 francs. Good evening, furniture! Manasseh is in it, by sales contract with a right of redemption, the legitimate owner.

The current organization, we cannot emphasize this point enough, yours. Formerly, the Church condemned usury, in theory, and the arm secularism struck the usurers. Today, the Academies, which are types of secular churches, declare that the credit thus practiced is the most beautiful institution in the world, and the police and legal force is put at the service of the usurer. As soon as those who, even in our dishonored judiciary, are still the representatives of Bischoffsheim, replied that this was impossible in any case impossibility. How do the Jews do it then?

JEWISH PARIS AND FRENCH SOCIETY 300

How will it end? We don't know. I mean that we do not know in what circumstances exactly this occurs will lead to a debacle that is inevitable. The people are waiting and is organized. It is no longer in the narrow alleys, in the dirty suburbs of yesteryear, that one must go and study the Revolution. She lives in the beautiful, modern-looking neighborhoods, these areas around rue Monge, for example, where poverty seems colder and more terrible still in the midst of this brand new building decor, where nothing speaks of the past.

The links that bound the man of old to this church where he was baptized, where the last prayers had been said about his own, to the boss who had been the friend from his father, to the good Brothers who had raised him, are broken for a long time. The being who is there is a modern, a nihilist, he holds to nothing; he is hardly more patriotic than the three hundred thousand foreigners, that the blindness of our rulers have allowed to pile up in this Paris of which they will be the masters when they want; he will not revolt like ancestors under the influence of some passing excitement-manages, under an atmospheric influence in some way which heats up heads and causes instant barricades to appearment. Any monarch to whom one would have to to reproach half of the infamies, the prevarications, the countless shames accumulated by the current regime, would have unconscious of a different state of affairs, the Jew will have re-constituted a serfdom of a particular order; he will rant with impunity RécoDomie by the financial company, the best part of the salary daily by the wine merchant, the sale - to credit⁴, the purchase dc⁵ recognitions.

306 JEWISH FRANCE

heard for a long time the ement roaring at the gates of his palace. In reality all this leaves the mass deeply his project of social revolution and waits for the moment to rush towards Paris by these great avenues which seem-able to carry rivers of people.

In a society given over to all kinds of covetousness, where the feeling of right and wrong has almost entirely gone, where those who suffer are trampled underfoot without pity by those who enjoy, the final catastrophe, I re-farts, is only a matter of time. He is not a being who thinks, who does not foresee the outcome. Chat with some religious person who follows from afar this sinking ship and then read some very boulevard columnist, well frivolous, very atheist and they will tell you the same thing.

A day that is perhaps not far away, writes Aurélien Scholl, the boiler will burst. Large credit houses will burst like overheated balloons; there will be nothing but ruins around us: Paris will be Ischia after the earthquake. It will not be not yet the end of the world, but at least it will be the end of this world there.

I won't be one of those who regret it.

Me neither.

No doubt we must pray for these improvident people, these corrupted and these fools. And yet, if we are supplicants transformed into judges, if we were told: "In the sin-truth of your conscience, pronounce on these men for which you have just implored this God whose name is Mercy!" What would we answer? Shouldn't we not to say under penalty of rendering a bad judgment: "This world deserved to perish, it is punished justly, that its destiny be fulfilled!"

BOOK SIX

THE JIIIIYE PERSECUTION

You conclude that it was wrong to shoot Im poor scumbags in 1871. We are of the opinion on the contrary. We even believe that use has been made of too much consideration towards them. They did not not stolen.

Eugene Mayeb {Lantern}.

THE FMIÎCS-IIÂÇONS

The war against Catholics. – The rights of free thought. – Special Character of the Present Persecution. – Jewish Origin of Freemasonry. – A transparent allegory. – The Temple of Solomon. – Freemasonry by adoption. – Verses folichons. – Judith. – The Widow's Sons. – A financier per- security guard. – Cousin, president of the Supreme Council. – The man Rothschild straw. – Culpable weakness of certain Catholics liques. – How Freemasonry is recruited. – The sign of de- braided. – Tirard and conversion.– The lightness of a Lowton.– The Gold Mines of Uruguay. – A First-Class Tiler. – Urf Masonic burial. – Guillot or the Sage of Greece. – A blow from the Venerable's gavel. – The virtues of the mayor of Brest – A pleasant minister of commerce. – Masonry in the^ prisons. – A sun worshipper.

THE FEANCS-MASONS

WHAT are the instigators, instruments and com- accomplices in the persecution that began with the expuls- sion of religious saints, which then attacked the soul of the child, who finally took away from the unfortunate dying man in a hospital his last consolation and his supreme es- hope, who tried, had a word, by all means to debase and degrade France? How does this campaign has it been undertaken and pursued? This is the study that we propose in this sixth book.

Free thought itself is not at issue here. of charming hours we spent with brilliant minds closed to these beliefs which are enchantment and the joy of our life! How long have we been ourselves, admiring the social role of Christianity, not to admit the divine side of its dogmas, to live in outside the Church? It pleased God, in his mercy infinite, to call the poor writer by his name, to exercise on him this irresistible and gentle pressure to which one cannot don't resist, to tap him friendly on the shoulder, dare- I could say without fear of being disrespectful, because this Christ, who is the master of heaven and earth, is in reality the most sure and most faithful of friends. It is up to us to thank and bless but without attacking those who, while not sharing not our opinions, do not infringe on our rights as citizens, of men and French people.

That great intelligences have remained closed to a such light, it surpasses imagination, it is however-dant. Peer of England, handsome, rich, laden with the greatest gifts rarer, Byron blasphemes the God who granted him all these benefits. Tireless worker, honest in his life, pure in his morals, Proudhon does not want to believe that a another existence will reward him for these virtues up there, and It is to Satan that he addresses a hymn of love. Delacroix, the admirable author of so many religious paintings, de- turns on his deathbed so as not to hear the sound of bells; he prefers to sink into the dark than to go look at how many figures, which he has made half visible by his brush, are even more beautiful than his genius has could not conceive them.

Before being touched by grace, how many years Littré, so honest, so upright, however, did he not struggle against the evidence? Who does not remember this pretty scene: the old man fell asleep on his task, his wife passed it to him around his neck an image of the Virgin, he wakes up, sees the medal and returns it to his companion with a smile.

Take Jules Soury among contemporary philosophers. In his Breviary of Materialism, which is a masterpiece, of work of criticism and erudition, he brought, in my opinion, the best arguments for Religion by noting that for five thousand years philosophy has always been the same notch, that she always repeats the same thing, that she turns in the same circle, that she could not explain anything; he de- showed that Darwin had only taken up the theories of the adaptation to Anaximander who himself copied Anaxa- gore, which plagiarized Empedocles. The author is no more Christian for this. This man, who is a valiant worker, he too, willingly admits, with Schopenhauer, that life is a bad trick that the great Unconscious has played on us.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 311

Again, we have neither to judge hearts, nor to search the reins. Stirrers of words, builders of systems, geniuses lost by irony or obscured by or- Gueil, free thinkers of all shades have nothing to see with the wretches who throw an old man out of his home because he doesn't think like them, or who steal the bread of a poor priest. Littré, even before his conver- Zion, Vacherot, protested with disgust against these infamies; Ask Jules Soury how he judges men like the Gonstans and the Cazot, and you will see what will answer you.

In reality, the fight against the beliefs of the majority of the French was not a claim of free thought, but the persecution of three religions wanting to oppress them another. If the Jews, confused with the Freemasons, distinguished themselves by a special hatred against the One they had crucified, if they were at the head of the movement, if, through their newspapers, they spread the news to psoljfh E the most ignoble slander, they were powerfully condemned by the Protestants who, also, by a singular illogic-bind, resented Christ because they felt coun-liable to him.

Mr. Eugène Lamy, who is, I believe, the author of a very remarkable and very noted church, the Republic in 1883, has perfectly discerned what is special about the Freemasonic persecution.

It was soon recognized, he wrote, that Freemasonry is a religious order in revolt, when this revenge took place or appeared at once the cruelty of confessional struggles, the calm relentless priestly hatred and corruption of the mind monasticism turned into a science of persecution.

312 JEWISH FRANCE

It is therefore necessary for us to stop for a while on Masonry. We do not, however, intend-tion to study it in detail; others have done so before us. At least we will try to highlight the character-all Semitic territory of the institution and to specify the form particular that it has taken nowadays.

The Jewish origin of Masonry is manifest, and the Jews cannot even be accused of much dissimilarity. mulation in this circumstance. Never a clearer goal, in fact, was not indicated under a more transparent allegory. It took all the ingenuity of the Aryans not to com-take that by inviting them to unite to overthrow the old society and rebuild the Temple of Solomon, we con-was to ensure the triumph of Israel.

Open any ritual, and everything tells you about the Judea. Kadosch, the highest grade, means holy in Hebrew. The seven-branched candlestick, the ark of the covenant, the acacia wood table, nothing is missing from this reconstruction-figurative tution of the Temple. The Masonic year is almost closely regulated on the Jewish year; the Israelite almanac bears 5446*^ year of creation, the Masonic almanac 5884' year. The Masonic months are the Jewish months: Adar, veadar, nissan^iyar^ sivan, tammouZj a?^, eloul,tischri.

We only have to open the Directory of the four ob-French traditions with Masonic ephemerides of the F.*. Pierre Malvezin, to see that F.'. Hebrard, director-
 The author of Le Temps, was born on January 1, 1834, in the 11th month Masonic, that is to say in the month of ^ebef/i; the F.*.
 Gompayré came after him, on the 3rd of that same month.
 F.*. Jules Claretie was born on the 3rd of the month of Kislev which cor-
 I respond to December 3.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 3!3

December 3rd is the anniversary of the Battle of Hohen-linden, but for the Freemasons, among whom everything patriotism is extinguished, the birth or death of a Brother has another importance than the most consithe derables of history. May 19, the day of the Battle of Rocroy, they celebrate the death of Brother Delord, editor of the Century, and the 20th of the same month, the day of the death of Christo-phe Colomb, they celebrate the birth of Brother Rochelant, lawyer at the court of Paris.

Isn't it shameful for a man like Jules Claretie, who is a worker, who has a talent, not brilliant no doubt, but seriously, to join, to have some more advertisements, to this evil gang which is spreading everywhere traps for our poor priests?

You will tell me that this, after having been useful in the days-nals to the F.*. Claretie, and having made him a director of the Théâtre-Français, will not prevent him from being a member of the Academy, on the contrary. Catholics will vote for the former editor-tor of Time instead of giving their voices to some brave man, who will have tried to defend the faith of the ancestors.
 No matter! In Claretie's place, I would blush to find myself on such ephemerides in the company of F.-. Lyon-German, born on the 7th of August, and Brother Cazot, born on 11th of the month of Shebat.

The famous phrase that the initiates exchange between them, and which Mr. Andrieux ridiculed: "the acacia is for me known, » also relates to the most distant traditions Jewish. Acacia, a Freemason answers to a question posed in V Intermediate, is the golden branch of the initia-

(1) Intermediate, June 10, 1885.

modern tion; it is for this and by this that one is a Mason, when one has penetrated its secret. According to Holy Scripture, this tree often referred to as shittah (or rather riel shittim) was considered sacred among the Hebrews; at the command of Moses, the tabernacle, the ark of alliance and all the religious utensils were composed of this wood, and the prophet Isaiah recommended, in turn, to the Israelites, upon their return from captivity, to take care of to plant in the desert cedars and acacias {shittim) whose usefulness and pleasure must be incontestable to them

Look, if you will, at the engravings of an ancient ritual of high grades (1), you will recognize all the symbols of the old Law. You will see Moses and Elijah there emerging from a cloud of fire, while on a banner we read: Set the captives free. Passwords are Judas and Benjamin- It is only about Adonai, from the fountain of Siloam, from Zerubbabel, who comes to ask also that the captives be set free, and that they be allow them to go and rebuild the Temple of their God.

Study the admissions ceremony, and you will believe yourself-ground in Jerusalem.

D. – Very respectable Brother, First Warden, are you Grand Architect?

A. – Mighty Master, I have seen the great light of the third apartment.

D. – Where were you received as Grand Architect?

A. – In the upper room and the middle room

D. – Why do you call it that?

(1) The secret pillages of the high grades of Masonry revealed or the true Rosicrucian, in Jerusalem..

JEWISH PERSECUTION 315

A. – Because it was the place where Solomon worked at plan of the Temple with the Superintendent of Works.

D. – What do you do in the rank of Grand-Ar-what is it worth?

the roof of the building, to erect Tabernacles, to furnish them of precious and consecrated ornaments.

D. – What are these ornaments?

A. – The Ark of the Covenant, supported by two Cherubim who cover with their wings the bronze table of holocausts, that of the Loaves, and the seven-branched Candlestick

D. – What does the Ark of the Covenant contain?

A. – The Stekonna_, who fixed himself between the Cherubim who cover her with their wings in the Holy of Holies, on the day of the Dedication, where he delivered his oracles.

D. – What was the main law given by the Stekonna?

A. – The one given on Mount Sinai, kept ever since in the Ark, which is the first written law.

D. – Give me the sign of this law.

A. – It is given by placing both hands on the head, the open fingers, which marks the symbol of the ten commandments.

D. – In what form is the Stekonna represented?

A. – In the form of a quiet lamb, lying down, resting on the Book of Seven Seals.

D. – What wood was the Ark made of?

A. – Of Sethin, incorruptible wood, studded with gold plates.

In the adoption Masonry you also unravel Jewish influence. Adopted Masonry, as we know, is Women's Masonry (1). The receptions are real

(1) César Moreau, in VUnivers Maçonnicjye, tells in particular the reception of a lady Huet, who is a complete frolic. The reunion is opened in the climate garden of Asia, by the very clier brother de Belliucourt, Venerable, and by the charming Sister Delamolle Berlin, a great mistress, enlightened on the climate of Africa and Ame-

31 G JEWISH FRANCE

festivals of the Good Goddess; cantiques or songs which, to use an expression blush a monkey. Let us cite, as an innocent sample, these simply cheerful verses.

EVA CANTIQUÉ

Air: When oxen go two by two Plowing is better.

We are told of England

That all his vocabulary

In Goddam was enclosed (pronounced Goddem);

But in Masonry,

One word has more magic.

Who wouldn't love this word?

Eva, Eva, Eva, Eva! (repeat)

A true Mason will not be

Never snorted at that word!

rique by the very kind and very interesting Gotolandi sisters and Bordeaux, great inspector and depository.

The tall lady, dressed in her ornaments, explains to the app-
The mason learns the meaning of the emblems and sings:

She instructed him in our laws.

Of our rites, of our mysteries;

She told him that all the Brothers,

Always docile to the voice

Of a kind sex and made to please,

Did their homework five times.

At the same time each Brother

Believed he had certainly noticed

That this work and this duty,

That these five knocks were hardly surprising

The young recipient,

Who thought that, for beauty,

It was the least, in truth,

What every good Freemason should do.

THE JEWISH PERSON 317

Happy is the faithful Mason
Who can devote his zeal
To the beauty he cherishes!
But much happier still
When, from a sister he adores^
The tender look told him:
Eva! etc.

Ignorant of our language,, Mondor, in his declining years,
Marry a younger sister.
The poor little woman,
Who believes him to be a Mason in the "amo,
Even if you say it with fervor:
Eva, Eva, Eva, Eva! (repeat).
Old profane is and will be Still deaf to that word (I).

Here it is Judith who plays the main role:

– The recipient, her head covered with a black sheet saupowdered with ashes, arrives at the door of the Temple. She is stopped by a guard who notified the second guard.

He goes to her and says:

D. – What do you want?

A. – I want to speak to the High Priest and the principals of the people.

D. – Who are you?

A. – Judith.

D. – From what nation?

A. – A Jewish woman, of the tribe of Simeon.

(1) Complete Manual of Adoption Masonry or Masonry ladies, by SM Ragon, former Venerable, founder of the three Triuosophes workshops, in Paris, author of the Interpretive Course of

II 18.

318 JEWISH FRANCE

He introduces it between the two columns. The brothers and the sisters remain seated, having their right hand on their heart, left on the forehead and head down to simulate dou-great consternation that was felt in Bethulia before Judith's exit.

The high priest said to the recipient:

D. – What are you asking?

A. – That you open the city gates for me during this night, and let all the people pray for me for five days. Then I will bring you safe news from Bethulia. I beg you not to surrender the city before this time.

The High Priest: "Go in peace, and may the Lord bless you."
YOU! "

She goes out and goes back into the preparation room. EV.e takes off her black sheet, washes herself and puts on her ornaments. She takes a saber in his right hand, and a head of a painted death, which had been deposited while she was in the lodge.

{It is then that we must change the green hanging into red.)

On her return to the dressing room, she shouts at the door: Victoire, Vic-
The guard informed the second supervisor who said to the first; he informs the high priest that someone has shouted twice Victory/ at the door of the lodge.

The High Priest: Show who cried out like that.

A. – It's Judith.

The High Priest: Bring her in; my brothers and sisters^
let's stand up.

Judith is introduced, Praised be the Great Architect of the Universe, which has not abandoned those who hope in it, which has fulfilled through his servant the mercy he promised to the nation of Israel, and who this night killed, by my hand, the enemy of her people" [She shows the skull] (I).

The painful image of defeated Jerusalem thus appears in the foreground in Masonic work. It is the Widow whose scattered sons recognize each other at the ends of the earth shouting: "The Widow's sons are mine!"

The day Jerusalem saw its former grandeur crumble is an unforgettable memory that the lodges take care of to remind constantly.

In the ceremony for the rank of Rose-Croix at this question: "what time is it?" we answered:

It is the first hour of the day, the moment when the veil of the Temple was torn apart, where darkness and dismay spread over the surface of the earth, where the light darkens, where the tools of Masonry broke, where the blazing star disappeared, where the cubic stone was broken, where the word was lost.

Barruel has very well discerned the true meaning of these words:

The follower, he writes (2), who followed in Masonry the progress of his discoveries, does not need new lessons to understand the meaning of these words. He sees that the day when the word Jehovah was lost, was precisely the one where Jesus Christ, this Bis of God, dying for the salvation of men, consumed the great mystery of the Christian religion, and destroyed all other religion, whether Judaic, natural or philosophical. Plus a Mason is attached to the word, that is to say to the doctrine of his

(1) Manual of Adoption Masonry, already cited.

(2) Memoirs to serve the history of Jacobinism.

320 JEWISH FRANCE

so-called natural religion, the more he will learn to hate the other and the consumer of revealed religion; also this word which he has already found in the higher grades is no longer the object of his research in this one; his hatred needs something something more. He needs a word which, in his mouth and in that of his co-followers, usually recalls the blasphemy of the contempt and horror against the God of Christianity. And this word, he finds it in the very inscription affixed to the cross.

We know that these letters, forming the name 7nri, are only the

The Rosicrucian adept learns to substitute the following interpretation: boasts: Jew of Nazareth led by Raphael in Judea^ inter-pretension which makes Jesus Christ nothing more than an ordinary Jew, taken by the Jew Raphael to Jerusalem to be punished for his crimes.

As soon as the aspirant's answers have proven that he knows the Masonic meaning of the inscription Inri, the Venerable One exclaims: My brothers, speech is found again; and all applaud this trait of light by which the Brother teaches them that the one whose death is the great mystery of the Christian religion was only a simple Jew, crucified for his crimes. For fear that this explanation-tion is erased from their memory, for fear that all the hatred with which it animates them against Christ does not die out in their hearts, it They will have to keep it constantly in mind. The Mason Rosicrucian will repeat it when he meets a Brother of his rank. It is by this word Inri that they will recognize themselves, it is the word of the watch which distinguishes this grade.

Sympathy and tenderness for Jerusalem and its representatives-tants; hatred for Christ and Christians: all Masonry-
The shop is here.

So it doesn't take much insight to reknow that Freemasonry is good, as it says Abbot David "of entirely Jewish origin; that the Jews, whose hand is found in all Christian sectsnes, do not cease to appear to us as the first and

JEWISH PERSECUTION 321

the most indomitable leaders of Freemasonry (4). »

From the institution founded by them, the Jews were able to draw a considerable party. Totally powerless to constitute, like the Aryans, a hierarchy based on nobles aspirations of human beings, on patriotic virtues and family, on the feeling of honor and devotion-ment, the Semites excel in dissolving politics: whether financial companies or secret societies They know how to give an appearance of order and seriousness to appetites, with bad instincts combined.

The Masonic association was a framework in which are entered many categories of men who recognized themselves-naked there to a kind of common evil mediocrity: the gullible, the vain, the perverted, too fearful to act all alone and that a spirit of personal guarantee brought to only venture wisely (2).

(1) Bossuet, Port-Royal and Masonry.

See also on this subject: Jewish Masons and The Future or the Modern tolerance.

(2) If we want to understand the means available to the Freemasons, 11 you have to consult the last report, which dates of 1880. At that date there existed, throughout the universe, 138,063 lodges, who had collected, in a single year, four billion contributions voluntary contributions.

The Freemasons were divided as follows:

United States 2673,296

South American States and Brazil. . 4,517,425

Cuba and Puerto Rico 58,516

Asia and Oceania 594,211

Africa, including Egypt 83,320

Europe 6,854,415

Total 14,781,183

Number of women in the lodges. 2,379 ^iG0

Total number of people in the Freemasonry 17,160,643

322 JEWISH FRENCHNESS

Ruled by invisible masters and whom no one suspects—conne, Freemasonry was a kind of Judaism or—green, a kind of bachelor's apartment, office, agency, where Jews fraternized with people they would not have wanted to receive at home. Sheltered behind this war machine which hid him, the Jew was able to accomplish—to do evil, without being responsible, by testifying to Abraham that he was a supporter of tolerance.

After having taken the precaution of first putting at his head personalities whose ambition was exploited and who gave—change the opinion, Freemasonry, once assured of success, she looked for instruments that belonged to her absolutely hold by choosing them among the beings who,

of relief so that we can attack them.

Take Cousin who was president of the Supreme Council until the convent of October 1885. He was, in appearance, the most powerful man in France; in reality, he is a thin character, very humble servant and man of Rothschild straw. Administrator of Panama (1), ins-

(1) Freemasonry naturally plays a major role in the launch of this problematic Panama affair, that the days-Conservatives never tire of recommending to Catholics liques, repeating in all tones: "the great Frenchman here, the great Frenchman over there."

According to a letter published in the Matin newspaper on August 28, 1883, the lodge Amenity even seems to find that the Guarantor of Austria's friendship Hungary really pushes things a bit far:

R.-. L.-. of Amenity
(Founded in 1774)

Or.-, from Le Havre, July 17, 1885.

TT.-. ce.-. F.-.

In his tenancy of obedience, dated July 15, 1855, the resp.-. lodge of the Amé-
The unit has decided to send this circular to the lodges of the Obéd.-.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 3i23

delegated inspector of the Northern railway, responsible for the ser-central vice of exploitation, rich of one hundred and fifty thousand books of income, married to a woman who has a fortune in less equal, interested in the Rothschilds in all beautiful business of this time, it is nonetheless one of æ< subordinate figures in contemporary life that Paris, yet so curious, hardly knows.

He is both a shy man and a maniac of vanity who will end up, in all probability, by complete insanity. Little employee, he was already making a red scarf overflow from the pocket of his frock coat to make people believe that he was decorated, he regrets, without a doubt, not being wild to plant feathers on the skull. Once he got home, he no longer leaves the great Masonic cord, the tabUer, emblems, jewels. Apart from his title of presi-tooth, he adorns himself, in the Masonic calendar, with the sobrito inform them that Mr. V., claiming to be a member of a lodge of i'Or.'. of Paris, requests subscriptions from all the Francs-Miisons

Panama and Suez, printed in chromo-lithography.

We believe we must advise all the Brothers of our LL.-. SS.-. to be presented, before subscribing, with a copy of the said cards, which was not done for us, at the Or.*, of Le Havre, but which can, regularly, be required, the drawing being made, since Most of the subscribers in Le Havre are delivered today.

The means used to achieve this seem to be to procure, by the table of lodges, the addresses of the Masons and to vibrate near them, during a personal visit, the French patriotic fiber-çaise, by means of the name of MF de Lesseps, skillfully produced in the conversation, in order to create a training of some by ie^ others and arrive at a subscription registration.

Please accept, etc.

See also the Archives Israélites of October 22, 1885, on the Jewish colony in Panama, and the community that bears the name of Scheerih Israel.

1

324 JEWISH FRANCE

baroque quet of: Guarantor of friendship of the Grand Orient of Hungary, 0.'. of Buda-Pesth.

Fearful and insolent at the same time, he crawls before the Rothschild, and imposes an iron yoke on his employees who cordially hate him. "Ah! sir! what a blow of rifle!" one of them told me, giving me these details, and I quote the word, not to approve it, but to show the feelings inspired by this so-called hard philanthropist for the little ones. I saw him in the station with his face pale, her eyes worried, she is the complete incarnation of sinister bureaucrat. With that he has qualities, he is classically skilled paperworker. The Rothschilds understood the advantage that could be taken of it and put this cor- around his neck moiré gift that he loved so much.

The whole movement of Freemasonry: intrigues, denunciations-actions against honest Christians, steps to deprive a good man of his place, child abductions, prosecutions using false testimony against ecclesiastics siastics, what we don't know, what we only say to each other very reliable followers - all this came over long periods years leading to the Northern Railway.

puts the parts in a folder, then the folder in a car-your and the cardboard in a secretary fitted with a lock safety. It is the Crime in lustrine sleeves, the Holy-V^ehme sitting on a leather circle, it is Cagliostro in the false collar of Joseph Prud'homme and in the Levite of Wolf-Fart. It is evil loved for its own sake.

What interest, I ask you, can this man have?
ten times millionaire to destroy these beliefs that help
the disinherited to endure life?

The choice was intelligent, moreover, let's admit it. LaFranc-

THE JEWISH PICTURE 325

Masonry and the Catholicism of the people of the world get alongtooth quite well in a common aversion to hum-ilies. Suppose that an unfortunate captain, spending his life in ibnd of mines, a poor wretch of a mechanic or Liiirde-frein, always black with coal or soiled with grease,
I let myself appear in a public meeting, to figure in a movement aimed at transforming read company (1). Conservative shareholders will find It is only natural that he be expelled, that his bread be taken away, that a sign be placed on his booklet to make it recognizable born everywhere this rebel. None of them will follow the advice that comes up so frequently in V Imitation:
"Be interior!"); No one will question and say:
"If I were this man, wouldn't I think like him?"
Cousin was the head of an association that Our Saint-

(1; The prohibition on the agents of the Companies to accept no official function is formal. We remember the circulars published on this subject in July 1884, by Mr. JMaiiiiioii, director (I the Lyon-Mediterranean Company, and by Mr. Noblemuire, diree-
Their from the Orleans Company

Mr. Mauliou's circular reads as follows:

"Following various accidents, I was led to decide, from a generally, that it was appropriate to invite our agents to no longer accept elective office and to immediately resign from those that they would have accepted. I urge you to take the necessary measures necessary to ensure compliance with these instructions, July 16th.

"The director of the Company:
M Signed: Mantion. »

This, of course, is only for the weak. If Mr. Noblemaire publish his circular, started by revoking the republican cumulator-cain Emile Roger, general consillt of the canton of Mont:gnac, deputy of the first constituency of Sarlat and head of the county of the Orléan Company. Here is another one who must have felt disduring the flight of convents

II 19

?)i(j JEWISH FRANCE

Father the Pope reported it "as execrable and dangerous;
It was in the lodges, of which he was the supreme leader, that there were deliberated and decided all revolutionary measures who overthrew, in this country, everything that still held standing. The members of the board of directors of the che-North iron ore (1), the influential shareholders had not while only smiles and cordial handshakes hand for their farm manager. For these Christians of junk, the word of the Vicar of Jesus Christ does not exist;
she is mere verbiage.

The reason for this difference in processes is simple.

Cousin is a gentleman, he earns in an hour what the proletarian, who is punished for not being happy, does not touch that in a year; it is sacred. No one would have dared to say to Mr. de Rothschild, in the living room: "Ah, my dear, you who affect to remain neutral in the religious question-

(1) Here, moreover, is the list of members of the board of directors-lion of the northern iron ore. Although the Jews are largely there presented, there must be some Catholics among them who vaulted at the Church, ?after having overwhelmed with politeness the head of the Frauc-Maçonnie. "We don't know," they probably say to themselves, "what which can happen. We might distribute dividends up there."

Board of Directors: Baron Alphonse de Rothschild.

- Baron de Saint-Didier. - Leon Say. - Gaston Griolet. - Andrew
by Warn. - Valley. -Joseph Hottiuguer. - Alex. Adam. -Baron Alfred de Rothschild. - Baron iNatluniel de Uolhschild. -Baron Gustave de Rothschild. - Viscount of Saint-Pierre. - Baron of Soubeyraa. -Gitbiiel Dehayniu. - Duke of Monchy. -Burlon.

- Count A. de Germlnj. - Count Pillet Wiil. - Frédéric Moreau. - Baudelot.- Adolphe Veines. - Aj^ache. -Baron Arthur
by Rolhscliild. - Marcolle Pinguet.

Let us note that Cousin made no secret of his vile occupations.

Council, which hardly went to Cadeique Street, the second and fourth Tuesday of the first month, gave his audiences; it was there that the employee • the Grand Orient brought the report every morning; that's where oD iic'ûuil tous» ieo di[jlômeo poui lC6 ouvc; LiUJs and the Leuues of l0oCS.

JEWISH PEACE 327

gieuse, why do you keep someone at home?
who presides over the relentless war being waged against us? Would you have you have the same qualms towards an editor of VAnti-Semitic?

We saw this through the example of Cousin, the Freemason. non-Jewish, the instrumental Freemason personifies a particular type; it corresponds to a spec- nature of mind. social, it seems that we are born like that. It is neither the insurgent, nor the fierce leveler who dreams of founding on ruins a better society; it is not the socialist pursuing seductive and dangerous utopias. No, it's a bourgeois, but a particularly vile and low bourgeois.

Never has one seen an imposture like the so-called phi- the anthropology that the Freemasons affect. They could not found a serious charitable work and the Masonic World- icique himself admits:

Whenever we want to enter the domain of creation of charitable and relief establishments, we We fail miserably.

The General Masonic Orphanage provides us with proof of this. more. If our adversaries, the clerics, could measure the futility of our efforts in the way of practical benevolence, they find- would be a beautiful theme to cover us with ridicule.

Comparing the situation of the only establishment created by us, counting at the moment twenty-two years of existence, at the host of institutions by means of which the Church distributes to a people of clients of aid of all kinds, our enemies for- would truly take pity on us.

We hope that the report of the sub-commission- Finance Commission, of which Bro. Leven is president, does not fall to them not under the eyes. It is important for the honor of Free Thought that Freemasonry is not a laughing matter.

What precisely characterizes Masonry is a a feeling unknown to her, a truly diabolical: hatred of the poor. In every poor person, thus as we have already said, the Church orders us to see Our Lord Jesus Christ himself. It seems that the Masonry is in the opinion of the Church and that it hates in poor Christ whom she pursues everywhere with such hatred Jurieuse: "Never enter Tordie," said the F.-. Beurnouville, only men who can introduce you hand and not extend it to you." For Brother Ragon, the pau-verité "it is the hideous leprosy of Freemasonry in France." For Brother Bazot, the poor man, the Mason who stretches out his hand, is an evil genius who obsesses you everywhere and at all times place. "Nothing can save you from his importunity, and his insolence knows no bounds or obstacles. He is at your getting up, at the time of your business, at your meal, at your exit. Better to meet his armed hand of a dagger; you could at least oppose the courage at the assassin's sword.

The Freemason has the cult and love of force as the Jew, he is always with what succeeds. Napoleon P>' has not had no stronger allies than them for a long time, and It is certainly the German Freemasons, who tra-hoisted their homeland for him, that he owed a part of his amazing successes. Under Napoleon III, the Freemasons, after having offered Prince Napoleon the Grand Mastery that the Emperor did not allow his cousin to accept, had Murât and Magnan as grandmasters.

The Masons, those eternal followers of fortune, have set out naturally in tow of Prince Bismarck. Bis-Marck had an interest in destroying this ideal of faith in us. which makes death despised, makes nations invincible; Freemasonry offered to accomplish this task, and accomplishes it almost for nothing, out of need to strive, out of!

THE JEWISH PERSECUTION 329

her natural inclination which leads her to everything which responds to a kind of hateful domesticity that is his doing.

This perpetual adoration for what is strong and rich applies to ioul Enter a Masonic lodge, at the "Clémenté Amitié" which includes the Rothschilds and which belonged to Mayrargues, among the Imitators of Osi-laughs, or in the lodge of Jerusalem of the Egyptian Valleys-yours, among the Hospitallers of Palestine, or at the Scottish Jerusalem, you will never hear anyone demand that the Jewish billions be touched. If someone allowed himself such an impropriety, the brothers, terrified Scliiboletq is the password, with Jakin being the word sacred.

The enemy these valiant men are attacking is the Brother Christian schools or the Little Sister of the Poor, the weak in a word. Against them they are terrible, they write planks against them, they tile, they scratch themselves frantically-exclusively in hand, they exhaust the repertoire of their obscene touching.

This is Ranc, an Imitator of Osiris – in what way does Osiris have could have given such bad examples? – who, on July 17

1879, exhibited in his lodge a sort of map of the establishments-religious institutions to plunder. It was Constans who, on August 17

1880, after the first execution of the decrees, received a palm of "Perfect Harmony" which would have done better to ask for some information about this unfortunate man Puig y Puyg so cruelly stripped by the former minister from the inside (1).

(1) It is always good to remember that Freemasonry declares, on all occasions, that it does not attack Religion and that it

330 JEWISH FRANCE

We still see this Constans, who would have so much reason-sounds of hiding, showing off at a party adoption given on June 27, 1885 in a restaurant in Bois de Boulogne.

This time, a sickening spectacle even for the least difficult-ciles, children are involved in these odious pranks. poor little actors condemned to appear in these saturnales have their faces covered with a veil of white muslin-che bearing a different inscription in yellow letters. On one we read the word fanaticism, on the other: ignorance, on a third: misery. After endless speeches these veils are solemnly removed.

Constans, responding to Mr. Laguerre, declared loudly that it was Freemasonry that had imposed the expulsion of the religious in government.

My colleague, he said, congratulated me just now on the policy that I followed when I was part of the firm, but, I must to say, these congratulations must be addressed as much to you as to me, because it is in Freemasonry, which I entered thirtycalism was the common enemy.

I am one of those who were not afraid to compromise themselves for the fight openly, but what would have been the point, if, as remains foreign to politics. The second article of the constitution is precise on this point:

"In the high sphere in which it places itself, Masonry respects the religious faith and the political sympathies of each of its members. Also, in its meetings, any discussion on this subject is strictly prohibited."

Is it not a case of quoting once again the verses of La-prade:

Molière would have given up, if he had been able to see you,
For a Tartuffe red to his black Tartuffe.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 331

This is seen today, the expelled black dresses can impu-
How can they return to their original places?
Turning to Mr. Laguerre, the speaker added:

But I hope that younger people than me will expel them.

once and for all!

The great strength of Masonry lies in competition that mediocre, intelligent and easy people bring to him;
of conscience that she has managed to place in recent years in all important positions. Severe for the man con-damned (I), Masonry loves the crooked man, the agent businessman, the shady financier, the down-and-out who needs of her and which, consequently, is for her an instrument docile. Cowards like Ferry or Tirard, for example, are the great Freemasonic men. They are supported, protected, rescued.

Take the list of all the prominent men who are followers of the Freemasonry and you will see all the names there of men involved in dubious affairs, in suspicious transfers, condemned by their own party, the Cons-tans, the Cazot, the Bouteillier, the Paul Bert, the Baihaut.

Freemasonry, in fact, does not abandon its own only as a last resort. See, for example, Tirard. He of the conversion which required, above all, discretion-tion. This was the case where ever, for the old manufacturer of(3 doubled, to resemble Lamech who, the first, had the art

(1) Some lodges, moreover, are more difficult than others.
Union and Reverence lodge refused to receive Eugène Mayer, from the Lantern, which the Ecole Mutuelle lodge was happy to welcome.

332 JEWISH FLANCE

to put the metals into work, and to dress like him
"of gold and azure (1). " It was the case to sing:

Samson barely has his mistress

Had told his secret
That he felt from his weakness

The fatal e/iet.
Delilah could not have sold it,
But she would have found Samson
More discreet and just as tender
If he had been a Freemason [2].

Instead of acting in this way, Tirard cynically made a move, he ostentatiously received Mr. Dugué of Falconry and the self-laughed to declare that the operation would not take place, while he knew that she had already decided. So we rallied a quina dozen millions.

In the session of April 26, 1883, Mr. Oscar de Vallée goes up to the Senate tribune, condemns these prevarications. The rigid magistrate finds the accent of the old days, his finger points to the culprit sitting on the ministers' bench. This
The word of an honest man produces a deep emotion.
Even if they are composed mainly of people for whom the virtue is only a word, the Assemblies taken en masse are accessible to certain currents.

(1) Q. – Have you seen your master today?

A. – Yes, Very V.-.

D. – How is he dressed?

A. – Or and azure.

D. – What do these two months mean?

with which it can be clothed. {Masonic Necessary, by EJ.-C. M" regt.-.)

(2) collection of Freemason songs, verses, speeches, regulations, nuggets of several pieces that have not yet appeared. The music put on the Italian key with the ùnsse.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 333

A shudder passes through the room when, addressing the guard seals who lowers his head, the speaker says to him: "You you are the master of public action; why not put it you not moving? There are culprits, look for them them and punish them!"

It is unlikely, of course, that Martin-Feuil-Lée, who probably had his share of the cake, begins a instruction against himself (1); but the crowds, I repeats, are always quick to impressions, and all le world wondered if Tirard would not have the fate of Test.

The Venerable of Lodge V Mutual School was pale like a dead man, he probably made the sign of distress in raising both crossed hands above his head. Sou-dain, from the benches of the left come vociferations, confused shouts, deafening interruptions. We want prevent at all costs Mr. Oscar de Vallée from continuing his courageous harangue. The Masons descend to the bottom of the stands to better insult the one who reveals the scandals of one of their own. Among the most exalted, we can distinguish Des-Chanel and Laurent Pichat beyond Clémentine Friendship, the Jew Millaud of the Progressive Fraternity, Testelin of V Etoile from the North who believes that we are speaking a foreign language when-

(1) In the trial of a poor devil of a clerk, named Lebas, prosecuted in January 1885 for violation of secrecy professional, Mr. Falateuf read countless letters and dispatches which prove that the wealthy scholarship holder Mary Raynaud was kept informed of the smallest phases of the investigation started against him, by Mr. Leuoël, Republican senator; the Keeper of the Seals had it carried [the documents at the accused's place so that he could prepare his response in advance to embarrassing questions. It is possible, I might be told, be, that this Keeper of the Seals is not Mr. Martin Feuillée. Mr. Falateuf rectivemcnt said: Mr. Martin Feu... and he stopped.
II LU.

that we talk about probilia, Tolain of Foresight, always ready when it comes to being noted for infamy.

The clamour drowns out the voice of the honest man who is reduced to silence. Martin-Feuillée wipes his forehead. The f.*. Tirard is saved once again.

He's the Benjamin of the lodges, by the way, a real Lowton, than this old fake jeweler. It seems he is the same to the children we had trouble raising and whom we love more for the harm he has done.

He always throws himself into adventures that are not clean and, once in bad case, he tries to get out business with childish denials. He had associated with some friends wanting to take a few million from the unfortunate Frenchman, and his name had been put to a prospectus which was, by Jove, very tempting:

The peace and tranquility long enjoyed by the Repu-
Uruguayan government, and the guaranteed support of the President and the principal members of the government of this Republic, are for our Company guarantees certain security.

Communications between the Santa-Ernestina mine and Montevideo are easy, the climate is temperate and healthy^ the workforce cheap. All these circumstances, combined with the exceptional wealth-well-established tradition of gold-bearing quartz to be exploited, we have allowed us to find, in our relationships and among our friends, a figure already significant number of subscriptions.

The German banker Isaac Kolisch, who had taken charge of the issue, addressed to shareholders the most pressing and, by a refinement of skill which is rare-
In fact, it made it clear that it was necessary to subscribe without noise, if one wanted to be admitted into what he called "a small circle of initiates."

JEWISH PERSECUTION 335

COMMERCIAL BANKING AND COMMISSION
I. KOLISCH

1, rue du Quatre-Septembre

Confidential.

Paris, May 23, 1879.

ft Sir,

"After reading the attached note, you will have acquired the conviction that this is a truly exceptional case, and you will easily understand why it was impossible for me to give details in my house circular.

"His Excellency Mr. TirARD, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, having accepted the presidency of the Society, and several others such high-ranking people being interested in it, the whole affair was processed and concluded, without any publicity, as it comes to really good deals, reserved for a small circle D'.NriÉs.

"I. KOLISCH."

At least this time it was the true tradition of the Masonnerie who likes to hum:

Far from any severe censors.
To the sweet sound of our cannons,
Let us celebrate in our mysteries
The happiness of the Freemasons.
Let us always hide from the common people
The goods we enjoy;
Know how to enjoy and be silent
This is the law of good Masons (1).

(1) Collection of Songs of the Mucon-Fiancs.

336 THE JEWISH NCR HA ^i

In an indignant response to the French who had reproduced this circular, Tirard protested with indignation and declared that he was completely foreign to this case and that he had never heard of it.

Newspapers of all shades shared the indignation.
of Tirard, and approved in advance the measures that he was going to take on the financiers daring enough to use thus the name, not only of a man, of a deputy, but of a minister of the Republic. It is incontestable, in effect, that the laws would not be severe enough to I, if I were to allow myself to state on a dis- prospectus distributed in thousands of copies, whether Mr. Brisson or Mr. Clemenceau are presidents of companies, whose title even they are unknown,

had been petrified. It was beginning to be found that this soul of Excellence was really too excellent, when the pot to the roses discovered exhaled a perfume which did not resemble not precisely to those of Arabia.

When the banker had lifted his foot, taking away what remaining of the social fund, the shareholders learned with amazement that the mine had never contained a parthe golden one. An engineer, sent to investigate, had very frankly noted this absolute absence of any ore. Instead of honestly announcing this result, the administrators, as the Parlemeiit relates,^ had hidden the report and increased the share capital to 15 million by issuing ten thousand new shares.

Did Tirard believe that by acting in this way he was also imitating Osi-laugh, making holes in the moon? Did he claim to avenge the Hiram's death? We don't know. The fact remains that when-that the summer solstice festival was celebrated, it was not enough,

THE JEWISH PELLSEGUTLON 337

this time, to scratch in the hand, we brought the hands together to applaud the Venerable, the ingreat minister "who had seen the great light of the 3rd apdepartment. »

"He should be called luileur," said a Freemason.
famous for having affirmed in an awards distribution that Brutus had been victorious at Philippi. "Never since Honduras, shareholders have not received a single tile pa-
"

The support given by Freemasonry to its members, in critical circumstances, therefore explains sufment, without it being necessary to look for a mystical element there-serious, the number of recruits it makes.

In the provinces, certain men, bankers, notaries, offi-ministerial officials, who, without Freemasonry, would have been in the penal colony from the beginning of their career, supported each other until death, have ended even, if not surrounded by esteem public, at least officially honored. There is in this kind of truly curious existences.

The story of the f.*. Guillot is epic and can be given as a specimen.

This Guillot, notary, mayor of Trévoux, knight of the Legion of Honor, member of the General Council, president

Masonry, was the great elector of the department. When he died in May 1883, there was general mourning among the Republicans.

Alongside the prefect of Ain, Stehelin, the sub-prefect of Trévoux, Daval, the sub-prefect of Beliey, Brun, we saw der- behind the coffin all the obligatory and secular personnel, the members of the municipal council of Trévoux, the commission- sion of hospices, the mutual aid society, the fire company, secular school, many mayors and municipal councilors of neighboring municipalities, officials from various administrations; Messrs. Cha- then, administrator; Monnier^ head of operations; Clauzel, engineer, and many employees of the Company of the Rhone railways, etc., etc.

338 JEWISH FRANCE

Speeches worthy of a man who would have saved La Ritrie. Daval, the sub-prefect, was incredibly lyrical and it would be a shame to not to quote some fragments of this speech which gives a good idea of republican literature:

Gentlemen,

It is in the name of the Prefect of Ain and myself that I take the word at the edge of this grave, where a common sorrow unites us mune. I was invited to accept this painful honor, to address- to serve as our supreme witness to the eminent citizen and devoted friend- and our last farewell, because I am, of all the members of the administration, his oldest collaborator.

The man we accompany to the place where Von sleeps was of those who have public pain as their retinue. The city of Trévoux mourns François Guillot as an administrator beyond peer; the General Council of Ain, one of its most active and most eminent; the Republic, one of its most devoted supporters.

We say of a soldier killed in front of the enemy: dead on the field of honor- of the one in this tomb we can say: death to pain. It is that in truth this life so well filled sums it up in two words: work, charity. What a void he leaves among us! What a loss we have just suffered! What is the (.blind reaper" who thus lays hands on the mast of the ours? Where can we find such devotion to the interests of the democracy ?

this task! What nobility in motives! To fulfill one's duty

i JEWISH PERSECUTION 339

was his only and constant concern. That is why I does not hesitate to proclaim it: François Guillot always made it happen public affairs before personal interest. How many people he has obliged! How many services he rendered! The poor, the humble, all those who were suffering, all those who needed advice or sought support never knocked in vain on his door. He only aspired to the esteem of his fellow citizens, this esteem would have been his only reward, if he had not obtained this cross of the Legion of the Lion that I see shining on his coffin

Let me, in this connection, tell you a fact which is personal to me—nel: It was in 1878. I had been at the head of this district for a year—dissement, when the Prefect of Ain asked me to to designate the most worthy to receive the star of honor. I had the good fortune to cast eyes on Guillot, when no one, until today, had not had the idea, without doubt because of his modesty. When I learned that the decree naming him a knight of the Legion of Honor was signed, I brought him this good news—Seized with great emotion, he said to me in a voice between—cut off by sobs; "Have I deserved the cross?" And he hugged her crying. The memory of this scene, I needless to say, gentlemen, will remain deeply engraved in my memory and in my heart. Ah! yes, for five years. I have maintained commerce with this excellent man, and, during this period of five years, not the slightest dissent arose disturb the charm of our relationship. So it's up to me, up to me above all, who lived in his intimacy, that he was given to appreciate how great was the nobility of his soul and how great the goodness of his heart.

As for you. Gentlemen, who surround this tomb, you who came from the ends of the department to bring your last token of sympathy to the one you had in so high esteem, you are right to shed tears. Long—time you will not have to mourn such a good man: for, if If François Guillot had lived in antiquity, Greece would have put him among its Sages.

Farewell, dear friend! Farewell. Guillot!

340 JEWISH FRANCE

Mr. Ducher, general councilor, delivered the funeral oration almost as eloquent:

It seemed to me that we could not let the earth close—sea on the good man whom we accompany today to threshold of nothingness, without a voice being heard on his grave name of the General Council of Ain, where Mr. François Guiliot held such a worthy and wide place.

Allow me, gentlemen, I, the most humble among all, to tell the grieving population of this city that if the
The loss she is experiencing today is immense and difficult.
I was almost going to say impossible to repair, you are not, far from there, alone to feel it.

In the most remote places of the district of Tré—you, and I can say throughout the department, the news of the Guiliot's death had a painful impact. Ah! it's that our colleague, our friend, Mr. Guiliot, was not only an enlightened, upright and devoted citizen; he was not only a father of a family, well-loved and respected by his family; he was not only simply the first magistrate of a city which preciouslly preserves—remember the benefits of his administration.

Mr. Guiliot, and I am happy to remind you, was the advisor, IG protector, Y friend of all, of the small as well as the great, of the poor like the rich; his benevolent and generous action knows no—knows no bounds; it extended not only over his city of adoption, on his canton, on the district of Trévoux all whole, but also on those who, from all points of the department—ment, came to him, sure of finding a warm welcome there.
watching, selfless support.

I cannot end these few words better, Gentlemen, that by recalling the well-deserved praise given to him by the Prefect one day that we watched him sadly withdraw, panting, exhausted by fatigue and illness, in the middle of a session which was supposed to
to be, the last for him:

"If the soldier who is going to die on the battlefield said
Mr. Stehelin, is worthy of admiration, we must not less

JEWISH PERSECUTION! 341

admire the courage of Guillot, who also wanted to die on the breach.

Farewell, Guillot, our excellent and much-missed colleague, farewell!

As for Bollet, first deputy, he was brief, but firm;
he cried out with conviction:

in which our country placed its most complete confidence, its dearest hopes: because, if Guillot did not die in the prime of life, the less he succumbed in the full exercise of his great faculties.

He is no more, this fair man who had the rare merit of to silence one's enemies, to force them into admiration by The excess of its benefits.

He is no more, this devoted friend, tireless in serving the interests of others, little concerned, moreover, with what concerned him personally.

But, gentlemen, if nothing remains of this vigorous nature who fought until his last breath for the cause of justice, The memory of this kind-hearted man is imperishable. He will remain for we are the model of all civic virtues.

Gentlemen, let us unite our tears to those of the family of this servant of humanity: perhaps it will be a softening to the grief of his children lost in pain!

There is no eternal pain. The inhabitants of the country wiped away their tears and came to ask for news— of their funds that such a good man had to make profitable Mason.

Alas! the Masonic mallet struck them with a blow club and they did not want to push the triple houzé which is the cry of enthusiasm of the Sons of the Widow. The prefect was right. The loss was considerable, more considerable than one thought. The Venerable was a common forger, a simple swindler; he had devoured to the last penny, without noise, in the dark debauchery—

1

342 JEWISH FRANCE

of provincial life, the money that had been entrusted.

This is what the Salut public of Lyon wrote on this subject:

There are countless fakes. The way to proceed is Guillot was, in fact, very simple. A moneylender brought to the study his money, intended for a mortgage investment; Guillot em-pocketed the capital, manufactured a fake bond signed with the name of a false borrower, and paid exactly the interest using capital that new dupes brought to the study. Nothing simpler, you see. It is understood that I will depending on the circumstances, knew how to vary his repertoire and make to pass money from someone else's pocket into one's own on air new.

What, in my opinion, is most noteworthy in this matter, is that Guillot has been able to proceed in this way for many years, without being disturbed or discovered. This fact proves, on the part of his clientele, a blind trust, which attached itself to a man filled with honors by the Republic. We must not forget, in indeed, that there are still many for whom republican honors—Cains mean something. It's silly, but that's how it is!

A Lyon newspaper, in an article published some time ago, would have, it seems, fixed the figure of the liabilities. This figure cannot be that fanciful, the liabilities cannot currently be known. For To get to know him, you must first separate the obligations true from false. But it is neither quick, nor easy, nor yet accomplished. All that can be said today is that the obli—false statements are more numerous than true ones, and that the liabilities, which is considerable, constitutes a real crash for the canton of Trévoux: lost and dissipated capital, numerous lawsuits and expensive. ('I)

(1) See an excellent brochure on this adventure, full of •verve and piquant revelations about provincial existence: A Freemason and right-thinking notary by the union of his victims.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 343

What is unheard of, in fact, is the impunity enjoyed by Guillot, the constant support he found, thanks to the Mason—nerie, in the official world perfectly aware of its situation.

Guillot, however, was just a child compared to Bella—my. Protestant and Freemason, leader of the opportunist party in Finistère, general councilor, mayor of Brest, che—A member of the Legion of Honor, Bellamy is a com—complete, almost a figure. Gambetta, who went to the dishonest as iron goes to the magnet, made him his friend and, for For many years, Bellamy was, like Guillot, the great elector of the department.

Even when it was impossible to conceal his detours—nements, the republican deputies protected him for a long time against all prosecutions.

The number of Bellamy's breaches of trust and thefts is incredible, and the admitted figure of embezzlement,

Bellamy seemed to have a preference for flying poor Sy which is a republican specialty. An old sailor, Ganu, had amassed a small nest egg which was a fortune for him: 11,000 francs; Bellamy steals this money and declares that he has lost it. A charitable congregation, Perpetual Adoration has the idea, singular moreover, of entrust his interests to Bellamy, he steals 13,000 francs from him; Graville miners, he is content to take 7,000 francs. A lady Lefranc had left to her coachman, named Mear, a life annuity of 800 francs that Bellamy was responsible for to serve. To this end, the Lefranc heirs had filed at his home 32 registered bonds. When the coachman died, his daughter, loyal and honest, immediately sent the death certificate; but the republican notary took care not to warn the family and, for four years, faithfully served himself the income to himself.

314 JEWISH FRANCE

Bellamy was nonetheless acquitted by the jury. Is it so I blame this institution which makes such strange people verdicts? Certainly not. One of the great faults of the Conservative Party was not to rally to the principle of the elective judiciary. With a jury you can, at the rigor, to come across some honest men, with the Freemason and Jewish magistrates, you are sure not to find none (1).

A conviction even, when the case is not too serious, does not prevent the Freemasons from achieving anything. The Duke of Broglie was reportedly asked to admit, in the cabinet of which he was a member, vm Catholic condemned to six months in prison for assault and battery, which he allegedly refused with indignation. Brisson, Speaker of the Great Central Lodge, do not hesitate to entrust Dautresme with the porter-Trade sheet.

The only title of this Dautresme, to become the holder of this ministerial department, was to be of a trade unpleasant and to have written the music for some me-opera songs. In 4867, he had half knocked out

1) What conservatives should do is monitor these lists where the Republicans include pell-mell the brothers and friends who have had misfortunes 11 things happen there without name which attest once again, the terrible mess that reigns everywhere. The appeal of Pel, as we know, was admitted by the Court of Cassation because one of the jurors, former tanner in Fresnes, near the Croix de Bernis, was a

At the opening of the next session it was discovered that one of the jurors had written on the list was a foreigner and had been convicted of theft. On the list of the 2nd session of July 1885, it was noted that one of the jurors had been convicted of begging; it was only discovered on the ma- end of the hearing I

mte fl

JEWISH PERSONALITY 34-'>

the director of the Théâtre Lyrique blows his umbrella who hesitated to play Cadillac's Swear Words. Indulgent and good-natured according to his habits, Napoleon III had allowed himself to listen to the supplications of the musician who, with the bas- sesse of his peers, literally rolled at his feet, and had given him full and complete pardon for the six months of pri- his which he had so justly deserved (1).

In prison, when by chance they go there, the Franc-Ma- lessons are certain to find some protection again. When all the important functions have been distributed, junior Masons rushed into jobs of directors and inspectors of penitentiary establishments- tiaries. The inspector of the house for young detainees of the Douhaires, near Gaillon, is a former insurance broker named Fleury, of the R.*. L.-. of the united Pliilanithropes and we can be sure that the moral upliftment of small pri- sonniers is in good hands.

No more God, no more churches; now, there will be neither priests nor religion; no more kings, no more rulers, and there will be no more unnecessary burdens, but an equal distribution of wealth so- cials (2).

(1) To be compared with the kindness of the sovereign towards this brutal dan.s which he only wanted to see an artist embittered by failure and man- that of talent, the cruelty deployed by the current government con- to be this poor Desprez, instigator of Around a tramp who, condemns^ for an unlawful offense, had, although dying, to undergo his punishment with the escarpments and the thieves. The unfortunate intimate could not resist this regime and died a few months later. In the left one whose Most members owe it to the press to be the little that they are, not a voice was raised against this barbaric treatment. Kmu of the su- frances de Desprez, Daudet had written a piety of the heart i Uamescasse. The joker didn't even answer the writer.

(2) Reason and religion, by A. Fleury, from the 11th... L.. of the Philan- United Europe, Or. . of Paris».

"It is society, moreover, which is guilty of everything, declares this perfect nihilist; this is the society that we need to lock up.

Ignorance and misery combined, that is the only crime we have to commit. reproach the worker; here are the disinherited of fate, the vanquished of life, who see days without bread and nights without sleep; they have empty stomachs and empty brains; they tremble with fever and spit out the disease, and you, society, you make them a crime of breathe the same air as you? Because, finally, to all these misfortunes—you deny them the right to the sun, you prevent them from savoring the only hope left to them is to drink the force and the happiness contained in a ray of sunshine.

Yes, to the rich, to the fortunate, air and space, play and dance, joy and babble; to the poor, the workshop or prison, the bed or hospital, sadness or pain! Where then to find, for the proletarian, the right to live, if he does not have the right to sun? Because the sun is the principle of all life, it is the generator which moves the whole universe; it is the creator, the propellant of all things, the comforter of all eternity, and who refuses it to others commit a crime against humanity (1).

I wouldn't want to be unpleasant to a protégé of Mr. Margue, but isn't it strange to see a man, who seems to profess for the sun the ardent worship of the ancients Guebres, precisely accept the direction of one of these outdated establishments where people are put in Vomhre?

Many are thus half-learned in Masonry, half-speakers, they hate society with a hatred that is not not the courageous revolt of Spartacus, the bitter anger of Vindex, but like a poisonous envy that smells of anti-

(1) Social demands, conferences given by Br.-.Fieury.

We understand with such a staff that "the revolts eclaleul in all the(ri)ons, in Riom, in Beaulieu, in Embrun, in Rociis\Vir\^ in Belle-Ihle, in Thouars.

U^ JEWISH PERSECUTION 347

room and office; they do not intend to completely destroy—the social edifice because they hope to make a living there small place by more or less correct procedures, but They attack the Church because it can only give them dedication they don't want.

For the moment, they are the masters and RP Deladoor was able to write very rightly: "The work is so "advanced that humanly speaking its definitive success is
"as close as certain. Where is the human strength that can-
"would fight against Freemasonry, mistress of the govern-these ments, of the press and, by the Jews who serve it ((condition of imposing itself on it, finance, that is to say
"of the entire industrial and commercial life of nations."

These few views on Masonry, moreover, have not no other pretension than to be a sketch, an essay, like we used to express ourselves. We don't have, is it necessary to repeat it? claimed to study this institution in depth complex and variable in its forms that we have renalready visited several times on our route; because, similar to those underground canals that wind under the
a visible city, it constantly moves forward under the great history.
We refer once again to the truly monumental of Father Deschamps completed by Mr. Claudio Jannet.
Our readers will find a fairly complete list here.
men of the day who are Freemasons. The excellent work by Abbot Chabauty: Jews and Freemasons, whose importance we have already noted, is also an inexhaustible source of valuable information (1).

(1) See also the Cry of the People, of October 23, 1881, on the role played by the !•> .-. Caubet daijs the Masonry which, by its origin

3i8 JEWISH FRANCE •

What we are doing is helping minds attentive to properly decompose this movement,' to grasp exactly how these institutions work tions set in motion by all the hatreds, served by all the bad instincts, and attacking Catholics, that is to say, to people infinitely better organized for
to do good only to resist evil, living in an order of ideas quite different from that in which the men who live them attack, having no distinct vision even of the character-mother of their enemies.

was predestined to become a branch on Jerusalem Street.
This Fr .-. Gaubet is, as we know, Venerable of the Rose of the Perfect i ilance:

to The Perfect Silence! See the irony of the words! Formerly, it is true, fans have just read, and in which he solemnly recommended "to the very dear brothers" never to violate Masonic secrecy. Since then, Mr. Caubet has become head of the municipal police and he seems to have lost some of his rigidity. It is he now— which pushes for the disclosure of the Masonic secret and which makes to snitch on his brothers in the Grand Orient.

"At the police headquarters, he truly fulfills the role of ser-recruiting people, and he has the habit of having the most Masons crowned as many rousins as he can in his staff.

"Another "Venerable" lends him a hand for this singular work, and we have before our eyes the list of members of a lodge, — we can name it, it is the VAtelier lodge, — where nocs Let's see a nice collection of spies."

II

THE PLLOTESTAIJTS

The austere Protestant is not austere. — The false martyrs. — Goli-tjDy. — This so-called apostle of tolerance is the most implacable of the lorlioQiiiaires. — He tries to deliver Calais to the English. — Saint-Barlhéleaiy. — The modern Protestant is the accomplice of the Jew. — Prolestant propaganda. — The kidnappings. — A touching letter. — Daudet's Elise Ebsen. — The Prussian S4,eeg and its manual. — The Monods. — The Sisters of the Rue der the Moon and the exploits of Winckam. — The variations of our avocats. — Persecution in death. — The Proleslauls of the South,

iT m

IT

THE PROTESTANTS

In the war waged against God, the Protestant element played, he too, a considerable role and of which it is impossible not to take into account in this overall picture of religious persecution.

This role has been above all hypocritical and cautious. We have reported above this mania which consists of dressing up characters of an epithet that ends up becoming a body with them; the epithet of austere generally accompanies the Pàen, on the contrary, is no less austere than the Protestant.

Without teaching anything new to those who have lived England and who know the nameless infamies that these Englishmen and women who slyly commit always have the word shocking! in their mouths, the revelations of the Pall Mail Gazette have well highlighted the character of the Protestant, buying to defile the little girls of six years old and then going to sing heretical psalms.

In political life, the austere Protestant is, par excellence—lence, the man of deceit and lies.

Freycinet feline, smooth, caressing and deceiving everyone world, hardly gives the idea of one of these rigid figures who are averse to compromise and reject all cowardice moral.

No one has ever been less austere than this Jauréguiberry.
who, concerned only with ensuring his own an advan—

352 JEWISH FRANCE

scandalous circle, was the docile plaything of the radicals. This The so-called sea wolf was par excellence a private admiral. A Creole Bohemian, who had become a representative because that he entertained Gambetta by imitating the sound of the wind in the coconut trees, amused himself every day by coming to find the admiral to his bench and make the gesture of splitting his ear at some—than one. The other laughed with his big round eyes, his great mouth open foolishly, he did not feel his honor military to be indignant by being part of the same ministry than a Cazot and a Constans and was not troubled in his conscience of old Genevan mômier when we threw in the garbage dumper the image of this Christ to which he pretended to believe; he accepted everything and he would have accepted many other things to remain a minister if his head had never displeased: displiciiit nasits tuus...

Always ready, like all Protestants, to sacrifice his party to his sect, the admiral, instead of taking the defense French interests in Madagascar, had made the ministry of the navy a branch of the Protestant missions English; he had made himself the chaperone of these pastors ingenious and practical which combine the trade of bibles and that of colonial goods.

Baron de Cambourg, with moderation perhaps excessive, gave interesting details, in the Evil One, on this strange conduct of a French admiral. (1)

The auliral Jauréguiberry seems to have been under the influence of a Protestant pastor from Marseille, Mr. Monod (2).

(1) Morning, January 1 and February 2, 1883.

(2) The repetition of Monod, without having taken the proportion of that of the Mayer, was one of the plagues of Egypt which had the most pain- It is still relevant today.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 353

M' Monod, known as M. de Cambourg, translated with alacrity The Anli-Franrnis libels of the Methodist missionaries of Madagascar, who direct the hostility of the Ilowas against France; he is displayed at Exeter Hall, the anti-French propaganda office and anti-Catholic of the "IV Missionary Society" where we turn our backs religious works, mixed with politics and commerce.

This pastor has the merit at least of being sincere and of not hide that all his sympathies are for the English against the French. In the preface that he put at the head of the translation from a work by Mr. James Subrel, architect of evangelical churches in Tananarive, he writes clearly: "We are happy to recognize that he is happy for the true good of Madagascar that English influence prevailed in this island over that of the France, and evangelical Christianity on that of Rome.

We are not better patriots.

Going back in history we find elsewhere that the attitude of today's Protestants was that of the Protestants of old. Protestants are less greedy. than the Jews; they are still as Bran-tôme: * restless, wriggling and fond of pecking. Less shrill also than the sons of Israel, they are geignards. Their great man, Coligny, is the false martyr par excellence. History, which is now only proceeding to with the help of authentic documents, has shown us that This alleged victim had been the most implacable of the bourgeois.

No doubt, to fairly judge the hero of the Protestantism, it was necessary to take into account the morals of the time. The Guise allied themselves with Spain, Coligny sold himself to England, but he did so with a particular cynicism. He offered to deliver, for a fee, to our old enemy, this town of Calais that the Duke of Guise had had so much trouble finding to reconquer.

3o4 LA fhan::î jtjîv^

The treaty concluded at Hamptoncourt, September 20, 1562, and which linked the cause of England to that of the Huguenots. By this treaty, Elisabeth, in exchange for one hundred thousand gold crowns payable to France or in Strasbourg, received Le Havre, at the expense, by her, to return it as soon as she was in possession of Calais.

The treaty was concluded in the name of the Prince of Condé, of Jean de Rohan, de l'Amiral, de Mouy, de Moustier and de Bouchart.

"This," said Duplex, "is how the religionists dispose--were cities of the kingdom in favor of the foreigner and even of the former enemy of France.

In a century where blood was shed easily, where assassination of an enemy seemed to be the most natural act of the world^ no one pushed contempt further than the Admiral of human life.

When the affairs of the Protestants seemed lost, After the Battle of Dreux, Coligny found it quite simple to encourage Poltrot de Méré to strike the Duke of Guise, and he gave him a hundred crowns to help him escape after the murder.

There is little doubt about the Admiral's complicity.

Having communicated with Coligny, said Estienne Pasquier, and the After taking advice between them, Poltrot came to find M. le duc in front of Orléans of Guise and having made a deep bow to him, told him that badly advised he had followed Mr. the prince; but that moved by a just repentance, he came to surrender to him with a firm purpose of to do a good service to the king. Mr. de Guise, considering that this word came from the bottom of the heart, received it with a favorable eye and Raesme gave him such access to his house that many times he ate and drank at his table. It is said that good nature of this prince had so much power over him that, for this first

JEWISH PERSECUTION 355

Suddenly, he lost his heart and went straight back to the admiral, much less resolved than before, even in deliberation forget the return, had it not been that it was corrected by a minister full of understanding and persuasion.

Poltrot de Méré, arrested, recognized that it was Goligny and Theodore Beza who had incited him to assassination.

"The one who gave the blow to Monsieur de Guyse, writes Chantonay to his friend Josse de Gourteville, confesses frankly than the fact, and similarly that Admiral Ghas-Tillon and Théodore de Eèze persuaded him to do so and gave a hundred crowns for it.

Galvin's first act, once quiet in a free land, had been to burn, with bundles of wood green, his friend Servetus because he did not think absolutely like him on some points of metaphysics and that he persisted in saying: Son of eternal God instead of Son eternal of God.

Goligny was of this school. Defeated, he demanded freedom to think. Victorious, this so-called apostle of tolerance was as implacable as the Baron des Adrets. In Angou—even he had renewed the living torches of Nero, and he tied the religious, who fell into his hands, to beams, coated with sulfur, to which he had the fire. One of these unfortunates, says Mézeray, before ex-worsen in torture, had predicted to the Admiral of France the fate that awaited her. "Remember Jezebel, murderer of the Prophets I You will be thrown out of a window and dragged to the gallows, and you will suffer, dead or alive, all the indignities and all the cruelties you now practice on the servants of God.

No one was surprised that the son of Guise avenged the death of his father on the one who had him murdered. "Fallen, he satisfied, said Tavannes, the eyes of the son whose son he had killed the father.

356 THE JEWISH TRUST

The outrages which the murderers committed against him, appeared a simple application of the law of retaliation, a reparation for the torture he had inflicted on others.

Public opinion spoke out strongly in this meaning. The epitaph of Coligny, preserved at the Record office, is the expression of this popular feeling.

Passerby, you will learn by the death of that one!) That in France we can call Olofernes today,

(1) See on this subject, in addition to the magnificent work of Mr. Baron Kervyn de Lettenhove, The Last Days of Coligny, by M. Charles Buet. Bishop Freppel, who truly has this rare intellectual courage today, wrote to the author about this book:

"How can we forget that, to satisfy his hatred and satisfy his ambition, this strange Frenchman, invested with a military charge of more importance, was not afraid to call the stranger to the heart of the Fatherland; which, as a result of an infamous pact, he delivered to England, Dieppe, Le Havre and Rouen, in return for what she promised him help in men, money and ships, against the cause of king and nation; that he flooded France with his German reiters bribed for looting and murder?

"Let us follow Coligny throughout the course of his military life: he is constantly busy making deals with foreigners in order to have his homeland invaded by the troops of Elizabeth of England, Prince of Orange, the Duke of Deo-Fontaines and the German princes.

"In the absence of patriotism, is there at least in this man, whose military career includes as many defeats as battles, something of that moral grandeur which makes one forgive well (the faults? But who does not know that the complicity in the murder of the heroic Duke of Guise by Pollrot de Méré, one of the familiars of Coligny, weighs on the memory of the Admiral like a burden that nothing could destroy? Apart from the confessions of the murderer who, until the steps of the scaffold, imputed to him the order of the assassination, you quote the testimonies of contemporaries, each more damning than the last than the others.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 857

Than he who lives wickedly and detestably,
Common flax is similar in its habits;
For the same torments he laughed about
The faithful Christians himself endured.
Some he threw alive into the flame
Or in a pistol made their souls blow;
He was hit by a cannonball;
Like the monks he also tested cut
We cut his, and in it the river
As he drowned, he was dragged away recently
With a rope. Some had their eyes gouged out,

Cut off the nose, the ear

The same thing was done to him. As he was hanged.

We see him similarly stretched out on the gallows,

As he dug up the dead from the tombs,
So he was deprived of the honor of burial,
Long buried streets in filth.
He plundered the revered temples of the saints;
He plundered the decorated palaces of kings:
There is nothing left but the worm that eats him,
Into which his body rots into large pieces.

Never, we will agree, will gallows game be better better to be hanging on to Montfaucon.

This is the man, however, to whom the Protestants propose—felt like erecting a statue. The English, who had had the same idea, had, by examining the facts, an awakening of the moral sense; they felt that he was a bad example for a great nation to glorify treason, even when—that it was meant to serve you, and that to honor a friend—ral of France who had wanted to sell Calais to the English, it was perhaps encouraging an English admiral to sell Dover to the French.

As for Saint-Barthélemy, it is still a legend.

3i>8 LA FRANCK .lUlvK revolutionary who we must mourn like so many others others. Baron Kervyn de Lettenhove, who patiently thoroughly researched, for his admirable work: The Huguenots and the Beggars, a study of twenty-five years of the 16th century, all the archives of France, England, Belgium and of Spain, who does not advance an assertion without giving one through proof, has shed complete light on this point.

Catherine de Medici, grappling with inextricable difficulties, found only one way out of the embarrassment, is to have Coligny assassinated as he had assassinated—siner Henri de Guise. Maurevel, it has been said, and more proba-probably an Italian swordsman, Pierre-Paul Tosinghi, ambusthat in a nasty little house" on the street of Fossés-Saint-Germain-l'Auxerrois, fired on the Admiral, who came out of the Louvre, four arquebus shots which did not than to hurt him. The failure of this attempt decided the Saint-heart, say the Venetian ambassadors, the Saint-Barthélemy-Lemy would not have taken place.

The Huguenots, exasperated, put themselves in a state of insurrection and openly prepared to march on the Louvre and to dethrone Charles IX.

The legend shows us poor sleeping doves—based on the faith of treaties. The doves were soldiers trained in war gear, armed to the teeth, who rode all day through the streets of Paris, who accompanied Coligny to the Louvre, and who, proud of their number, constantly defied Tavannes and the others Catholics, and came to insult the king at his table. The Huguenots were the masters of Paris; they had razed seemed to have all their forces; they had eight hundred between them gentlemen and eight thousand perfectly disciplined men—folded. Montgomery had been ordered to gather four a thousand men in the Faubourg Saint-Germain; the Beggars of)Flanders, many of whom perished during the massacre, cluttered the city; from all the provinces, moreover, reinforcements were rushing to avenge the Admiral's murder. The Council of Six met permanently and organized the attack; during the night of August 24–25, he had stopped the last resolutions.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 300

Catherine de Medici, who showed in all this affair a very virile energy, was kept informed by the revelations of Bouchavannes and Gramont; she was not unaware that her and her were lost without a determination fast.

The situation, in a word, was exactly the same as on the night of August 10, 1792. We feel reigning over these nights the same revolutionary atmosphere. If Louis XVI was taken the offensive, instead of waiting in his palace for the sections, which were preparing noisily, came to attack quer, would he have been accused of ambush? There was no more ambushes from Charles IX; he attacked the first, that's all. He had probably been very sincere by expressing his anger at the attempted assassination of the Admiral; when he was given the proof of the plot before his eyes, he felt the danger so imminent that he rang the bell of Saint-Germain-l'Auxerrois two hours earlier than agreed.

The former Provost of the merchants, Marcel, warned by the deeply Catholic and who hated the Huguenots, ippuya the soldiers of the king and the duke of Guise, infinitely fewer in number than the Protestants. The first victims—my were precisely the gentilshornnics who had introduced to the Louvre to open the door to their friends. Despite everything, this date remains one of the darkest of human history. It will always sadden hearts magnanimous who would like to see the sons of the same mother live among themselves like brothers; but she has no report, as horror, with the September massacres. This surprise army of men, who slept with their sword under the head, cannot be compared to the crime inexpiable of 1792; overflowing with unfortunate prison—niers.

300 THE JEWISH FRINGE

From the beginning of the Republic, the Protestant—French ism made an alliance with Jewry, including Waddington went, as we have seen, to support the interests of Berlin Congress. It was in order. Twenty were noted times the close connection which exists between the Jew and the Protes—so much. ((A Protestant, said Heine, is a Catholic who leaves Trinitarian idolatry to walk towards the mono—Jewish theism.

Undoubtedly, the Jews did not spare much disdain for their allies, but they nevertheless agreed to march with them; they fraternized in certain societies like the Saint-Simon Circle including Meyrargues, who bore the first name Florianesque of Naphtali, was the first treasurer, while that Monod was its president. In the Revue des Deux 3J waves, the Swiss Protestant Cherbuliez, hidden under the]»seudonym of Valbert, overwhelmed the Jews with disgusting adulations. The Revue hisloriquey edited by Alkan Lévy, was also an opportunity for them to spread venom on Catholics.

As a reward for their help, the Protestants were given the right to to engage without fear in an apostolate that does not shrink from

JEWISH PERSECUTION 36i

no way. They organized villages here and there biblical, like the one described by Daudet, in VEvan—gelist, they sequestered young girls and renounced their distant propaganda to operate internally. They could—would dare anything, impunity was assured to them and silence

Suppose that a Catholic woman had been guilty of the facts recounted by Daudet, you can hear the warbling from here republican newspapers. Daudet, in fact, affirms the authenticity of the smallest details. We all chatted at him with the mother of Eline Ebsen, who is the teacher of al- his son's letter. The press talked about the book and kept on the acts themselves an absolute silence, everyone has was in the opinion of the police commissioner to whom M^{me}® L. was came to ask for protection.

– It's odious, madam, I'm a father myself. I promise to do everything possible to make you ren- justice, what is the name of the wretch who committed this attack?

– Mrs. J. M

–Oh, madam, said the commissioner, changing su- disdain of tone, as soon as he heard the name of the wife of a famous banker, there is nothing to be done. It is absolutely as if you wanted to attack the Roths- child

This conversation is strictly authentic. Com- can hardly be surprised when we see what is happening to, this unfortunate Anna Feraï, who has been held captive since^ six years by Protestants, without his family even being able to. to have news of her or know where she is hidden? Here there was a sensational trial, anèts of courts ordering that this child be returned to her parents. The Minister of Justice, boldly putting himself at- above the law, making himself the accomplice of those he should to punish, prohibits the execution of orders.

362 JEWISH FRANCE

The mother died of grief; the grandfather, with this tenacity particular to old people, persists in fighting, despite his poverty, against the Protestant bankers whose fund is well stocked.

No literary composition will ever equal in elo- quence the letters of this unfortunate man, which made Mai- laugh t^n-Feuillée, after having made Cazot laugh, and having laughed the grave Freemason Humbert. The last one, dated March 12, 1884, is heartbreaking in its simplicity.

Négrepelisse (Tarn-et-Garonne), March 4-2.

I come, for the third time, to report to you an unpunished crime,
I will not stop until justice is done.

For six years now, despite two rulings by the Toulouse Court,
My granddaughter, Anna Ferai, is being held captive. Where? I don't know.

His mother died of grief and despair at the hospice in Montauhan, three years ago.

The Court of Toulouse ordered that my granddaughter be given to me returned, since I am his legal guardian, and they are not returning it to me.
more than to his mother.

And yet, his father, his grandfather and his mother are dead.

Who has parental authority over Anna Ferai today?
Me alone.

And despite the stops, I am refused.

I have addressed the public prosecutors in vain, the ministers of even to the President of the Republic.

The press, public opinion and the judiciary alone support-my right. And you, Mr. Minister, Minister of Republic, which must be the reign of law, will you allow that This crime remains unpunished?

JEWISH PERSECUTION 363

The perpetrators of the kidnapping have been dead for four years, and their accomplices continue this iniquitous work.

A Protestant pastor and some sectarians from Montauban pay Anna Ferai's boarding school. They are so in revolt against the law.

But if a Catholic priest had committed this crime, there is long as justice would be done.

And, under the vain pretext of a religious question, the judgments, the law and humanity!

And would you be insensitive to this attack? No.

The religious issue was brought to the fore by the criminals;
It's an infamy, because I only ever thought of my granddaughter, alone in the world, cloistered I don't know where, never to her beliefs.

in the times of the Inquisition?

What becomes of the violated paternal authority in me, the law disregarded, iniquity triumphing over justice? What does it mean this religious question, in the presence of a child who has been sequestered since the age of 4 to 5 years?

Whether my daughter is Protestant, Jewish or Mohammedan, I don't care. to take care of it, nor anyone else.

It is my blood, my property, the only being that remains to me world, and no one has the right to take it away from me, not even the head of state.

I come to beg you, Mr. Minister, to give orders for this scandal to cease, in the name of the dignity of the government.

I have been patient for four years since I lost my daughter, that these sectarians killed her.

I try to remain calm; but if, in defiance of my rights raped, from my enslavement, my wounded heart ends up bursting—and whatever misfortune occurs, the responsibility will not fall not on me, poor abandoned old man, who has only this poor granddaughter who is being held captive and whom I want to see before I die!

and all this because a Drotesting urethra wants it! and imposes it to justice.

I call God to witness that I am being pushed to the last ex-junctions.

364 JEWISH FRANCE

You alone, Mr. Minister, can finally put an end to to these atrocities, by ordering that the culprits be prosecuted, and also ordering that my granddaughter be transferred to a educational institution in Montauban, where at least I will be able to see her, since my age and position do not allow me to keep it last with me.

It is in the name of the violated law, of outraged justice, of the public conscience and the unknown nature that I imporcry for the last time.

Please accept, Mr. Minister, the homage of my deepest respect, Grandfather and guardian of Anna Feraï.

While dealing with proselytism, the Protestants, without go as far as the Jews who were more courageous and bolder than them, set about vigorously disgracing to persecute and persecute the religion of the majority of French English-.

Their agent, in the campaign undertaken to destroy in the soul of the new generations every feeling raised, all respect for the great traditions of the ancestors, was a named Steeg, pastor, fiery insulter of Catholics, elected deputy of Bordeaux with the support of the Franc-Masonry and author of one of the condemned manuals. This one- there he worked conscientiously, born German like Spuller (1),

(1) Vapreau, always so measured and so prudent, confirms this fact. Son of an Ardsan, a Prussian subject, he said, in June 1877, he re-j claimed before the tribunal of Versailles, without forcing it, without judgment declaring his status as French; he claimed to have fulfilled, in 1857 'in Strasbourg, the necessary formalities, including the bombar- dement (the 1870 would have destroyed the traces.'

The Courrier de Versailles gave an account of this Prussian, who became the insti- tutor of French youth, some very precise indications.

Mr. Jules Steeg was at Versailles on February 21, 1836; his father Jean

JEWISH PERSECUTION 363

he was never naturalized and is doing his real service homeland by corrupting French youth. There was in This choice begins to spice up this left, in which all patriotic feeling is dead, and who loves the foreigner of the hatred she bears for everything that is French; also, in February 1886, this Prussian was appointed, by Acclamation, President of the Union of the Left group.

Some Protestants, whose hearts heaved with disgust in front of this spectacle, were content to exercise a regret- pressure on parents to force them to put into the hands of children the Gompayré manual which was, he too, condemned by the court of Rome.

Prefect Mono! stood out among them (1), he empoi-

Steeg, a Prussian subject, combined the job of caretaker with the pro- shoemaker's profession.

In 1877, Pastor Steeg, whom everyone considered to be foreigner, brought proceedings before the Versailles court so that, by a judgment, the status of French citizen would be recognized. In support of his request, Mr. Steeg argued a declaration of nationality which he had made, he said, in Strasbourg, in 1837,

The court requested an extract from the municipal register on which this statement should have been recorded.

This register, replied I. Steeg, was burned during the siege of Strasbourg. A reporting judge was then appointed.

Unfortunately, for Mr. Steeg, the reporting judge had been other-times attached to the Strasbourg public prosecutor's office and he had carried out his duty during the siege. It was therefore better than anyone who was able to know what happened in Strasbourg in 1870.

It seemed that what he knew did not fit with the claims of Mr. Steeg. The fact is that the pastor's request was rejected.

The judgment therefore contains an implicit proclamation of the nationality of Mr. Pastor Steeg, deputy of the Gironde.

Unless, therefore, he has found, since 1877, a more convenient than that of Versailles, Mr. Steeg, has not ceased to be a Prussian,

(1) It was this Monod who tolerated, if he did not encourage them, the disdresses which took place in 1884, in Caen, on Passion Sunday.

366 LA FRANCE JtTlVE

literally rang the department of Calvados with Gompayré manuals that he sent to the municipalities with his business card. He did more; he dared, he, a Protestant, to support to Catholics that a manual, misa Vindex, did not violate not school neutrality. Following a ridiculous letter published by Monod, on this subject, a Norman newspaper noted this misplaced zeal in terms which, although a little sharp, were certainly deserved; he recalled at the same time the scandales that were performing in Paris, thanks to the support given to falsifiers by Freemasonry.

If we want, he said, to allow ourselves a vulgar Mr. Monod appears to us here as one of these poisoners public, who are euphemistically called merchants of wines. A scientific analysis proves that a mastroquet any wine gives you only a mixture of disgusting gues, which has no name in any language, and you said: Don't drink that, it's poison. But the mastroquet

It's perfectly harmless. He'd almost argue that it's from the purest Château-Margaux from 1811, the year of the Comet!

My destiny, moreover, is to meet Monods, whenever I'm busy writing history.

I once recounted this improbable adventure of the Saint-Simon papers sequestered for more than a century cle, at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and that the director of the Archives, Mr. Faugère, absolutely prevented consultant under the pretext that he intended to publish them one day.

A wretch holding a copy of La Lanterne entered in the church of Saint-Pierre and insulted Father Delorme, a Dominican who was in the pulpit. The thugs waiting in the square tried to break down the door of the church and heaped insults on the faithful who were leaving the office. They then spread out through the city and went shouting and pushing death threats under the windows of the inhabitants-Catholics. The authorities did not move all evening.

JEWISH PERSECUTION TB"

Mr. de Freycinet was very good in this circumstance. request from one of my good and dear friends, Henri Lapsserre, I had spoken very kindly of his book, The War in provi}ice, while still obscure and unsure of himself, he peddled his volume from newspaper to newspaper. Remembered- What is the purpose of this article? Does it simply follow a movement of sound reason? What is certain is that he authorized the return to the public domain of these manuscripts, the au- The tor had been dead for 125 years.

I started working on this work that interested me and I was going to publish my first volume at Quantin when I was asked if it would not be possible for me to get along with the house Hatchet.

Hachette is certainly one of the bookstores with which relationships are the most pleasant. She knows how to be magnificent on the occasion and did not hesitate to pay a hundred thousand francs, to General de Saint-Simon, the manuscript of the Memoirs... I had nothing but praise for her in all constancy and I even count among its directors one of my best school friends.

However, it was impossible for me to accept since I was engaged with Quantin. I say it. Immediately all the do» assets were taken from me. One of Gambetta's freedmen,

Girard de Rialle, with that glance that one cannot refuse for these things to the opportunists, had undoubtedly seen there a move to make. He supported this singular theory that a cou- \ archive and library server had the right to exercise- to obtain a right of pre-release on the deposit he was responsible for to keep and that the man outside, the public who pays, does not came only after the employee paid by him. This was also hon- It is more than a matter of arguing that a forest conservator would have the right to cut the most beautiful trees [for his benefit] staff, that a mining director would be authorized to exploit the richest mines.

308 JEWISH FRANCE

That the exclusive right to publish the unpublished works of Saint-Simon represents in the future ten thousand francs or one hundred thousand francs, it was perfectly scandalous to grant no one a monopoly; it should be said: "These papers belong to everyone, that all the literate con- read them freely and publish them at their own risk just as everyone freely reproduces, by the processes which suit him, the Wedding at Cana or the Assumption of the Louvre.

The republican newspapers themselves had this opinion- nion, but, naturally, did not share it with their readers- tors. Girard who, I believe, was not even from Rialle, if one would have hindered him in his operations, would have broken sugar, like they say in that world; far from being upset, he believed in dignity and consideration, he iii (ju.olqne time after nominated Knight of the Legion of Honor - which, at least, changed his knighthood.

Alone in the press, Monod, who was part of the com- mission of the Archives, had the crazy idea of defending this bizarre doctrine which attributed a privilege to any director on the treasures of which he is simply in charge. For this reason, he was the object of much ridicule, the memory of which is not not yet deleted.

Mr. ; let us leave this speech and return to the part taken by Protestants in religious porsûutlou.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 369

One man stood out above all for his odious brutality, which is not completely forgotten, although, after having

I named Winckam who violated the home of the poor nuns.

Rarely, perhaps, has justice been more brazenly outraged. The law here was formal, indisputable. The house located at number 14 rue de la Lune had been given, in 1693, by M^{me} Louvet, widow of Robert Louvet, salpêtrier ordinary of the King, at the institute of the Daughters of Charity, alias to hold a school there, on the condition that those which served the school would fulfill certain commitments, would say, morning and evening, certain prayers. To these prayers, M^{me} Louvet, in his will, had asked that the De be added profundis.

It was therefore a true bilateral contract. The fulfillment of the conditions was closely linked to the ownership of the building. It was necessary to either accept and complete commitments or give up the house. Imagine, in fact, the Academy seizing Mr. de Mon-'s money thyon and not distributing the prizes to which it has allocated this money?

Herold himself, who was not frightened by anything bad, had backed down in the face of the blatant illegality.

In its meeting of June 16, 1879, the advisory committee of the prefecture of the Seine, composed of Messrs. Cléry, Chégoïn, Dombey, Beaupré, Durier, Fournier, Lacan, Le Berquier, Rigaud, Templier, Beaumé, Maurice Picard and Ardiot, secretary, based on the fact that the obligation imposed to the Sisters to have certain prayers recited to their poor-"very small schools" was incompatible with secularism-II. 21.

370 JEWISH FRANCE

sation of the school, declared secularization illegal and dangerous-reuse (1).
He said:

Considering, furthermore, and superabundantly, that the execution of the aforementioned clause, very regular and very easy in an establishment led by Sisters, would be absolutely incompatible with the system of a municipal school, open to all children of a same neighborhood, regardless of their financial situation and their religious beliefs.

Floquet came, and a little money was probably distributed. and, sad to say, the same men, with few exceptions-tions near, which had declared the measure unjust on June 16

the advisory committee composed of Messrs. Templier, Corbelet, Bétolaud, Carré, Cléry, de Chégoin, Beaupré, du Buit, Durier, Fournier, Le Berquier, Liouville, Rigaud, Beaumé, Maurice Picard and Le Coaren, with rapporteur Mr. Du Buit, for president Mr. Templier, for secretary The Coaren issued a favorable opinion on the prefect's claims.

This prostitution of this sacred thing, which is called the right, is one of the most painful spectacles of the present. It seems that those who were once called "the priests of the right" should still stand, when all around of them rolled in the mud. The soul suffers to see members of this French bar, which has had such beautiful pages, which has counted so many proud figures, to lend itself complaisance to such infamies.

Read a brochure by Le Berquier, which appears there as Two-faced lawyer: The Lawyers' Table (1). You believe—{\} Gazette of the Courts of October 7, 1882; page 970.

(1) BdUtout and Quebtroy printing works.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 37 î

truly laugh that this order resembles this senate Roman in which the ambassador of Pyrrhus believed he saw an assembly of gods and demigods. There is no question in it than to protest against injustice, "to protect freedom, wealth, the lives of citizens, wherever they come from the attack, whether it occurs in peaceful societies or troubled, under despotism or under the rule of law." We recall the words of Target which, moreover, was little brilliant during the trial of Louis XVI: "It is by honor that honor is maintained, everything that offends delicacy is a crime in our eyes; what is permitted to others orders of citizens must be forbidden to him.

Even browse what was written on the occasion of the elevation of Le Berquier to the bar. It seems that this man is the very personification of independence and virtue. We think of that great chancellor, Thomas More, who, captive in the Tower, one day saw his wife and children arrive. — Sign this retraction and you are free! The prisoner thought for a minute. He thought about what waking up would be like the next day if he refused, at that moment when it would be necessary to ask his white head on the block of badly squared wood, on the ugly oak log that is still shown at the Tower. Then he asked his wife how much she thought he still had long to live. — But... ten years, fifteen years, maybe—spend these few years with mine?

Thus those who in the 18th century were already called elogists, people who rent without even knowing why, multiplied dithyrambs and accumulated epithets about the new president.

It is certain, however, that nothing resembled less a such a portrait as Le Berquier. A lawyer, capable of being a batondeny, must know what to expect from the legality of an act and not to say black the next day when he said white the day before. This supposed paragon of firmness was a simple juggler. Since it was precisely the will of a widow and an orphanage, it was now or never to show up- to be faithful to his oath "to defend the widow and the orphan- flax.)) He absolutely failed in the duties of his profession for personal reasons and that our readers without no doubt will guess.

37:2 JEWISH FRANCE

For me I will never lose the opportunity to put well highlight this gap between reality and fiction, this petty convention which is the most worrying sign of a time when the need for truth no longer exists, when one can repeat what Tacitus said of the Romans of his time: ?ios vera rerum vocahula amisimus.

It remained to carry out this strange decision. The mayor of the arrondissement, Mr. Garcenac, resigned for not to be complicit in such a misdeed. Winckam offered himself for the task that was repugnant to everyone. On September 27- September 1882, accompanied by the very famous Dulac, he crocheted the doors which resisted for five quarters of an hour and, despite the angry protests of Mr. Lefebure, he forced his way into the building and drove the Sisters out of the school that belonged to them.

The whole street rioted and booed the wretch who, now crum- moldy, sometimes pale, seemed, despite his cynicism, to have ashamed of himself; the freethinkers themselves je- were insults to the face. It was the first time indeed that force was used against Sisters of Charity, the first first time also that a citizen voluntarily took charge of a task that the police officers did not perform orders received.

So the astonishment was profound when at the meeting for the consistorial elections, in February 1883, Winckam dared to come and boast of his bad deed, recounted his exploits in hernia trussing and was named member of the consistory in the company of Messrs. Mirabaud and Steiner Doufus.

This election was severely judged by the Protestants foreigners. No doubt, one understands the desire for revenge which animates certain bitter beings in minorities who have been once oppressed; but isn't it cowardly to attack them—to women, to nuns of Saint-Vincent-de-Paul who have only ever done good wherever they go have passed? That a party uses men like Winckam, even if it means giving them some funds afterwards for all—to hide their shame from abroad, that is understandable; but that a door-picker be brought into a consistory, that surpasses the imagination and gives the idea of the degree to which French Protestantism has fallen.

Everywhere the Protestants abused the force that their gave their alliance with the Jews to outrage the Catholics—lics in their most cherished beliefs. In Mornac, a small commune of Charente, one of them dared in 1882 to do that we had not yet dared; he persecuted in death those who did not think like him; he had the sad honor—to precede those who, a few months later, were going to break the crosses in the cemeteries.

This episode is worth telling at length, for it shows what, deep down, are the feelings of these men who cry out so loudly that their fathers were persecuted in the past. If these

374 THE JEWISH FRINGE

If their fathers had been the strongest, they would certainly have been more cruel oppressors than the Catholics.

Here is the statement of facts according to a document of the time which lacks neither drama nor color in its voluntary sobriety.

Mornac has two cemeteries: the Catholic cemetery, which is, by virtue of authentic acts, the particular property of the factory, and the Protestant cemetery, which is the communal property—Both were separated only by a hedge and a ditch. Located on the Catholic cemetery, of which they were consequently the property.

Things had been this way since 1807, and no difficulty had arisen. had never presented herself. But the mayor of Mornac wanted change all this and, on June 9, 1882, relying on a new law— He issued a decree declaring the two united cemeteries; at the same time he declared that burials would not be would do more than one after the other, "except ce— during, the decree said, of those who had held concessions— sions. »

This seemed like a good recognition of the right, for Catholics— small concession owners, to be buried in their cemetery? Well, no! Despite the terms of his decree, the mayor first prevented the burial of a child in the cemetery— Catholic country, where the parents had a concession; the door of the cemetery remained closed when the priest who accompanied the coffin presented itself.

There stood the mayor, assisted by the rural policeman, who declared that under his decree, no one would enter. Nevertheless, Faced with the crowd's outcries, the mayor had to give in: he issued a fine against the priest, but the burial took place without further incident.

However, a few days later, things were not to be happen so quietly. On September 10, another child died in the commune of L'Eguille. The father had lost his woman a few months before; she was buried in the cemetery— Catholic church in Mornac, and a place had been reserved next to it of her. On the 11th, the father obtained, and the concession of the factory of

JEWISH PERSECUTION 3T5

Mornac, and the burial permit from the mayor of l'Eguille. At the same time time, a dispatch from the Marennes sub-prefecture authorized the transport of the body from L'Eguille to Mornac.

The mayor of Mornac refused to let the body into the Catholic cemetery and ordered the filling of the grave that had been prepared by the father's care. The latter, assisted by two of his friends, then re-dug the pit, despite the mayor's orders, and made ask the priest to come and bury the child. Whereupon the said mayor sent a requisition order to the lieutenant of customs, made to combed the grave again, and waited at the entrance to the cemetery, wearing his sash, assisted by his assistant, the rural guard and customs officers with bayonets fixed on their rifles, the arrival of the procession.

The priest of Mornac soon appeared with the body, and followed by the entire Catholic population. The mayor advanced towards him, saying: "Mr. Priest, you will not enter!" and, joining the gesture to word, he put his hands on the priest's chest to

The crowd, fearing to see their priest brutalized, had a movement-forward. The customs officers wanted to oppose it by crossing the guns, and there a scene of disorder and scandal occurred. The cross was thrown to the ground, the coffin was thrown underfoot assistants, and the poor father fell over, wanting to protect; the overexcited crowd knocked down one of the customs officers. Then the priest was pushed into the cemetery, where he carried out the burial, after the pit had been dug again by the child's father-child, before the eyes of the entire population.

Following this scandal, we had the audacity to pursue the unfortunate people guilty of having wanted to bury their child. A sixteen-year-old boy was included in the pursuit I

Before the Marennes court, the prosecutor of the Republic, Mr. Vivien, who wanted above all to obtain a condemnation to which the Freemasonry of Paris held a lot, had a bright idea: he threatened the witnesses to have them arrested if they testified in favor of the accused.

376 JEWISH FRANCE

Despite a talented lawyer, Mr. Querenet, the accused, the material offense being proven, were sentenced to sentences ranging from fifteen to ten days in prison.

Have you read Chambrun's Tears of Pineton? This book, admired excessively by Michelet, is moving and more of a passage made us cry once upon a time over the fate of the Pro-French testants. If Pineton had been the master, he would have probably acted like the mayor of Mornac and thrown into the mud the coffin of those who were not of his community-nion.

In the South, particularly, the Protestants were unworthy. In Montauban, they had the majority in the municipal council although they do not represent in the city that only a sixth of the population; they took advantage of it to go and crochet the Villebourbon school which belonged to the Brothers; they removed crucifixes from schools everywhere.

In Nîmes, they began by banning the processions, then, in July 1882, they tore down the crucifix placed in a room of the recently inaugurated hospice-A touching scene took place. All the sick, who could-

that the weeping Sisters carried in procession in a small chapel, while the administrators sneered and blasphemed. The sick refused unanimously to sleep in the new room.

When the day of punishment comes for the minority which allows itself such acts, you will hear these men, so coarse in success, so flat when the luck has turned, start bleating their speeches again on the tolerance.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 377

Isn't it interesting, in any case, sadly interesting, it would be true, to see the Protestants, who began by hating the Church, will come to hate Christ, to overthrow his image everywhere, to forbid anyone from learning his name to children?

However painful this development may seem to us, is no less logical. The current era has, at least, this advantage of dispelling all ambiguities, of making to bring forth all that is in germ at the bottom of things. Protestantism goes where it was meant to go, it finds the goal it had to find by following the path he took; he seals his alliance with the Jew in this denial of the cross, in this spit thrown in the face of the Divine Master, who was the act of initiation into Templar Freemasonry, ancestor and source of today's Freemasonry.

m

THE JEWS

The hatred of the child. – The bloody sacrifice. – The testimonies of history. – Chaucer and the Canterbury Tales. – Raphael Levy.

– The assassination of Father Thomas. – The kidnappings of eufauto in Orient. – A book by a converted rabbi. – The cult of Moloch. – Lack of independence among French scholars. – The Jews in The Academy of Inscriptions. – Heredity. – Outrages of the Jews against the Catholic cult. – The Jewish republicans. – liendlé. – Isaiah Levaillant. – Jewish witnesses before the courts. – Moses, Lisbon and Camille Dreyfus. – Hérold. – Edouard Lokroy. – Yesterday and today. – Robespierre's snotty spy.

– Paul Bert and his lies. – The Jewish publishers of the Manuals.

– Little Jews. – Michel Bréul. – Camille Sée and the law on ren-

Charles Laurent. – Mr. and Mrs. Neuburger. – Ghalllemel-Lacour. – The Jews and pornography. – The publications obs-scenes. – What we saw in the street. – Léo Taxil and the Jews. –
 The longanimity of Catholics. – The infamies of the Lantern. –
 The Talmud of the Brook. – Legal Persecution. – The Agents Jews. – The Clovis Hugues affair. – A court hearing in 1885. -- The apology for assassination. – The new police. – Custodes ipsos guis custodiet? – The Paris of Ignotus.– The innocents before the courts. – The Freemasonic judiciary and Jewish. – Some types of magistrates. – Beyne. – Loves of a section president at the Council of State. – The hunt for the priest.

– The death of Father Frairot. – The Israeli Archives and Msf Howard.,– Our poor Brothers.– The Saint Elme affair– Two deput-convicted of bribery. – Have you finished? – The suffering of humble. – A masterpiece to be made. – The outrages from below. –
 A confessor of the faith under the Terror. – Freycinet. – The per-.'
 acutioa in the hospital. – Lay nurses. – Quentin. – Doctor Després. – The Sisters of Charity and the cho-Lera. – Sick people who escape. – A municipal councilor) who is afraid of the Prussians, but who does not back down before the Sisters.

– Gojiclusiou,

m

THE JEWS

HYPOCRITE among Freemasons and Protestants and exaggerated above all by this servility which pushes cersome men to always side with the strongest, the religious persecution takes on a character with the Jews of particular harshness. Nothing would have changed for them; they hate Christ in 4886, as they hated him from time of Tiharius Augustus, they cover him with the same outrages- /7{\^
 ges. Whipping the crucifix on Good Friday, desecrating the , / , hosts, to defile the holy images, such is the great joy of the Jew in the Middle Ages; such is his great joy today.

Formerly, it attacked the bodies of children; today, it is to their soul that he wants with the atheistic teaching; he knows-once it poisons, now it poisons: which is better?

Noting the persistence of these feelings of hatred among the Jews it is impossible not to speak a little at length of this bloody sacrifice, this thousand accusation ^^ times proven and against which they always defend themselves with;
 the aplomb that characterizes them.

the Tiszla Elziar case, issued the Jews a certificate of good conduct, this Among the slanders engendered by the hatred and fanaticism, he said, there is certainly no greater absurd that which asserts that the Jews shed blood 0 on the occasion of their religious festivals. To believe such stories- tories is nothing less than a monstrous madness (1). »>

(1) Review of Jewish Studies, No. 5.

382 JEWISH FRANCE

'Unfortunately, countless facts contradict the testimony-
1 very suspicious lineage of Renan.

In 1071, in Blois, a child was crucified by the Jews
"7 and then thrown into the river; in 1114, at Norwich, in England-
"On earth, a twelve-year-old child is lured into a house ^ Jewish and suffered terrible tortures; in 1179, a child, whom the Church venerates under the name of Saint Richard and of whom it celebrates'brela celebrates on March 25, is assassinated on Easter Day; in 1181, another child, Radbert, is killed by the Jews, also-
* ment at the time of Easter; in 1236, near Ha-Guenau, three seven-year-old children are sacrificed by the Jews;
In 1244, a Christian child was martyred; in 1255, a ^ Lincoln's child, Hugh, is sequestered until the days ' of the Passover, and the Jews, who came from all corners of England-earth, put him on the cross; in 1257, in 1261, same atten-
' states in London and Wellsenburg; in 1261, in Pforztzheim, ^ near Baden, a seven-year-old girl is strangled; in f 1283, in Mainz, a child is sold by his wet nurse to the ' Jews who kill him; in 1285, in Munich, a child is sagné; in 1286, a fourteen-year-old child, named Uthernher, was martyred for three days; in 1287, in Bern,
A little boy, Rudolph, was killed for Easter; in 1292, \ 293,1295, same facts in Colmar, in Grems, in Berne; in 1303, a little schoolboy, Conrad, son of a soldier, was slaughtered; in 1345, .
and blessed. Henry was also slaughtered; in 1401, at Düs-Senlofen, in Württemberg, a four-year-old child even fate; in 1407, the Jews were expelled from the country, following 'similar facts; in 1429, in Rovensbourg, Louis Von Bruck is sacrificed by the Jews he served at table during Easter; in 1454, in Castile, a child was torn to pieces and his heart is cooked; in 1462, a child, the well-blessed Andrew, is sacrificed; in 1475, martyrdom of the blessed-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 383

young Simon, in Trent; in 1480, the same crimes in Treviso and Veneto; in 1486, in Regensburg, six children

Jews through his own father; in 1520, in Biring, two children are bled; in 1541, a four-year-old child, Micliel, is tortured for three days; in 1547, in Rave, the son of a tailor is crucified by two Jews; in 1569, a child is slaughtered by the Jew Jacques de Leozyka; in 1574, in Punia, In Lithuania, a seven-year-old girl is murdered by the Jew Joachim Smieilavicz; in 1597, near Siyalow, Jews slit the throat of a child to sprinkle his blood on the new synagogue; in 1550, in Ladaen, a child of five years^Mattheus Jillech, is assassinated; in 1670, the Jew Raphael Levy was burned alive for bleeding a child (1).

Similar events are happening all the time in the East.

All these crimes are attested by countless histo • nothings whose testimonies would lengthen this disproportionately work. Mr. Rupert, in his History of the Synagogue^ cited some of the most striking stories.

There is not a writer of the Middle Ages who does not speak of these facts as an ordinary thing.

The Saxon Chronicler, who mentions everything that happens around him and don't forget to note the weather, recounted the murder of the Norwich child.

"At that time," he said, "the Jews of Norwich bought a Christian child before Easter and tortured him with all-

(i) The author of the book Pro Judæis^ reflections and published documents in 1884, in Turin, at the Roux and Favale bookstore, does not respond to any of these facts. The work, moreover, as the title indicates, is not than a flat apology for the Jews of all countries and of all time.

hM

384 JEWISH FRANCE

you the same tortures with which Our Lord had been en-surrounded, and on Good Friday they hung him from a rope in hatred of Our Lord and then burned him. He does wonderful miracles and he is called Saint William.

But it is Chaucer perhaps who is most interesting to consult on this point. The 15th century poet, who rests at Westminster and on whose tomb some pretty verses of the Flower and the Leaf, was the exact painter Canterbury pillowcases) are a kind of Decameron to which serves as a pretext and framework for the pilgrimage, this pilgrimage to the relics of Saint Thomas Becket, who played such a great role in the English life of yesteryear and which attracted, each year, towards the famous sanctuary, hundreds of thousands of travelers not only from England, but from more distant countries (1).

Brought together by chance, pilgrims from all walks of life: a lawyer, a country lord, a captain of ship, a rich merchant, a doctor, a gossip
Balh, ((widow of five husbands without more, " a superior convent, suitable for charming the boredom of the journey

(1) See for Chaucer the work of Tuine and especially the Volume of the English literature at.Q Filon. Filon became attached to this country where he had was the tutor or rather the companion in exile and the friend of a young man heroic prince; he lives like a sage with his memories and his books in his cottage in Margate, and it was there that he wrote about the English writers this volume full of fine insights and observations penetrating.

Let us add that Chaucer, who is a mocker in the manner of Rabelais, did not spare the monks. This Story of the Prioress therefore has no fanatical character; it only confirms a certainty which was in everyone's minds about the murders of children committed by the Jews.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 385

to tell a story in turn. Nothing is more tum-song than the Story of the Priory. It is truly charming so deep in its feminine mysticism that we translate it-sounds almost entirely while striving to respect, as much as possible, the naivety of the original.

THE PRIORY'S REGIMEN

.... In a great city of Asia there was, in the middle of the Christian people, a Jewry, protected by a lord of the country, "for foui usury and lucre of felony," odious to Christ and his company. And one could go to through this district on horseback and on foot, because he was free and open at both ends.

Now, at one end there was a small school of Chrewhere there were children, a large number of children children of Christian blood, who learned in this school, year by year, the lessons used in that country, children in their infancy.

Among the children was a widow's son, a nice little one seven-year-old cleric, who came to school every day, and whenever he saw an image of the Mother of Christ, he had in use, as he had been taught, to a-kneel down and say "Ave Maria" as he passed by. path.

So the widow had taught her grandson to honor our blessed Lady, dear Mother of Christ, and he does not never forgot it; for good children simply learn this very quickly; and really every time I think about it, Saint Nicholas comes to mind, he who, so young, II 2^2

3 \Q JEWISH FRANCE

to Christ made reverence. ((For /le so young io Crîst dede I reference. >)

This little boy, still very busy with his ABC book, expected other children to sing the Alma Redemptoris that they learned in their antiphonary and he was quite bold to approach closer and closer, listening especially the words and the notes, until he knew the pre-) to learn the verse completely by heart.

But he didn't understand anything of this Latin, he was so young wait for age. "For he so young and tender ivas of age. »

He asked his friend to explain this song to him in his language, and to tell him why this song was in use. So he prayed, and very often on his naked knees, to explain and clarify it to him.

His companion, a little older than him, replied thus: € This song, I was told, was made in honor of our blessed Lady to greet her, and also to pray to her to be our help and assistance when we die- I cannot tell you more on this matter; because I am learning to sing, but I know very little of it. grammar.

And this song was made in honor of the Mother of Christ?

agency to know everything before Christmas.
I should be disgraced for my ABCs, and beaten three times in an hour, I want to know it, / wol it connCy our lady for to honor. »

His comrade told him this in particular, when they came home, and that every day, until that he knew it by heart.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 387

There he sang it well and boldly,
Word for word, in agreement with the song.

Twice a day it passed through his throat, when he went to school and when he came home; and all his intention was placed in the Mother of Christ.

As I said, this little child going away and going away-nant by Jewry, sang and shouted full of joy:
O Aima Redemptoris. The sweetness of the Mother of Christ had so pierced her heart, that, to pray to her better, he couldn't stop singing along the way.

Our first enemy, "the serpent Sathanas," who has in the heart of the Jews his wasp's nest.

That hath in Jewes hert his waspis nest, swelled with rage and said: "O Hebrew people! Alas! is it there for you an honest thing that such a kid is walks around as he pleases, much to your annoyance, and sings such a song that is against respecting your laws?))

From then on, the Jews conspired to drive out this innocent man of this world; they hired a murderer who had a domi-he withdrew into an alley; this cursed Jew seized him, held him firm, cut his throat and threw him into a pit.

I say that he threw him into a filthy cesspool, where these Jews "purge lier entrail." O cursed people! all nephews of Herod, what good will your evil des-breast? The murder will be known, certainly it will not fail not... and the voice of blood will cover your cries with its cries cursed action.

O martyr confirmed in virginity, you can sing to pre-feel and continually follow the heavenly lamb whose grarîd Evangelist Saint John wrote to Patmos that the virgins walk before him, singing a canticle to new days.

And the poor widow waited all night for her little darling, and he did not come. So as soon as it was day, his face very pale out of fear and anxious thoughts, she went to look for him at school and elsewhere, until finally she discovered research force, that it was in the Jewish quarter that we had seen him last.

Her heart filled with maternal pity, she leaves, half outside herself, from place to place, wherever she could assume to find his grandchild. And constantly she cried out to the sweet and benign Mother of Christ, and she finally went straight to seek him out among the cursed Jews.

She prayed, and piteously begged all the Jews she met to tell him if by chance his son had been there. They said, No; but Jesus, by his grace, put him in pen-felt to shout to his son at the very spot where had thrown him into the pit.

O great God, who draws your praise from the mouths of the innocent-hundred, such is your power! This pearl of chastity, this emerald, even more this brilliant ruby of martyrdom, lay there with his throat cut, and he began to sing Aima Redemptoris mater so loudly that the whole square resounds with it.

The Christian people, who were passing in the street, entered to admire this prodigy, and in all haste they sent for the provost. He arrived immediately and without delay, and praised Christ who is the king of Heaven, and then his Mother, honor of humanity, then he had the Jews bound.

With deep lamentations, the child was taken out, always sang his song; and, with honor and great procession, he was carried to the nearby abbey. His mother lay unconscious near the bier; and hardly anyone who were there were able to pull out this new Rachel.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 389

The provost had each of these Jews killed with torture and shameful death, and that on the spot. And he could not help-dear to curse them saying: This one will have the punishment who deserve punishment. So he had them dragged by a horse fiery, then suspended by law.

And our innocent lay on his bier before the altar, while mass was being said. Then the abbot and his convent urged the good people to have him buried immediately.
And when the holy water was thrown over him, the child, sprinkled with this holy water, spoke again and sang Aima Redemp-toris mater f

This abbot, who was a holy man (as are the monks, or at least should be), began to conjure the young child and said: this 0 dear child, I implore you in virtue of the Holy Trinity, tell me what reason you have for sing, since your throat is cut, it seems to me."

"My throat is cut to the bone of my neck," said this child, and by nature I should have died ago long time. But Jesus Christ, as you find him in books, wants his glory to remain and remain great in the spirits, and for the honor of his dear Mother, I can sing Aima again, loud and clear.

This fountain of molci, of Christ sweet Mother, I have it always loved. And on the point of dying I saw her come to me; and she ordered me to sing this antiphon for my death, as you heard it. And when I had sang it seemed to me that she was placing a grain on my language.

This is why I sing and I will of course sing in honor of this blessed and all-good Virgin, Until

The pawn removes the grain from my tongue. Then she also says to me:
. II. 2-2.

300 JEWISH FRANCE

0 My little child, alars I will come for you, when the gin will have been removed from your tongue. Don't be afraid, I won't I won't abandon you."

This holy monk, this abbot, I mean, stuck out his tongue little one and took out the grain; and the child gave up the ghost all gently. And when the abbot saw this marvel, his bitter tears flowed like rain, and he fell stretched out on the ground, and he stayed there for a long time,
as if he were attached to it.

The whole convent also prostrated itself on the ground, weeping and praising the dear Mother of Christ. And after getting up and having advanced, they took the martyr out of his coffin, and in small body. "Enclose them his little hody swect. »

God grant us to join him where he is now!

And you, young Hugh of Lincoln! Killed also by the Jews cursed (the thing is notorious, because it is very recent),
pray also for us, a sinful and unstable people,
so that in his pity the merciful God may multiply upon us the treasures of his mercy, out of reverence for his Mother Mary.

0 yongë Hughe of Lincoln, slayn also With cursed Jews, (as it is notable,
For it nys but a litei while ago)
Pray eek for us, we synful folk unstable
That of his mercy God so wonderful,
Or us his grete mercy multiple,
For reverence of his modir iMary.

Let us do as the Prioress did, and pray to the martyred children.
of yesteryear, Hugues, Guillaume, Henry and our little Paris-his, Saint Richard, to intercede for their comrades today's victims of Jewish Freemasonry. They

JEWISH PERSECUTION 391

also would not ask for anything better than to join their innocent hands and sing Alma Redemptions mater, they too are thrown by their executioners into a filthy cesspool where, according to Ghaucer's expression, the Jews have emptied the depths of their entrails: the teaching-secular ment. Let us pity them and pray for them!

We could, I repeat, multiply the evidence to infinity.

La Civitta catliolica, in the issue of April 1, 4882, reproduced all the documents relating to the trial of Trent,
in 1475, and kept in the Vatican archives.

Nothing is stranger than the details of this trial which are of undeniable authenticity, nothing as striking as the confessions of the accused themselves. A whole side of life^p^ from the past suddenly appears to us. A Jew charged { years, Moses the Elder, aged 80, used blood */ '' Christian all his life. There are merchants, of blood Dirétian, like Isaac of Cologne and Richard of Brescia, which provide for all demands. Saxon Bear is the traveling salesman, the sales representative of these horrible industrialists: he goes from city to city, from ghetto to of his rabbi, Spring, Another of the accused, Vitale (ana-Levita's gram) was initiated by his uncle Solomon, who lived in Monza, near Milan. The blood of ordinary was mixed with a triangular-shaped cake, which without probably gave the idea of the Freemasonic triangle.

In modern times, the trial of Raphaël Lévy, judged in Metz in 1670, is also of an extraordinary interest. We cannot argue here about the distance, the superstitions of backward times; the thing happened in France, at the end of the 17th century. All documents are available situation of criticism. There are all the elements which constitute—kill a moving drama, and if the Jews did not suffocate stubbornly everything that displeases them, if it was a Catholic, this famous cause would have been told a thousand times times, and it would have been published in illustrated issues.

392 JEWISH FRANCE

We have an excellent guide for this trial, the relation of a very conscientious historian, Amelot de la Houssaye, which is entitled: Summary of the trial of the Jews of Metz. An Oratorian, Richard Simon, timidly tried to soften the facts in a factum which he later reproduced in the first volume of his Critical Library, but we know the taste for paradox that the religious man who signed the notice about himself, which was found in Dieppe in 1863: R. Schimeon ben Joachim.

In any case, Richard Simon's reservations do not detract from—nothing to the reality of the meticulously circumstantial fails—that we will summarize as quickly as possible.

On Wednesday, September 25, 1669, at about one o'clock
• in the afternoon, the named Mangeotte Willemin, wife of Gilles le Moine, wheelwright from the village of Glatigni, in the country Messin, went to a fountain two hundred paces away from the village to wash some clothes; she was followed by her three-year-old son, who was covered with a hat red and who had blond, curly hair. At twenty-five step of the fountain, the child fell, the mother returned to pick him up, but the child having said that he would get up on her own, she continued on her way and went to wash her laundry convinced that he was following her.

About half a quarter of an hour later, Amelot continues, Houssaye, this mother not seeing her child return, e'.le ran to where she had left him and not having found him she thought he had returned home where she went immediately

JEWISH PERSECUTION 393

ask her husband and again her father-in-law and her step-mother, who all answered him that they had not seen him some and others, began to fear that this child would was lost, and in this apprehension sought him in the village, then return to the fountain with the mayor of the place, search in the bushes nearby, call the child by the name Didier which he had received at baptism, cry out and turn-lie, but without finding it.

The mother, accompanied by her stepfather and another woman, having decided to go on the main road to Metz, far from the fountain of about two hundred paces, found there the remains of the feet of her child, whom she followed until having lost them among the trace of cart wheels and horses' feet, she remembers it came back to tell her husband, who at that moment ran to the same path and shortly after having seen coming towards him, from the Metz side, a rider of the company of the Count of Vaudemont, named Daniel Payer, he asked him if he had not found a child, to which the rider ingenuously replied that he had found a Jew who rode on a white horse, who had a long beard black, who was going towards Metz, who was carrying a child in front of him who may be three or four years old, and that when he meets him had moved away from the main road out of range of a pistol shot.

This poor father, who recognized by the circumstance of age that the Jew had taken his child away from him, runs after him, asks the port of the city called Germans, if we had seen it pass. A man named Thibault Regnault, turner, who lives near the same door, told him that he had seen him enter; but this was not enough, because he did not tell him where this Jew had gone, nor where he had carried the child.

However, the father having learned, almost at the same time, from a resident of the village of Hez, that this Jew was Raphaël Lévy of Boulay, whom this inhabitant had met the same day on the highway, carrying in front of him something which he covered with his coat, and that, when he came to Metz, he stayed with the named Boy, Jew, his relative, he was at that very hour at this Jew asks for his child. He is told that no one knows what it is. and the master of the house was not there, he decided to wait for him and having seen a woman near the door, he said to her again that he was looking for her child, and soon after a Jewish girl who was returning from the city and who knew that this man was asking for his child, said, speaking to the woman in German, that nothing should be said.

394 JEWISH FRANCE

no longer doubting the loss of his son, he thought from then on of pro-follow the revenge against Raphaël Lévy.

This Raphael Levy was a man of fifty-six years old, medium height, black curly hair, beard black and very thick. A very zealous Jewish agent, he had traveled the Levant, Italy, Germany, Holland in charge of the in-interests of his religion. He was born in the village of Xelain-short, located in the Metz region and had settled there since a few years in the town of Boulay.

The trial was what all trials of Jews are.
in which we find in all latitudes the same processes that are reproduced with exactness surprising.

All the Jews in the region began to move, bribed the witnesses, established a correspondence with the accused. These seized letters were later used as evidence of more against him. In one of them he wrote to the leaders of the Metz synagogue:

Ghers directors, the servant of the master of the prison told me that
The Jew who brought me food told him that the child had been tied up.
Ah! write to me how my affairs are concerning my witnesses, write to me in one way or another, to this end that I may have once some consolation, send me some paper! Haman (1)

(1) Raphaël Lévy gives this name of Haman (Aman) to the prosecutor general in memory of Haman, who remained in execration among the Jews.

Haman, the wicked Haman, the race of Amalekites.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 395

was in jail today, said he would break everything that the justice has been done; for this purpose, have regard to Parliament. I pray that I am helped to get out of this misery, and if I were surprised and that I cannot speak with my dear wife and child and that I cannot count in Metz with the controller, that my dear good woman and my children can have a piece of peace.
I will suffer death as a true son of Israel and sanctify the in God's name; I only ask that my daughter be married Blimelé who is engaged and will not abandon my wife and children children. I put myself in this misery for the community.
great God will assist me; I desire Jewish burial, other-
I don't forgive.

on Jewish morals. The accused is sent a small straw of straw that he had to put under his tongue at the time of the interrogations, to make the judges favorable to him. He also recommends pronouncing as an incantation five Hebrew words. A ticket is designed as follows:

If in case (God forbid) we want to ask you the question, you will say all this three times: Me Jew Jew me, long live Jew, Jew vlv^ dead Jew, dead Jew.

The Jews, who held continual secret meetings at a of their most zealous coreligionists Gédéon Levy, had recourse to a strategy similar to the one they employed in the Tisza-Elzár affair; they renewed the history of the children of Jacob who, after selling their brother, came tell their father that a ferocious Lete had devastated him: Will make pes-sima comedit um. They announced that the child they was looking for had been devoured by wolves.

They decided, says Amelot des Houssayes, to display the clothes and the rest of this child to which he still had part of the neck and of the coasts^ in a wood a quarter of a league from the village of

396 JEWISH FRANCE

Glatigni, and so that he could be discovered more easily, they extended his shirt on a bush three feet high. Then They addressed several people, both from the city and the cam-loincloth, to force them to go and look in the woods, telling them that if they could find some remains of this child, they would re-i would know of considerable sums.

A woman from the village of Ratonsai, who is not very distant gné of that of Glatigni, deposited in the information made to the Par only three Jews from Metz, whom she did not know by their names, addressed themselves to her to know what was said about the kidnapped child. And on this she replied to them that if it were true that this child had been eaten by animals, they would have had to make a dear-dear in the woods, that we would still find some small remains there of his bards: one of the Jews added that one could also do so find the head.

Indeed, a few days later, namely the twenty-sixth of September 1669, four swineherds, who guarded their flocks in the same wood, found the head of a child with the collar and part ribs, two little dresses one inside the other, a woollen stocking, a red cap, and a little shirt spread over a bush, all without being torn or bloody.

On the advice they gave to the child's father and to him advisor who went to the scene and drew up a procedure verbal of Will of the place where the child had been lost, and of that where a child's head and clothes were found, which habits the father recognized, in the presence of the counselor, for those whose her child was dressed the day he was taken away. With regard to the child-child, he could not be recognized by the appearance of this head, because the, face was disfigured, although the flesh appeared quite fresh and bloody, depending on whether it is worn by the same person minutes which contain the lifting thereof.

At the same time the swineherds were heard, who testified] to have found things exposed in the way they were said above, and one of them added that it was not possible that this child would have been devoured by beasts: because, besides the clothes were not torn or bloody, he had noticed that when wild beasts stole some sheep or other things domestic animal, they always ate the head first-first.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 397

This maneuver, which could succeed and which succeeded in a country like Austria where the Jews are all-powerful, had little chance of success in a country like the France of the 17th century, where the Parliaments, enjoying a absolute independence, judged in the serenity of their consciousness and without obeying external influences (i).

The neighbors testified that they had seen Gideon Levy in-to go into the woods and come out with a basket on your back, which-how long before the clothes and head of the child. Another witness testified that this Gideon had told him to go and get these remains and had shown him the place from the woods where he would find them.

Parliament imprisoned Gideon Levy and prosecuted the trial instruction.

The crime was obvious. Overwhelmed by testimonies overwhelming, Raphaël Levy was condemned to be burned alive and the sentence was carried out on January 47, 4670.

The death of this man was truly superb. He made his farewells to some of his coreligionists who Te-

(Ij Mr. Emmanuel Michel, advisor to the Royal Court of Metz, au-The author of the excellent book by UQ, a member of the Metz Parliament, notes that if the Lorraine magistrates felt general contempt then duty of impartiality. "In 1660," he wrote, "a Jew was killed by a soldier. It was at the instance of the court that the culprit was pursued. He had been arrested, but the commander of the place and the colonel of the regiment had placed guard posts in front of the prison so that the soldier could not be disposed of. The king, by letter of seal given in Vincennes on July 29, 1660, sent to the Parliament—that he had just given orders for the guardhouses were lifted and that the course of justice was not interrupted."

II '23

398 JEWISH FRANCE

had come to see, recommended his wife and children to them—children and, not content with their promise, he forced them to pledge by oath. He refused to drink the wine that was offered to him—carried it because it was not kosher, pushed the candle away that we wanted to put in his hand, gave a vigorous nudged the Capuchin who was exhorting him with patience worthy of a better fate, crying out that he was a Jew and that he wanted to die a Jew. "His soul," says a German relation, rushed one Saturday with holiness and purity towards the bosom of God. "

For his own who could not have a second of illusion about the material fact of the assassination, but which saw the accomplishment of a ritual act, who venerated the man who, as he himself said, had sacrificed himself For the community, Raphael Levy was a martyr. What—that he was illiterate, he was named honorary rabbi after his death, he was awarded the Chover, the epithet of honor; when his name is pronounced, he is called Kadosch, the saint and Chasid,\e pious. The Israelite Archives proposed, there is a few years, to erect a statue to him, they contained also some verses from M™® GP Merlieux, née Polack, in honor of the martyr.

Shadow of Raphael, why your plaintive voice
Does she come to trouble me with your sad accents?
Why, leaving the heavens, your fugitive soul,
Wandering, does she come to show herself to my gaze?
In vain my weak voice of your sublime virtue,
Seeks to repeat here the noble devotion.
You died a hero, and your magnanimous heart
Bless with fervor the name of the Almighty.

Gédéon Lévy got away with banishment. The investigation
The fact about this crime once again brought to light

The constant habit among the Jews of outraging the faith of others, to parody the ceremonies of our religion. The*
On Good Friday of each year, the Jews gathered at Maieur Schaub to counterfeit the Passion of Christ and whip the crucifix. We witness every year similar scenes, only, the Jews being the masters, they happen in broad daylight.

After the Raphaël Lévy affair, which leaves no room for doubt, the most topical fact of ritual assassination is the assassination of Father Thomas in Damascus in 1840, whose ' / ^ the slightest peculiarities are known, of which it is impossible ^ to deny the obvious since the event occurred in full 19th century. At the time of the Tisza Elzlar affair, the newspaper V Union of Alsace-Lorraine summed up with infinite clarity of this famous trial.

Father Thomas, of the Capuchin order, was loved by all in Damascus, he practiced medicine at the same time as he devoted himself to the apostolate, he healed souls and cared for the body.

Christians, Turks and Jews were unanimous in praising his talent and his unalterable charity: everyone called him the holy missionary. 11 had gained the confidence of all classes of society; but, It was especially to the Jews that he showed himself to be good and benevolent, because of the great desire which urged him to win their souls for God. One day he was threatened with death by a bad Christian whom he refused to bless an illicit marriage, he stretched out his neck to her, saying: I am ready to die, but not to fail in my duty. – Pen– While the plague was ravaging Damascus, he shut himself up with the plague victims and lavished his care on them. No pain, no sacrifice cost, when it was a question of the good of his fellow men. Also Sche– Rif Pasha, the Turkish governor, himself honored him with an aiTeclion very special. He had ordered his servants to allow free access to his home at all times.

4Uw ' \ JEWISH FRANCE

However, there were some miserable fanatics who to massacre this holy man. As he was passing by one evening, the February 5, 1840, in front of the house of an Israelite, named David Harari, the latter asked him to come into his home. Father Tho– But he accepted this invitation without hesitation. David Harari was considered, in fact, the most pious Jew of Damascus.

No sooner had the door closed on the Father than David Harari, his two brothers, his uncle and two others Jews rushed upon the poor monk, knocked him down–

There also lived a rabbi or Chakam, and the Jewish barber Soliman was called. The latter received the order to cut the victim's neck and, as he did not have the courage, David Harari, the good and pious friend of the Father, seized the knife himself 1 – But his hand was trembling, and the dismal task was not progressing, when his brother Aaron came to his aid, while Suleiman held by the beard the Father's head strongly stretched.

The blood, collected and bottled, was sent to the grand-rabbi. The body was stripped of its clothes, which were burned, then disarticulated and cut into small pieces. The bones were even ground in a mortar and all these shapeless remains were thrown away in a cesspool.

The unfortunate people believed that they would thus make the trace disappear forever. of their crime.

When night came, Ibrahim Amoran, the Christian servant of the Father, worried about not seeing him return and knowing he was in the Jewish quarter, went there to look for him. There he found the same fate as his master. Like him, he was seized and murdered-sine by the Jews, who had gathered, called the V Union of Al-sace-Lorraine, "to have Christian blood to put in the sweet bread for the feast of Purim.

But these disappearances were soon reported: we had suspicious. The French consul took the matter to heart and prompted an investigation. It was known that Soliman, the Larbier Jewish, had been called that same night to the house of David Harari. He was arrested, interrogated, and through his confessions found the remains of the Father, and they laid hands on the others-perpetrators of both crimes.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 401

Of the sixteen people arrested, two died during the instruction; four were pardoned, among others this Suleiman, because of their revelations; the other ten were condemned to death.

The Jewish race gave there a new example of its admiration-A strong spirit of solidarity, it set all of Europe in motion. Gremieux and Montefiore went to Damascus; However, they could not prevent a conviction which was inevitable since the facts were proven, demonstrated, indisputable, but they tore from the viceroy, weighing on him with all the weight of cosmopolitan Jewish finance, grace of the condemned. The guilty were neither justified nor excused, a justly deserved sentence was simply lifted (1).

The Moniteur de Rome, in its issue of June 15, 1883, cited facts of this kind at a very recent date.

A few years ago, in Smyrna, his correspondent wrote to him—dant of Constantinople, a small child belonging to one of the first Greek families of the city were robbed on the approaches to the Jewish Passover. Four days later, on the banks of the the sea, her corpse pierced by a thousand pinpricks. The mother, mad with grief, loudly accused the Jews of this murder: the Christian population rose up en masse and ran to the neighborhood

(1) To consult on this subject a very curious book, but unfortunately—almost impossible to find today, Historical account of the Syrian affairs from 1840 to 1842, by Achille I. Laurent.

40.^ JEWISH FRANCE

Jewish, where a terrible massacre took place: more than six hundred Jews perished.

Last year, in Balata, the ghetto of Constantinople, a child
He was lured into a Jewish house where more than twenty witnesses saw him.
enter. The next day, his body was found in the Golden Horn:
The consequence was yet another riot.

In Galata, the same thing happened. Mr. Serouïos, the lawyer the most renowned of the Greek community, sent a request to all representatives of the Christian powers in Constantinople, to seek justice and to obtain revenge. But the Jews bribed the Turkish police who made the interrogators disappear.
gatories and witness statements. The Ecumenical Patriarchate, obeying orders from above, had declared, by me-paid doctors, that the mother was suffering from mental illness.
The matter was hushed up, whatever M^r. Serouïos might do, and the Jews deposited a sum of money with the Ecumenical Patriarchate, for pay alimony to the mother of the stolen child.

At the beginning of 1883, two children, belonging to Maltese families, were kidnapped by a Jew. The Istanbul, on the information provided by the father of a stolen children, Mr. Caruana, called for the arrest of the police on this kidnapping and energetically demanded the punishment of the guilty. The case had a huge impact in the city and set the entire population in revolution.

The chief of police of Pera, HE Bahri Pasha, and the Galata police commissioner, responsible for investigating the quest, convinced by hard and fast reasons—

of the child, as well as a Turkish butcher, who had snatched the poor little one from the hands of the kidnapper.

The Stamboul refused to deny the fact although he was told offered a subsidy of a thousand francs per month. What did they do the Jews? For six thousand pounds (one hundred) hashish

L.\ JEWISH PEFISECUTION 403

about thirty-seven thousand francs), they obtained the suppression-sion of the newspaper and the alTaire was suppressed (1).

Without being able to deny the facts of this order, the Jews have still-days claimed that they were acts of individual ferocity dual and not the fulfillment of a liturgical precept.
Here again, German science, infinitely more independent-Dante than ours, convinced them of lying. The doc-Toer Justus, in a brochure published in Paderbonne, Judens Spiegel writes:

"The theological books of the Jews are divided into two categories, namely Peshath and Kabala. In the first class belong the Talmud and the Schulchan. Now, according to the Schulchan Aruch, it is not a sin if a Jew reads a Christian. (Law 50 and 81.) In the Talmud published in Amsterdam in 1646, Jews were ordered to exter-undermine the disciples of the Nazarene. (Sanhedrin Pireck X, Gheleck and Aboda, Sarah Pireck L)

"A few pages further on we read:

"It is astonishing that the blood of the Klipoth, that is to say of the non-Jewish girls, however, be a sacrifice so agreeable to the

(1) Even in Europe, facts of this kind are still relatively-frequently.

The newspapers, moreover, never speak in such cases of anything other than acquittals; they kept silent about a crime of this kind appointed at the end of 1881, in Lutcza, a small village in the district of R .e.-zov, Jans Austrian Gallicia, about a young girl named Francesca >Inich. The three accused, Moi^e Ritter, his wife Gitel and Stoch-inski, were sentenced to death on December 21, 1882 by the jury of .
E^zeszov. The High Court of Justice quashed the judgment for defect of form and referred the three Jews to the Krakow court, who, on October 10, 1883, renewed the triple death sentence.

Heavens. It's to the point that shedding the blood of a young girl non-Jewish is a sacrifice as holy as that of the most precious perfumes, at the same time as a means of to reconcile with God and attract his blessings.

The question, moreover, has been completely clarified in a very curious book: Refutation of the Religion of the Jews and their rites by demonstration of the old and the new-Testament. The author is a Jew, born in the last century-denier, and from rabbi, became monk.

Nothing is more singular than the destiny of this book, even for those who know with what care the Israeli-lites make disappear everything that can enlighten the opinion on their account. First published in 1803, in the Moldavian language, It was translated into modern Greek by Jean de Giorgio, and into Arabic by the Orientals who, secular victims of the Jews, are interested in the Semitic question much more than we don't suppose so. Reprinted many times in Romania, in Constantinople and in several cities of O-lough, he is still missing. A resident of Damiata writes-was on this subject: o One can call rich with a great treasure the one who owns a copy, and very rich, who pos-sedes a printed copy. The cause of this fact is gold Jew who tried to make the memory of the world disappear of this work.

'A new edition, printed in Greek, appeared in 1834. to patriarchal typography. This is from a copy of this edition, which has itself become very rare, that an illus-A learned man from Italy had the idea of translating the cha-clown specially dedicated to the rite of blood.

In 1883, the work appeared under the title: Il sangue cristiano nei riti cetracci della moderna sinagoga revelation of neofito ex rahhino monaco greco per la

THE JEWISH PEACE 405

prima volta publicate in italia versione dal greek del NFS professor (1).

Reading this work, we understand the zeal that the Jews began to annihilate even the trace and the cries of fury that the Israelites pushed during its reim-pressure, three years ago (2).

The underside of medieval life appears here in the most striking way. We realize a thousand obs-hearts, of the impenetrable secret with which the Jews surrounded themselves, new crime came to rekindle at the moment when she began-to fade away, incomprehensible details of some witchcraft trials. Once again the legend fades away foolishness that they want us to accept, the eternal mystifica-tion of very wicked men dressed as Inquisitors per-following a Jew who is the model of all virtues. , ""^ We enter into Tantré of the alchemist indulging in ( strange mixtures, requiring blood for his opera- • hold on to those who address him under the pretext of dis-discover the philosopher's stone, Vanima mundi and, in reality, to perform a monstrous rite, echo of the abominable mysteries of Astoret.

What we worship in the ghetto is not the god of Moses is the horrible Phoenician Moloch to whom it is necessary, * as human victims, children and virgins.

(1) Prato, lipograpliia Giachetli, fíglio et sie.

(2) The book had appeared with the periolssion of the ecclesiastical authority-li(jue; the Israelite Archives, had the audacity to claim that it had been disavowed by the Moniteur de Rome, the Vatican organ; the Moniteu) claimed that he had not disavowed anything at all, at the cost-milk, and the Archives had to retract.

H 23.

406 THERE JEWISH FRANCE

The existence of ancient Israel, moreover, was it different thing that a perpetual struggle between Molocliism and the Jeliovism? Moloch, whose symbol is the bronze bull of Cartilage, which is made to redden in the fire on certain days and which is stuffed with human flesh, is the Semitic divinity par excellence. It is towards him and towards Baal, whose symbol is a donkey, that the Jews are constantly attracted by the attraction-tion of the race. It is him that Mariasse and the other kings prevaricators install in the desecrated Temple; it is to
to him that terrible sacrifices are offered on high places.
It is against him that the Prophets tirelessly rise up with an energy in indignation, a violence in the language that still resonates through the centuries. They brave death to fight idolatry, they announce the coming punishments, they go, in their intrepid zeal, to overthrow false gods, shameless and barbaric images.
There is not a page of the Bible that does not bear witness to these efforts to defend the idea of the true God against superstitions-corrupting actions of neighboring peoples.

against the habit of failing hot blood either to cowardice or in front of the altar.

Only be firm, do not bend; resist the inclination of eat blood; – no, you must not eat it; I want you pour it on the ground like water.

The regulations relating to meat, still observed by modern Israelites, seem a memory of these precautions against this voluptuousness of blood specific to the family seinitic and which the Aryans did not know.

German writers have perfectly clarified all these points. Frédéric Daumer (The Cult of Moloch cite the He-hreiixde antiquity, critical and historical research) ei TWGhillany {Human Sacrifices among the Jebreans \of antiquity) have arrived at the same conclusion without .know since their work was published the same year (1). Daumer uses many precautions, he , is true, and states that it does not make the Israelite people responsible for the acts of "a few fanatics who celebrate here and there a Molochist party; " he does not show any no less the close connection which exists between the morals of Israel at certain times and the bloody holocausts of Middle Ages (2) .

PERSECUTION JULVi: 40 i

By a kind of regression phenomenon, the Jew of the The Middle Ages, having fallen into degradation, returned to their

(1) Gustave Tridon's book, Jewish Molochism, clearly shows relief equaled that struggle supported by the Prophets against the cult of Moloch personified either by the bull or by the calf of gold.

(2) With its stone table for sacrifice, the old engraving of 3adler depicting the murder of six children from Ralisbon gives quite the impression of a blood cult ceremony in Car-tiling. Here is the text that accompanies this engraving:

c Following a search by the governor of Ralisbon, found the mutilated corpses of six missing children. The sacrificers had established, in the middle of this strange sanctuary, a stone enormous, more than a cubit in width, which had the shape of a chalice, mounted on a foot. It was the altar on which the victims. At the bottom of this lair, a laboratory was also discovered , where the manufacture of counterfeit money was carried out without scruple.

Another engraving by Sadler depicts the torture of a child Munich, whose death caused the massacre of the Jews in 1285.

((The child, the text says, was found on the instructions of the provider of the priests; the victim had been tied on a table— She was taken from the synagogue and pierced with stilettos, her eyes were gouged out. The blood had been collected by children. The excited people committed the most serious excesses against the Jews of the city, and it was necessary to primitive errors, yielded to the first impulse of the race, returned to human sacrifice.

408 JEWISH FRANCE

To these reminiscences of Phoenician depravities are added— adds a strange and explicable feeling, however. Jew is involuntarily disturbed by this atmosphere of ardent faith which reigned around him in the first centuries of the Christianity, he is struck by the miracles that feels the saints; he may stiffen against the Truth, he has moments of terrible anxiety, he is moved by the clear sense of certain prophecies and he imagines that, if Christ is truly— ment the Messiah, the droplet of blood of a baptized person absorbed by a circumcised person, will be enough to ensure his salvation.

The echo of these things reaches outside and those who watch— slow on society are simply limited to defending the tra— man's life against usury, child's life against ritual murder; — which today earns them the ana— themes of Freemasonry weeping over the fate of the good Jewish.

The French historical school, once again, has moved on to side of all this without seeing it, despite the new methods— new investigations that she claims to have invented. She stopped foolishly in front of dungeons which, according to VioUet—le—Duc himself, were latrines, in front of in pace which were cellars, she did not enter this mysterious sacrificarium, in this bloodier cabinet than that of Bluebeard, where the bloodless and the the bishop's authority to calm the popular excitement and stop— to stop the massacre.

These two curious engravings have been reproduced in the beautiful scientific publication entitled Cosmos (issue of March 30) 1885).

dried up veins the childish victims of se- superstition.
milic.

Perhaps one of our young scientists will undertake some-What day will he do some work in this direction? Perhaps he will try to to research the origin, to reconstruct the existence of Celts terrible sect that the Civitta Catholica believes to be the one Kasadim or Kabalists? Perhaps he will tell us-Are the transformations of this association analogous to that of the Assassins of the Old Man of the Mountain, of the Skopsis of Russia, the Tliugs of India, who, after having been all-powerful-health in the Middle Ages, no longer seems to be represented in modern Judaism, only in love at the present time of luxury and well-being, only by a few iso-
The author of such a work would need, in addition to independence-material dance, the moral independence so rare in our time-that, the detachment from publicity that the Jews have alone, the renunciation of these ribbons, of these well-received places-tributaries, to these seats of academics after which each runs so fast that he forgets his conscience along the way.

What happened in 1883 at the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres, for the biennial prize of twenty thousand francs, is hardly designed to encourage studious youth.
On the pretext that Oppert, who had won the prize first times, was Jewish, Renan took advantage of the fact that the assembly was not not enough to vote for Paul Mayer - again one! - son of a German Jew. After him, they had written on the list the Jew Darmesteter and Maspero, an Italian whose
The mother's motto was mai spero.

Hearing these exotically ending names, one old scholar, one of those old white men, as they said Chenier, who live half in their memories, had a melancholic and touching word: (c Our young scientists

410 THE JEWISH FRINGE

of French origin, therefore no longer work, he asked so that we are only presented with descendants of foreigners gers?" A huge sneer rose up, mocking the naivety patriotic of the old man, and all the members rush-go outside to have the honor of announcing the first first to the son of the German that he had the great recomthink that would have brought joy to so many French workers, honest, modest and poor.

No one in this assembly where there are a few ca-great Léon Gautier, scholar-poet who loves Christian France—of such enthusiastic and young love, which communisuddenly fucks everything he touches among these old women things of the past freshness, color and life. Who knows What did Mayer write? A few rhapsodies on a song of the Albigensian Crusade which he dealt with because the Jews were involved in this and to which he had nothing to do taken, if we are to believe Mr. Génac-Moncaux. Who does not know, on the contrary, the French Epics and this admirable book:

Chivalry, which the author carried for twenty years in his brain, or rather in his heart, and of which I heard
Mr. de Mun speaking with tender delight (1)?

(1) One could cite countless facts of this order. One of the brilliant students of the Ecole des Chartes, which is at the same time a firm Christian, Mr. Lecoy de La Marche, publishes a remarkable work on Saint Martin. The Académie commission proposes Saint Martin for a prize. Gaston Paris, always ready to serve the hatred of the Jews against the Church, protests against this act of justice, because the author, the citizen Sulpice Sévère, recalled the miracles of Saint Martin. This is the pure doctrine of the School of Charters, of a-near which one must rely especially on contemporary testimonies—Porrains. Renan, always cautious, acts below the surface. In short, what is.
I believe, without precedent, the Academy overturns the decision of its commission—

1

JEWISH PERSECUTION 411

While waiting for French scientists to dare to take care of these questions, we refer our readers to this brochure of the Greek monk, which is of thrilling interest; they find there—will in the long run the various uses of human blood for cerebr- ?hk different monies, circumcision, marriage, funerals—railles, Purim and Passover.

There is still a great deal of light shed on this oral tradition.
which is passed down from father to son and which made the Jews so strong by the habit of carrying in common a terrible secret, on this unknown Judaism of which no book speaks and which che-mine through the ages without any profane gaze perceiving it—receive.

To receive the confidence of the secret of Israel, the father chooses among his sons the one who seems to him most worthy of confidence, at a time when Jews were accustomed to moving on the heads of their children what they call the Crown of ^_^ courage; they initiate him and make him swear in the most / sisters, nor to the mother, nor to any living person and especially to other-a woman.

My son, said the father of the Greek monk who transmitted these details, may the earth refuse burial to your body, may it regrow from her bosom after your death, if ever, in some terrible cution that you can find yourself, you reveal what I sion. I must add that Mr. Lecoy de la Marche was very weak supported by the Catholics who, there as elsewhere, instead of holding head to men like Renan, and to overwhelm them with contempt, coward-right from the beginning of the discussion.

You will see that when this Gaston Paris presents himself, as he 'expressed his intention to the French Academy, to which he did not no title, Catholics will still vote for the man who trathan Christian writers.

412 JEWISH FRANCE

tells you; keep quiet about it, even if you became a Christian for your interest or for any reason.

Outside of remote countries, are our modern Jews still faithful to these practices? I don't think so, without be far from believing that certain isolated cases occur from time to time and come to swell the number of these unknown crimes, of these enigmatic disappearances on the-which we do not want to shed light on.

The bloody sacrifice, we repeat, if it proceeds from the Jew's aversion to the goy, if he was encouraged by some-some books of Kabbalah, perhaps even by some steps-sages of the Talmud, has nothing in common with the Mosaic law; it represents a crisis, a phase in the life of this strange people who changed direction so often, who had the warlike and patriotic phase in its defense against the Romans, the conspiratorial phase in the 13th and 14th centuries with the Templars, the dark and bloody phase after the failure of these attempts, the phase of recollection penduring the 16th and 17th centuries, the Freemasonic phase in the 18th century, the socialist, financial, cosmopolitan phase in the 19th century.

In any case, hatred of Christ, of the Christian, of the crucifix, of religion has remained as alive as ever.

The physiological study would be hardly less interesting that the historical study, which we were talking about earlier, if

to answer all these questions and to introduce ourselves, in the past as in the present, a conventional Jew who has no connection with the real Jew.

The analysis of these feelings of hatred against objects inanimate beings themselves which represent Christian ideas, enters into the category of these phenomena which are both moral and physiological that Mr. Rihot studied in his book on V Heredity; we can say about them what Montaigne says:

JEWISH PERSECUTION 413

"What a monster is this drop of seed from which we are produced and which carries within itself the impressions, not of bodily form only, but of expenses and inclinations of our fathers (i)?)"

However, I have not seen this point addressed in this book. of V Physiological Heredity, which is not without value, although the general design lacks elevation; I have not met only a dithyramb from Mr. Candoles, who believes that a Jewish state would be the realization of the ideal Salento. This mon-lord now has in present-day France the State of his dreams. That's neat!

In any case, this hereditary hatred makes it clear what is happening before our eyes and which would be absolutely otherwise incomprehensible. The unleashing of invectives, of rudeness, of violence against Christ, the Virgin, the Church, the Clergy, does not actually respond to any real feeling of the population; it is absolutely artificial, It is organized by the Jews with the skill they put into organize around a financial matter, thanks to their day-naux, a current of false public opinion. We have seen the operation is done before our eyes. Ten years ago, even After the Commune, twenty thousand men followed the procession funeral of Brother Philippe and the workers, the least religieux, spoke with affection and respect of the good Brothers who had raised them and made them honest people.

(1) In support of this almost inexorable character of Thérédité, let us recall the curious observations of a doctor from Frankfurt who had noticed that many Jews were born circumcised.

4M JEWISH FRANCE

I add that, if it were the sincere expression of the state (the general spirit, such an explosion of hatred would be a fact which such conditions. The people, even if they have become indifferent, hold to the religion of their ancestors by the bonds of memory. Long after the coming of Christ, the Romans still remained attached to their Penates, to their god Term, to the Genius of the place which had been associated with the existence of the family. Baptism, First Communion, Church weddings are dates that are still dear to the majority of Parisians themselves, of those whose faith is the most lukewarm.

Some ancient abbeys, with their vast estates and their rich incomes, could excite envy. The congregations at present are all poor; which enough to support thousands of human beings is nothing next to what one of our greats has for himself Jewish bankers today.

Is this the fate of the poor country servant, of the The priest himself who justifies these angers? Sitting in the confessional for long hours, or standing at the altar in a often freezing church, always ready to go and console those who call him and who sometimes live two or three leagues away from the presbytery, he sets off whatever the weather; neither the sun in summer nor the snow in winter can stop it. For this reason he sometimes receives eight hundred francs, twelve or fifteen a hundred francs at most. What little Jewish money changer would accept such a task for such a salary?

Basically, the vast majority of the nation is sympathetic—than to these brave people whom the Jews alone truly hate—ment.

Among illiterate Jews this hatred of Christians is expressed

JEWISH PERSECUTION 415

IN the form of brutal movement, it is irrepressible impidion—sistible that the alienists speak of. Every day the facts various sources provide us with proof of this state of mind manifesting itself in the form of a violent attack. The February 2, 1881, it was a Jew who came to disturb a ceremony—^funeral monk.

An incident, deplorable from every point of view, has occurred, ©the day before yesterday, at the Saint-Eustache church.

The two poor little girls who died in the in—fire on Rue des Deux-Ecus: Jeanne and Marie Verpillat. A A very large crowd attended this painful ceremony, uniting—heartfelt sympathy for the parents' pain, when suddenly great fun to scream at the top of your lungs.

The Swiss approached this man to make him come out and put end to this scandalous scene, but the drunkard resisted and began to shout even louder. At the same time, some curious people entered his entourage, and who found the thing funny, surrounded the Swiss and wanted to prevent him from doing his duty.

Fortunately, officers arrived and restored order by driving the drunkard to the Halles police station.

He is a Mr. Eugène David, aged twenty-eight, a man of penalty (1).

(1) Our beautiful funeral ceremonies where everything speaks of hope, where the death curtain seems to be just a simple curtain that leaves us guessing the presence of the missing being has the gift of exasperating the organizers of civil burials.

Is she not of a truly diabolical character and worthy of the brush of some painter in love with the fantastic scene which has passed in Brest, on Shrove Tuesday, February 29, 1884;

"Around three o'clock on Tuesday, the funeral procession of a little girl followed the rue Saint-Yves; arrived in front of the majiasin Cailloux, the cor- The thugs disguised as monks, who were leading great uproar in the square.

"These wretches, without regard for the pain of the father, who followed

416 JEWISH FRANCE

On October 24, 1882, a more serious incident occurred in Lyon.

This morning, said the Gaul, an individual of about forty years-born entered, hat on head, into the church of Saint-Bona-venture. It was six o'clock in the morning, the priest was saying his mass.

The stranger came forward to the altar. He slapped the priest; then, seizing the chalice, he threw it to the ground and poured the hosts over| the ground. While committing these sacrileges, he cried out: "That's enough!" All these comedies must end.)•>

All this had been done as usual. When the faithful, returned from their stupor, would have stopped the stranger, the latter did not oppose no resistance.

Taken to the station, the individual declared that he was an Israelite.

of another Jew, named Weber, who, at the time of the high mass, enter the church of Clamart with the hat on the head, the cigar in the mouth and comes to camp at the foot of the high altar, taunting the faithful.

It took the intervention of the gendarmes to expel this unbeliever.

On March 21, 1882, the day of mid-Lent, the Jews organized-were in Roubaix an impious masquerade.

Incredibly, says the local newspaper, no prosecutions were not exercised against sinister pranksters who, on the day of the mid-Lent, organized an outrageous masquerade for the Catholics. On a chariot, in a confessional surmounted by a in the middle of the fort, an individual, dressed in ecclesiastical garb, received weeping over the frail coffin of his daughter, began to chant the From Pt'ofundis and to give their blessing to the clergy.

Will such a scandal go unpunished? already declared the newspaper which recounted these ignoble facts. You had to be very naive to ask even this qu-^stiou.

The Israeli Archives Islands Directory also includes Tuesday-Fat among the Christian holidays between Christmas and Easter.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 417

the confidences of amusing girls, in costumes resembling those of nuns, who came to kneel in turn before him, give him a coin and, after kissing him, withdraw would simulate the sign of the cross.

The public, indignant and disgusted by this ignoble spectacle, wanted prevent it, but two agents protected the tank against any ^hostile demonstration.

There are few days when some scandal does not occur in a church with the tacit support of authority. I saw the Christmas Day, in Saint-Pierre du Gros Caillou, during the Midnight Mass, individuals of the Semitic type indulge to crude jokes in the church, in the presence of the peacekeepers who did not move.

Note that for centuries no attack of this genre has not come from the Catholic side. There is no examples that one of us insulted a rabbi, entered a synagogue to disturb the ceremonies,

In the generous and broad soul of the Aryan, tolerance is a natural virtue and it must be stimulated for a long time to persuade him to exercise his right to self-defense.

But this is only a very small side of the persecution Jewish, the good, the true one, is the one which is exercised by the Jews who have authority and opinion, the common people—nine, scholars, ministers, senators, deputies, journalists. Everywhere you come across one of these every time that it is about doing harm.

It was an Austrian Jew, Hendlé, who became prefect of Saône-et-Loire which, as we have already seen, is in agreement with a Jew named Schnerb, director of General Security, and formerly editor-in-chief of a pornographic newspaper, to organize the destruction of the crosses in Montceau-les-

4f8 JEWISH FRANCE

Mines, have some of our workers convicted French and thus allow the introduction into France of a greater number of his foreign coreligionists (4).

Hendlé received promotion, as was fitting, and went to continue the course of his exploits in the Seine-Inférieure. In Dieppe, he was embarrassed for a moment. He existed there a school run by nuns who enjoyed the esteem and affection of the entire population, The municipality was resolutely opposed to the hunting of the Sisters.

Rather than consent to this infamy, Mr. Levert and his deputies resigned and were immediately—unanimously re-elected by the municipal council. Hendlé could not use the famous argument: "the voice of the people, the general will;" he then remembers the articles that he published in the Israeli Archives on Jews in Poland, it is said that one can imitate the Russians and allow himself everything in conquered countries; he locks the doors from the school and throws the nuns into the street (2).

(1) MB' Freppel, who had known so well how to unmask Naquet in the question of divorce, was less perceptive when, in the amnesty mission, he said to Mr. Rochefort, who claimed to know this fact: "What interest would the prefecture have had in that ? "

The great bishop does not know what hereditary hatreds are. silencers, racial fatalities and a whole side of the current movement

(2) This Hendlé seems to have had the specialty of taking care of3 Polish Jews; in 1863 he published in the Jewish Archives a di-thyramb on them; on November 4, 1865, he lost his temper at the police cor-judicial action against the Attorney General, Mr. Dupré Lasalle, who, in a trial in which Polish Israelites accused of fraud were brought to trial, said: "It is difficult for me to believe the story of the pre-come, they are Jews and I do not know that the Jews have com-fought alongside their brothers and shed their blood on the fields of Battle of Pologae.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 4t9

Elated by this triumph, he becomes furious when he re-finds in front of him this crucifix that he hates so much. One day, however-However, he comes up against a resolute man like there are unfortunately has too little in our time. To replace a removed crucifix, Mr. Auge, mayor of Hermanville, comes himself to buy in Dieppe, a magnificent Christ, and, on October 7, 1882, had it placed with the following inscription-boasts:

This Christ was placed at the communal school of Hermanville at the following a subscription made by the mayor, the municipal council and the entire population unanimously.

Hendlé and his agents are foaming at the mouth, they are threatening to do close the school, the mayor looks these miseries in the face-and said to them coldly: This Christ is in our school and it will remain there, it is the will of my administrators. If you Touch it, I'll ring the alarm, and then watch out! x

It was not necessary to do more, one can guess, to give to Jews a terrible panic, and Prefect Hendlé left to vent his rage by blaspheming in the city's cafes of not having been able to touch Christ.

What surpasses, what gives the idea of the degree to which the characters have come down, it is to see a woman, who has royal blood in her veins, the Duchess of Chartres, to visit the woman before leaving Rouen of a Hendlé, of the representative of the government who comes to chase her husband out of the army, go and present her hom-Magi to this fairy Carabosse who has for Christ more than hatred even more than the Republican prefect himself!

Isaïe Levallant, former student rabbi, formerly associated with Cyprien Girerd, to report the false little piece of paper found in a train car, is another type of Jew. This one doesn't like not the persecutions... for his own. In an article in Israelite Archives (year 4866), he reproaches Mr. Swchab of not being indignant enough when he tells of the persecutions suffered by the Jews in Spain and their mass expulsion of the territory. "It would have been necessary," he cries, "instead of a abbreviated, which smells a bit like a report, a few words moved and eloquent.

Until he can mass expel all the Christians, this Jew, so sentimental when it came to Israel, charming judge to starve our priests to death. Prefect from Haute-Savoie, he wanted to prevent Ms. Isoard from doing his duty as bishop, and, unable to reach him, struck without pity on the servants who were sublime in their self-denial and preferred to give up their bread than to fail their duty.

Isaiah Levallant took revenge for this resistance on a poor nun. To tell the truth, Sister Blandine, such is the name of the victim of this wicked Jew, was not without reproaches; she had committed a great crime. In this country little fortunate, where the servants of God sometimes remember that they are daughters of the people, the peasant woman sometimes returns under the teacher, and my faith this one, to save a laundry, rolled up his sleeves and, one Thursday, washed in the school. It is even added that she took advantage of the opportunity to give a lesson to some little girls who were standing there and learn to make themselves useful in their poor families. . It unfortunately happened that in Isaiah Levallant the anti-Jewish vism occurs in a very particular way; it is remained, under the prefect's guise, the "sordid and bleary Jew" of which Saint-Victor speaks, and which Rembrandt drew so often in the picturesqueness of its filthy rags. The President of the General Council of the department, which he left for Annecy, said of him in the middle of the session: "We cannot to get an idea of the state of uncleanness and stench in which Prefect Levallant left our prefecture(i). » The poor Sister, guilty of loving cleanliness in a department where the prefect was dirty by goul, was struck by dismissal. If I remember correctly, a few brave women who had wanted to demonstrate in his favor were even punished with prison (2).

JEWISH PERSECUTION 421

In the courtroom we find the Jew faithful to his hatred for Christ. We once saw him trying to get rid of distinguished by nothing from his brothers the French, whom he held to enter the community; as soon as he is there it is to do scandal.

A Jew, named Moses (3), refuses for the first time to swear an oath before Christ. Another Jew, former con-

(1) It is absolutely true from the physical point of view as well as from the moral point of view the law that Maxime Du Camp formulated in these terms in the journal of the Two Worlds, of April 1, 1861:

"We could, without fear of being wrong, formulate this axiom:
"The closer men come to Judaism in their religion, the dirtier they are; the further they get away from it, the cleaner they are.

The stench, the infection of the streets of the capital since Paris became a Jewish city are striking proofs of this truth.

(2) Isaiah Levaillant received a promotion, he was appointed director-Director of General Security, an important position from the point of view of spying, and which the Jews are keen to see occupied by one of their own. Schnerb, as we have seen, had preceded Lôaie Levaillant.

(3) It is at this Moyse, general councilor of the Seine and who was candidate for the Senate, where Louise Michel lives. The Jews are keen to to have on hand those who can play a role in a revolution.

The 24

422 JEWISH FRANCE

Lisbon (1), the damned city of the Commune, imitates this example. You have to see how polite the president is, he takes the recalling by the sweetness: this Let us see, Mr. Lisbon, Be indulgent therefore for our Christ, he is good to us It's hard to make this painting disappear for you. y>

With Camille Dreyfus, same production. Everyone knows what is this Camille Dreyfus, and on what dung pushed this poisonous ghetto flower; condemned for having insulted a priest, as he boasted in a circular to the voters of Gros Caillou, this Dreyfus has none no less received from Wilson a cross which he dishonors.

The impression of repulsion that he inspires, by coming to insult before this court the religion of the majority, enchants it far away to humiliate him. As long as there is noise around his an applause or a boo; it confuses fame unhealthy with beautiful glory, he even prefers fame, she reports, indeed: when someone has a bad-

I'm going to propose, he knows where to go.

(1) This Lisbon, tower of their comedian, businessman and colonel of the Coromane, is still a very interesting type for studies.
After trying to open an establishment, where consumers would have been served by nuns, he founded a cafe, where the boys, dressed as academics, wear Tbabel with green palms and the sword; he also founded the Auberge des Reines where the service girls have the costume of sovereigns famous in history by their beauty or their misfortunes. We find there this imperative need, among the Jew to defile, to debase, to make ridiculous everything that was great in the past. He has a real monomania for genus stercoraire Bur which he enters into a commercial operation advantageous.

Basically, Lisbon is Ludovic Halevy, communard, like Ludovic Halévy is academic Lisbon. Both of them have oriented their lives in a different way, but in reality the work is the same.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 423

Look at it from a physiological point of view, like the Dreywas squared in front of the court; he was panade, La Fon would saytaine, he is prancing, Saint-Simon would write, he is very proud to be on stage. We say: this is Dreyfus, you know Dreyfus well, Wilson's straw man for the pretty negotiations-tions that you know, Dreyfus the agent of the Compa-gas genius." Dreyfus is happy, he smiles, neurosis vain of this race, born for hamming it up, flourishes in freedom.

These facts, moreover, clearly highlight what we could call the constitutional boorishness of the Jew. A Christian would be incapable of a manifestation of this kind (1).
Take a great lord, a peasant, a worker of pen-that truly French, you will find in everyone, in various conditions, this distinction of feelings, this innate gift of sociability which characterized the Aryan, this concern to be respected but not to shock his neighbor. Nothing like this in the Jew; as soon as he can, he spreads out, he draws attention to himself, he bothers others.

What should also be noted is the importance that these scruples take hold as soon as it concerns the Jew (2), The

(1) In Prussia, however, where people are less enduring than us, we refuses to take the oath before the Jewish magistrates. This is a prediction of a man of great merit and high virtue, Mr. Hapke, who took this initiative.

In Esseg, in the County of Agram, a courageous citizen, named Bartholovic followed this example in July 1883. Struck with a fine of 100 florins, he appealed; Tarrèt was overturned and he was decided that the oath would take place before a Catholic judge.

If the French acted in the same way, the Moyses and the Dreyfuses would renounce—would quickly return to their finals.

(2) Any officer suspected of clericalism is mercilessly denounced by the Jewish newspapers, while the Minister of War carefully watches, thanks to the intervention of the Alliance, what

424 JEWISH FRANCE

Court of Cassation deliberates, we change the law that displeases. "To attack freedom of conscience, sir, think about it—you?)) I always wondered what could be the freedom of conscience of the Jew, which is the object of so much of solicitude. Is it then in spotless emerald, in diamond? What is certain is that it is of another species than ours. Catholics and religious people have suffered otherwise cruel attacks on their conscience, they have not never even got to a court, they were arrested on the way and the Court of Cassation has never ruled on their case. They are goym, once again, beings a little beyond—above the dog in that they pay more tax than him. Look in the history of the conquered peoples for a race that we have put so completely outside the common law—and I challenge you to name one.

Wherever the attack on religion takes on a particularly repulsive and odious earth, you encounter the German Jew. Hérold, by standing as a candidate in 1869, in Ardèche, protested in vain against public opinion—that affirmed his Jewish origin. His face belied energetically his speech. No doubt he belonged to the class of shady Jews who do not practice any religion, but it is enough to examine the type to know the leave be granted to soldiers during Jewish holidays the religion that is under the x-flags. This is what we call the equality.

Mr. Baudry d'Asson had the idea of raising the average of the traile—

Average salary of the calliolic clergy. Fr. 922

- Muslim muftis. .* 1,600
- Protestant pastors 2,111
- Israeli rabbis 2,522

JEWISH PERSECUTION 425

truth, to reconstruct the evolution which was common to this sectarian and many others.

Héroid is, in this respect, an excellent specimen to observe. The grandfather, a little German music teacher, arrives in Paris, sets foot there modestly; the son starts there poses comic operas. Jewish Freemasonry which knows, from oral tradition, that the composer is from the company, declares that nothing so remarkable as this music, but ostensibly the au-Zampa's owner conforms to the customs of the country and when he died and was religiously buried in Saint-Louis-d'Antin.

The grandson first declares himself Protestant although he does not never converted, as far as I know, to Protestantism. Then the environment is favorable, the seed of Jewish hatred develops; the son of the amiable musician becomes the frenetics you know, insulting the Sisters, piling up the crucifixes in the carts, surrounding himself with Jews, pre-having as chief of staff a Jew, named Lyon, who tre-was shivering with joy at every infamy, finally he dies in inspiration-causing disgust to even those whose lowest he flattered instincts.

This phenomenon of atavism (4) which, according to ordinary law, skips two, and sometimes three generations, is physical

(1) Atavism is not the entirely correct term here, the right word is the return to type.

Uatavism is the tendency of modified descendants and crossed by interbreeding, that is to say by crossing species belonging to belonging to the same breed, to take one or more characteristics of the primitive strain.

Reversion to type is the tendency of modified descendants and crossed by hybridization, that is to say by the crossing of two distinct races, to return in their entirety to one of the parent races.

as much as moral; it is even translated by the features of the face.

Zampa's autfiur appears in his portraits a little melancholic, but not mean.

With his gold glasses and the lower part of his face, which is viperous like that of the son, the prefect, he has the air of a Frankfurt gold changer, but a dreamlike impression suffering and sadness tempers the whole and lends even a veiled charm to those cunning eyes. One feels particularly this feeling in front of the beautiful lithograph by L. Dupré (L. Dupré to his friend Hérold), who represents the musician surrounded by his scores and placing his hand right on the keys of a harpsichord. Gæcilie Brand has particularly accused the German side.

Who does not know the repulsive figure of Hérold, with his bleary eyes streaked with bloody filaments, his jaw bones – enormous lairs, his mouth contracted in a royal rictus – ble? After the easy and graceful melodist that the atmosphere Parisian had further softened and humanized nature suddenly brings to life, from the depths of Germany, a Jew of old, one of those Jews like those we see in the old images, always worried, always trembling to be caught and hung between two dogs, always searching some small child to be slaughtered in a sacred ceremony – light.

If the careful and close examination of these types is often painful, for us writers, we must consider it as a kind of ransom paid for intellectual joys – so high and pure that we experience at such a high degree by penetrating through analysis into the intimacy of es – elite units like the Yauvenargue, the Joubert. the Ghé – deny, the Maurice de Guérin, living in commerce of so many tender and proud souls almost unknown to the crowd.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 427

This great problem of the heredity of evil is, moreover, of the most exciting. There are obviously beings who, apart from the sin of our first parents who is common to all, bear the weight of one of these de –

second original sin (1). »

In some individuals, such as Lockroy, an element of Jewry is grafted onto a bloody Jacobin heritage of 93 and constitutes a very singular mixture.

Son of an Italian Jew, Simon, who was an actor for a long time under the name of Lockroy, and who, according to Vapereau, was born in Turin, the deputy of the Seine, the enemy of the Brothers of the Christian doctrine (2), descends from Julian of Drôme

(1) It is very regrettable that the School of Social Peace has not carried his investigations to this side. I would have liked, for example, to see Guérin, to whom we owe the excellent monograph of a family of shoemaker of Malakoff or Messrs. Ed. Demolins and F. Bocquet, authors of the monograph of a rag-picker from Paris, apply the method of Mr. Le Play to a monograph of a current ruler. He There is a masterpiece to be made with a typical family slipping into France, winning with the small traffic of national goods, with the price of denunciations under the Terror, enough to give a little education for children, drawing from the Empire all that it can give—and summed up in one of our statesmen who are both rotten and sectarians, strangers to any conviction and fanatics of intolerance.

(2) Lockroy did, however, receive some notions of catechism. A brave woman who, under the name of Elise Moreau, had had some fame as a poet before marrying Gagne, the arch Gagne, the author of Uniteide, felt sorry for the moral misery of this misfortune—who, at twelve years old, did not know the fundamental truths of Religion that what one can know about it between two bearings of* behind the scenes. She led the little savage to a respectable ecclesiastical—who played such a sad role during the Revolution. He has published by Galmann Lévy, under the title: Journal of a bourgeois woman during the Revolution, the impressions of his grandmother, of whom he had the modesty, moreover, not to give only the initials. He was right about this because we don't I can imagine nothing more odious than this Journal.

^28 THE JEWISH FRINGE

This Plii— is a real guillotine lick- bourgeois laminte. We can guess a soul swollen with resentment and envy, at the way this shrew applauds every crimes, the massacre of old people in prisons, the executions popular cuts. Ugly no doubt and ill-bred, she hates with a servant's hatred this queen who was the triumphant of Versailles by elegance and charm more than by the rank. She is closed to any generous feeling; she pre—is at the Temple, this sublime Christian who, ready to mon-to the scaffold, spent his last moments in the dungeon of the Conciergerie, to recommend forgiveness to the hers; she calls her Medici, she claims that in front of her guards she made her son recite verses which endedwere born thus:

And of a rebellious people abhorring darkness,

You must, my son, learn to pierce his heart (1).

tick, which we have already spoken about in connection with the Commune, Tabbé Ravailbe. The worthy priest tried to teach the child at least to know and bless the name of his Creator. The ground, alas!
was ungrateful, and Lockroy profited little from this teaching which would have could save him from all the deviations.

(i) Journal of the year of the Parisian Revolution during the Revolution (page 281).

"May my son never forget his father's last words that I repeat to him: that he never seeks to avenge our death." [Testament of Marie-Antoinette.)

JUJVE PERSECUTION 420

She knows she's lying, what does it matter to her! It's with these lies that make heads roll. Good nature wants to enjoy the agony of his victim to the end; hyena at least wants to smell blood since she can't drink it.

One October morning an artist settles down, a pen and some paper in hand, at a window on rue Saint-Honoré. A woman is at his side, laughing, flirting, displaying her graces horrible; suddenly a flash of joy passes through the eyes of This woman, a rumor has spread among the plebs who are waiting its prey, a cart appears, it carries to the scaffold the one who was the queen of France. The Fury, however, cannot dissimulate a movement of spite. Marie-Antoinette is more majestic still than at Versailles. Broken that day by one of those ailments that destroy women, under the burden of pains that seem beyond courage human, the unfortunate still finds the strength to be calm until the hour, fortunately near, when, touching the
At the end of her long agony, she will cry to the executioner: "hurry-at your place! "

The artist was David (1), the woman was M'^^ Jullien.

The father, terrified by this graceful companion, voted for the death of Louis XVI, assuring that he had always hated the king and that "his enlightened humanity having listened to the voice of justice ordered him to pronounce death.

The son hunted by race. Whether one imagines Gilles or Aba-

(1) This drawing is part of the Hennin collection at the Library national. Above we read this note in Mr. Hennin's hand: "Portrait of Marie-Antoinette, Queen of France, taken to the sup-accomplice, drawn in pen by David, spectator of the convoy and placed at a window with citizen Jullien, wife of representative Jul-link. Copied from existing Tcoriginal in the Soulavie collection, » die invested with the authority of a proconsul and we will have Tilôo of what JuUien fils was: "Nothing, says the Biographical Dictionary-phiches of the outstanding men of the end of the 13th century, cannot render his fanatical exaltation, his taste for tortures and his idolatry for the guillotine which he called It is the purgative of the royalists." He was sent at 19 years old as a replacement- cer in Bordeaux Tallien and Ysabeau who were found too lukewarm and this ferocious kid justified the hopes of the Committee of Sa-public. He was heard one day, Prudhomme recounts, exclaim in the Popular Society that "if milk were the food of the old, the blood was that of the children of freedom that rests on a bed of corpses" (1).

430 JEWISH FRANCE

The letters that this bloodthirsty ephebe, who was called Robespierre's snotty spy wrote to his master appear in the Papers seized from Robespierre.

Some are masterpieces of early perfi-die. This tiger was also a sheep. He feels an irresistible need to denounce; he denounces Bordeaux, which he names "It's a hotbed of business and selfishness," he denounces. Ysabeau "who eats white bread while the people feeds on beans; » he even denounces Carrier « who lives in a seraglio surrounded by insolent sultanas and epaulettes-third parties who serve as his eunuchs.

(1) M Charles Vatel, in his book Charlotte de Corday elles Gi-rondine, tells us that this amiable young Ijomme launched butcher's clients on the outlaws and hunted them down like Lûtes wild animals.

: The Bordeaux poet Joseph Despaze recalled this detail in the

i One of the three Julien, prescriber of viript years,

Revives the panting butchers in Bordeaux;
Murders are his games and heads are his games.
This cruel child takes the place of a child.

JEWISH PERSECUTION AS\

With this he was frisky. He asked for subsidies.
for the Bordeaux theatre, he wanted to regenerate the nation by the ballets: (c As I saw the incalculable effects of this kind of celebration, he said, I thought it would be beneficial to offer it, to the less on stage, to all of France and I composed a little patriotic entertainment; the Commitments of citizens.

It is this playful side that makes Lockroy run in the family.
After having crossed the small newspapers following Wolff, he passed through the Déjazet theater, before going up to the theater of politics. He is the vaudevillian persecutor.
Saint-Simon said of Pussort that he had "a face of angry cat." Lockroy, when he managed to get attention on him, has the look of a happy cat, of a cat doing its garbage in embers. The eye is signal, like that three-card players; there is concern about the came-Lot, who gathers the crowd without ceasing to be on the lookout, in this little physiognomy, alert, sly and wicked.

He's smart. He proved it under the Commune. He was strong.
embarrassed by his attitude in Paris. Approving the acts of the insurrectionary government, but fearing prudem-to associate himself with a movement that he knew he had to fail, he found a more satisfactory outcome to this situation.
clever than the Zouave's is below. He took advantage of the circonstances potir go for a country walk and to see if the lilacs grew near Clamart; friends obliging people had it removed by a patrol and handed over free when the Commune was over."

The good people remained convinced that this pure one would be dead for him, and since that time looks at him as a good one, this who is called a number one Republican.

In the last elections this Paillasse found a way to

432 JEWISH FRANCE

registered on all lists. Today he is Minister of Trade !

Lockroy's great title, with the Freemasonryrie, was to introduce himself into the family of Victor Hugo, and to stand guard there to prevent the one who had been such a great religious poet does not return to Christ. The af-
The operation was carried out admirably. The grandfather was taken by the love he had for his grandchildren. What pain it must have been for the poet to see this ugly sparrow installed so in the eagle's nest 1 Who could express the intensity of the look full of a dull hostility that the old man, of such magnificent good nature towards everyone, sometimes launched on Lockroy imperturbably seated in his role of foster father, motionless in one posture at a time arrogant and very low? All the horror of this life commune could be read in that look.

What happened at his deathbed? We will never know. exactly. The last hours of this sovereign of the intelligence were surrounded by as much mystery as those of a sovereign by divine right.

The famous will, published before the funeral, does not does not appear to be from the hand of Victor Hugo.

Louis XIV had as his secretary the pre-President of the Court of Auditors, Toussaint Rose. Rose, who was a member of the Academy as a replacement for the silent one Conrart, had the same handwriting as the king and he wrote the letters which, according to the label, must have been autographed.
Pecsonne is not unaware in the literary world that Mr. Richard Lesclide fulfilled the same functions near Victor Hugo and that the authentic autographs of the master are excessively rare for the last period of his life.
Victor Hugo, obviously, would not have been enough for his overwhelming

\

JEWISH PERSECUTION 433

labor, if he had to write fifty letters a day to announce to people that "they had the Word in them," and that he "cordially pressed their loyal hands."

This Lesclide, posted in the house by Lockroy, was a Jew from Bordeaux, a Jew of the gay kind who drank vigorously at dinner, but which was not unpleasant.

Surrounded in this way, Victor Hugo no longer had much means to express a free opinion. It is morally certain for me he asked for a priest and many testimonies heard Vulpian affirm this fact positively in a salon. Vulpian, no doubt, denied in writing what he had said orally, but his letter reeks of lies and fear. It is demonstrated, in any case, that Lockroy intercepted the letter filled with such evangelical charity from the archbishop—than from Paris, and that it was not given to the patient.

What you always have to look at is the tone that these people in these matters. I will never dream of I am surprised that an Israelite would ask a rabbi for console him in his last moments; I even add that, if he begged me, I would go and get it myself and pay the cab if necessary. Do you want to know how Germain See qualifies the very possibility of such an act? "My dear friend, he wrote to his accomplice Lockj-oy, if you have read the World of yesterday, you will find a monstrosity on the desire that the Master would have shown to confide in a priest."

I ask you in what way it would be monstrous for a man who owed his finest inspirations to the Christian religion, who celebrated Jesus, the Church, prayer in immortal verses had the desire, before leaving the earth, to talk with the minister of a God who was his own.

II 25

434 JEWISH FRANCE

Lockroy is even more insolent. The editors of the World, wanting to hope anyway that the soul of the poet was saved, had asked simply and very conveniently if Victor Hugo had not wanted to see a priest. "The funny ones, who write a religious newspaper called the World,); this is the tone in which Lockroy begins his answer.

Lockroy is sure of what he is doing by writing this. He is those who have received the most corrections in their life and who received them most patiently. He had done it very young learning the humiliations sending his father, means—lighting a few modest fires, engaging in antics or stretch out your back to entertain the crowd at the theater. 11 just like therefore what Montaigne says, in his figurative language, of the power of habit: "This one seems to me to have very well conceived the strength of custom, which first forged this tale that a village woman having learned to caress and to carry a calf in his arms from the hour of its birth—ance and still continuing to do so, gained this by the custom that, big ox as he was, she carried him

With the Catholic journalists, Lockroy takes his revenge. There are officers there, former pontifical Zouaves-caux, who were heroic on the battlefields and the sight of which alone would hide Lockroy under the label; retnaked by the defenses of the Church, they leave this unfortunate insult them without sending him any witnesses.

Lockroy's comrades naturally draw from there, absolutely false consequences. I will quote Louis-Slanislas Meunier. I have read articles by him which resonated pailois, through the blasphemies, a vibrant and original, where we found a sincere depiction of our miseries social that France owes to the Revolution. See, however-dant, what he writes on this subject:

JEWISH PERSECUTION 435

What a behind, my friends, that of clericalism! As This fleshy roundness seems admirably intended for kicks! See how well the foot sinks in! This is done: plop! A pleasure, really. It's greasy, oily, unhealthy. And for bouquet, the letter from Mr. Lockroy: "The jokers who write a religious newspaper called Le Monde... » Have you had enough, say. Ask, get served! Do you want slaps?

Mr. Meunier is not unaware, however, that at the first gesture of those he attacks, Lockroy would flee as he did fled in a panic, in July 1885, from the hall of certain of the rue de Lyon, when some voters, less naive as the others, covered him with jeers while treating his speech of "bluster." More concerned with the truth, the editor of the Cry of the People, while using the comparison that he seems to like, could, on the contrary, have point of view of his anti-religious ideas, draw a seemingly specious argument against the foresight of the master of the universe, so that a man, like Lockroy, which was intended to receive a number of blows foot and truly exceptional slaps, had in born with only two buttocks and two cheeks like the common man mortals reserved for less violent emotions (1).

(1) If Mr. Mennior wants to see men like me together" who heard him {pile to be found far away in their homes;^ found-worm of the workers:? chréliejis, treat of the Tiirlupiiis couiine Lockroy, who have among their own only butts and ass<ssiiis, he has what to read, diuii? Le Monde of January 10, the article itilitiilé lioOf'che. This It's not the best literary thing I've ever read, because it's one of those to me (leave the ball in the room in dispute, it is not possible U'èirc plus p.'i.

436 JEWISH FLANCE

With his legendary rapacity, his obscure turns to Ministry of Public Education, Paul Bert is from the same category; he is, without doubt, the first grand master of rUiiiversity that we have seen mixed up in these questions of money and in this he proves his race. If Bert, as he observes
Mr. Lorédan Larcher, is a name of Germanic origin, the first names of the grandfathers of the church insulter Isidore Bert and Simon Boyer are Jewish first names.

Simon Boyer, as we know, was a teacher at the college of Jacobins h. i\uxerre. Accustomed to seeing the human species through the
On the ugly side, he was not frightened by sans-culoUism.

It was him, says the Administrative, Historical and Statistical Almanac-Yonne tick (year 1861), which was responsible for applying to certain place, which decency forbids us to name, punishes them-corporal punishments inflicted on the students, and there were some among them from the age of twenty. Each correction brought in twelve cents to the
Mr. Boyer, who also went to town to exercise his touching functions-tions. The income from this job was, without doubt, of a good report, since he was able to acquire a building as well important than that of the Jacobins. I remember seeing Mr. Roux, a surgeon in Auxerre, brings his son to the class of Mr. Amé, to have the aforementioned correction inflicted on him, and, before from there on his knees, put a twelve-sou coin in his hand (duodecimal system) that, all weeping and still kneeling,
The corrected student in turn gave the official quiz. This student became the famous surgeon L^oux, member of the Academy of sciences.

As the author of this note points out, the considerable sums disbursed to the B evolution by this zealot of discipline, who loved youth in his own way, if we are to believe the proverb "those who love well chastise well," would suggest that the number of spankings was considerable to Ajjx.erre. This would perhaps be an indi-inaccurate ticrn; everything was strange in those troubled times.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 437

even saw some communities, threatened with being stripped-lees, entrust to men, whose protests of de-vowed to have deceived them, the funds necessary for buy back the building put up for sale, and these men, abusing buy the building for themselves and energetically the deposit (1).

Bert, moreover, seems to have broken with the Synagogue, he willingly poses for the pontiff of atheism, but there he is still a plagiarist, a plagiarist of Jews naturally. 1848, in the Frankfurt Parliament, a German Jew, named Oppenheim, asked that a Pope of Va-theism, ein Papft der atheistcihen. Paul Bert stole He is not proud of this idea.

I caught the man in the act of lying, the hand in the bag.

In the second edition of his Manual, I read this sentence, page 156, lines 14 and following: "I am lieutenant-born of God, said Louis XIV in his Testament, I possess the life and fortune of my people in all pro-prayer. When I make a resolution, God sends me his mind.

The sentence surprised me a little, it was given however as absolutely authentic since it was written not only in italics, but placed in quotation marks. With the signature of any other, we would not even have had the idea

(1) One will read with interest on this question a full volume of hn-black and colored: Grippant, story of a monk's property, by the RP Clair.

See also the Review of the Revolution, June 5, 1884.

438 JEWISH FRANCE

to go see, mnis Bort is one of those that we don't believe pgs on word. I am revising the Testament of Louis XIV. Paul Bei-t had simply invented the phrase, it was a simple false (1).

Please note that this Testament is a document known to all, a written historical monument; the fij^uré copy, of which the rating is, I believe, K. 137, n" 1.6", was made on rori-ginal by the President of Parliament, who scrupulously respected the arrangement of lines and pages. This Testament-ment has been printed about twenty times and it turns out in Grimoard's Works of Louis XIV; I rep-published in the Journal des Anthoine, including Victorien Sardou had kindly lent me the manuscript.

an era and a man, this minister of education—public information falsifying a text like that, lying to children to try to dishonor the memory of a great king? God be praised, no humble brothers, that this slanderer insults every day, would not be capable of such vileness.

The general spirit of the Testament, we add, is in disagreement with this sentence which is, moreover, not in the style of the time. From the beginning, Louis XIV expressed regret of the evils that war has caused to its peoples: <(As by the infinite mercy of God, he said, the war, which has, for several years, agitated our kingdom, with different events, which have caused justifiable concerns, is fortunately over; we currently have

(1) Despite his ap'orob Paul Bert was forced to withdraw this lie of the following items. Needless to say, I hold the volume to the available to anyone who would like to consult it.

JEWISH SECURITY A39

more at heart than to provide our people with sustenance sadly, so many wars have not allowed us to give them, and put them in a state to enjoy for a long time fruits of peace, and to remove anything that might find—to give them peace of mind."

c(We had no other view, in all the others provisions of our will, said Louis XIV again, in concluding, that the good of our State and our subjects; we pray God to bless our posterity and to grant us the grace to make good use of the rest of our life, to erase our sins and obtain his mercy—rope. y>

Who does not remember the grandiose scene of Louis XIV at his deathbed, confessing, before a child, glorious—his mistakes in his life and the noble words that M'"® de Ventadour had this inscribed near the cradle of the young Louis XV?

These are the lying books that parents are forced to read. put in the hands of youth!

This slanderous manual is an absolutely Jewish. The publishers Picard Bernheim (1) are Jews and put to launch the affair the double bitterness which inspires the es—for money to be made and the prospect of harm to be done.

destroying religious feeling in young minds are published by Jews.

He is a Jew, the Israelite Archives tell us, that this Giedroye who makes this singular book, the Gerhe of VEcolier, of whom the republican press itself has made

(1) Le Figaro of February 23, 1883 announces the marriage at the temple Israelite from the street of Huffaull, from ÎVU'e Beiheiiu, the daughter of the expert, with Mr. Gustave UodniJUes.

440 JEWISH FRANCE

gorgfis cliaucles and in which the name of God is suppressed of all the passages of classical authors in which he fi<4urait.

■o'

Little fish will become big
May God grant him life.

Thus speaks La Fontaine.

Little fish will become big
As long as he is spared his life.

This is how Giedroye expresses himself, who also obeys instinct. of his race by dishonoring and mutilating the masterpieces that France produced when the Jews, thank God, did not have access to our home.

This hatred of God reaches monomania. In the month of February 1885, we see the reappearance of Camille Dreyfus who raises a grotesque debate in the City Council. He wants ban Victor Hugo from school because the name of God is found in the poet's works, that one speaks of the prayer, that we find verses like these:

Give, you who are rich, almsgiving is the sister of prayer...
Give, so that God who endows families...

City Council approves this Jew and an investigation severe is prescribed.

It was the German Jew Lyon who, in March 1885, denounces a professor from Chaptal to the Municipal Council, crime of this scientist? He was not accused of having raped the neutrality of the school, of having communicated its ideas to its students. He had simply exercised his individual right, the freedom of thought in its most sacred form, in pu-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 441

published under this title: The Lessons of Christian Antiquity, a book full of noble teachings and eloquent insights eus who received a Monthyon prize from the French Academy. In this book, the writer allowed himself to note the indifference moralizing and fertile of Christianity. Lyon-Allemand was outraged by this audacity and the unfortunate professor was abruptly dismissed after 25 years of service.

He is a German Jew, Ollendorff, whose family is originally from Rawicz (Duchy of Posen) who, secretary of Ferry, excited against Jesus Christ this man who nevertheless-dant does not need encouragement for evil (1).

Quilly, the defrocked priest, the damned soul of Paul Bert, who uses the little theological science he possesses to provide this wrongdoer with arguments to insult the Church, is an instrument of the Jews, he married a German Jewess named Salomé Brandt.

All higher education will be within a few years in the hands of the Jews. We find nothing but at school Higher Studies: Philology: Deputy Director, Mr. Henri Weil; comparative grammar, director of studies: Mr. Michel Bréal; Zende language, assistant director, Mr. James Darmesteter; Semitic language: director of studies, Mr. Joseph Derenburg; Arabic language, Mr. Hartwig Derkmibourg; Ethiopian and Himyarite language, Mr. Joseph Halevy; Philo-Assyrian science and antiquities, Mr. Jules Oppert.

Among the leaders of the work of destruction undertaken against everything that recalls the Fatherland of yesteryear, a place for

(1) As soon as he arrived at the ministry, Lockroy hastened to call this Jew to him and he appointed him chief of staff of the minister and director of the staff.

II. 25,

442 JEWISH FRANCE

part must be reserved for the German Jew Michel Bréal. Cebelles lettres, these humanities, humauiores litteræ, which re-tooth man more human, more civilized. He was the instrument of this need that the Jew has to lower everything, to level everything which we have spoken of so often in this book.

Thanks to German teaching methods, Michel Bréal wire adopted in France, the poor brains of our children, confused by a thousand confused notions, became incapable of any serious effort. The level of classical studies-siques declined rapidly and candidates for the baccalaureate came to the point where they no longer knew how to spell.

The Faculties are unanimous in their reports to complain about this lamentable decadence. One of the men who know the most about teaching issues,
Mr. Albert Duruy has published a very remarkable work on this subject.
que (1) where he admirably highlights the effort accomfold to deform the French soul, giving our game-an education contrary to the national genius.

In this debate, he says very well, it is not a simple question of pedagogy which is agitated, it is not only the eternal literary quarrel between the ancients and the moderns which has been rekindled:
what is at stake is the clear French genius that we are in the process of to obscure; it is a whole generation, already sad, raised in the pain and tears, to the sound of defeat, without opening on the heaven that was taken from him and on the glory that is no more; these are our children who are getting on our nerves and depressing us; it's our country dejected, mutilated, that one would like, still trembling, to bend under the yoke of foreign methods and culture. This is the big, the real danger of the new programs. To all their

(1) Review of the Two Worlds of February 15, 1884.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 443

other faults they add that of being antipathetic to our race;
they were not born in Gallic land, in holy land; they were designed Ifi-bas. They came to us from TLst, with the invasion; they completed it and they continue it.

Everywhere you find the Jew trying to destroy directly-directly or indirectly our religion. Divorce is of Jewish inspiration, the Jew Naquet puts divorce into our laws. Our beautiful funeral ceremonies irritate the Jew, It is an engineer named Salomon who takes the lead of a company for cremation that he would like to make obligatory.

young girls, so as to exclude any religious teaching from them.
gieux.

Some French people, even those who are not very zealous in their faith, say to this man: "Come on, you're going to give these young girls a refined culture, an education far superior to their position in the world, teach them music, arts of pleasure, you know how much difficulty we have in live by running the stamp. Placed between dishonor and poverty which will seem harsher to them than to natures less cultured, these children of employees, of old soldiers, bourgeois will have many temptations. Why not to put at their heart one of these beliefs which support in life, an ideal which elevates, which consoles, which prevents the failures? » •

The other smiled with that impertinent and fat air which ended by disgust even the voters of Saint-Denis, After drinking, he confesses his secret thoughts. To these bankers, to these enriched people of yesterday, to these Jews brushed against civilization, did he not say left-hand companions who can distract them, Klipolh (non-Jewish girls), who are able to rock ce.'^ liypocondres, as David soothed with his harp the Saul's madness?

4- 44 THE JEWISH FRANCK

Tax meat, pleasure meat, ca:ion meat, isn't it?

'the destiny of the Christian, of his daughter, of his sisters? There you have it

I

1 why we can boldly write Girls' School on the pediment of these high schools, from which so many unfortunate too will come out little religious so that an honest home opens in front of they, too educated to be satisfied with the miserable condition of women in our disorganized society-nized

In the newspaper of the Jew Valentin Simon, V Echo de Paris, a former soldier of the Commune, Mr. Edmond Lepelletier, noting that fifty thousand young girls, "have three only a thousand had been received, had presented themselves in a year of teacher exams, traced existence of these unfortunate Klipoth an instructive picture despite its brutally realistic form.

And they rush, he wrote, the unfortunate ones, to the assault of the

a lot, you might say.' Alas! the requests amounted to five a hundred thousand. What will they do, what are they doing now, not to mention those who failed the exam, these forty-seven thousand institutionally unemployed women, with no hope of finding one? Where will we find them? We?

We already know that it is useless to look in the workshop or the store. They cannot deviate from this point. Yes, by looking Well, we will find them, these refractory outcasts, among their fellow lyric poets without courage, journalists without newspapers, lawyers who do not plead, defrocked officers—and deserting priests. It is in the smoke of the breweries that we see their ironic and mocking silhouette; in the noise of the clinking of glasses and the beating of absinthes, we hear them ranting against society; we will see them perorers, having a coffee room for pulpit and alcoholic girls for customers, these useless products from higher education colleges young girls. Paris is already poisoned by them. [Nihilists of love and family, we meet them at every not, the bohemians in petticoats, wearing the short bun, the fanx-co'. masculine, and having as rallying sign the pince-nez professionnel. They teach, they consult, they decide. A court is around them. We see them correcting requests for money or writing love letters from their ignorant colleagues, cowgirls promoted to girls from the suburbs who, in running away from school, have only passed through the Scholastic military. They have a clientele. The liquidators admitted and make assault of erudition with them. Moreover, to defy—but their superiority, they have extreme refinements and contributed to the development of this cult of Lesbos, whose altars flesh see so many kneeling today.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 443

We will also find them elsewhere, in these establishments special ones, which Scholl has named Duval brothels of love. When they are well mounted, they always count among their boarders a qualified lady, and to the consumer who made the request, we serve today "the teacher," — as formerly the black woman or the bearded woman. That is progress (I).

(1) Echo de Paris of August 1, 1884.

The funny thing is that a religious newspaper from Auvergne, Family Sunday, having in turn noted these distressing evidence, the Lardeme, which did not suppose that a Jewish newspaper had could have one day, by accident, the idea of telling the truth, accused of the sheet called 'huliquet' of slander and naturally denounced it to the judges Freemasons of whom she is sure. These are the polite terms in which she conservative, but to a proven republican like Mr. Edmond Lepelletier.

î The abominable scoundrel who thus defames an entire honorable body gives his lying inferences more odious conclusions Again.

"These are the naughty things that we dare to publish in a so-saying nun.

"The cowardly bandit who commits these pretty things hides under a fancy signature; but there is a bookseller-publisher, a printer-death. Will we let these infamies pass without inflicting on this Basile au-Vergnat the correction he deserves 1 »

446 JEWISH FRANCE

Perverting the younger generations, that is, moreover, the point. essential, the one on which all the effort is focused. He is a Jew, Benoit Levy, who publishes with a Jewish publisher, Léopold Cerf, the Jiratical Manual of School Law; he finds it very pleasant, he explains its beauties with complacency-ance, he threatens those who hesitate to obey. All this which concerns religious emblems delights him particularly-ment, he insists on this subject.

Public schools, he writes, being, by our law, absolutely-secularly, it follows that no religious emblem should appear in the collection. It would be inconsistent to pro-to claim secularity and to leave the religious emblem there, that would be con-to milk all the ideas that prevailed in the discussion the principle of secularism.

The anti-Christian law, once again, is their work of predilection. They run as soon as it is threatened.

The Lavour school board, one of the rare countries where citizens have courageously done their duty and worn out of all their rights, excuse a father who had re-was forced to send his child to school because it was given teaching with the Compayré manual.

Immediately Ferdinand Dreyfus, one of the members of this tribe that swarms over France, like the tribe of Maycr, rushes into the corridors and into the committees; he drags after him a moaning, weeping, lamenting shadow-table, it is Compayré who sighs, Compayré who despairs-Father: "They don't want my manual anymore, what do I do?" will become? I will be forced to write reli-gieux." In short, the Dreyfus gives birth to an amendment in "School boards may not, under any circumstances,

JEWISH PERSECUTION 447

interfere in the assessment of materials and methods of teaching.

A school board that does not deal with teaching-nement, it's the height of irony, as they say in this slang of 1) Oulevards that the Jews made fashionable, but what are they? what can it do to Dreyfus, as soon as it comes to molesting Christians?

This episode, in any case, highlights the Goltin side well. who is involved in these persecutions with a naughty side, fury of the pedant against those who persist in not admiring his literature. "What the Almanac of the Muses, said Cha-Teaubriand, provided agents to the Terror is incredible. The vanity of suffering mediocrities produced so many revolutionaries than the wounded pride of the assholes and abortions: analogous revolt of the infirmities of the mind and of those of the body.

In this respect, Gompayré may have surpassed Pai 1 Bert, by his stubbornness in imposing his m'""-inK to pose on the ministers by threatening them with his vote so that this manual, which everyone rejected, was made compulsory. In 1883, still under pressure from Compayré, the pre-fet of the M.mche revoked, not a secular teacher, but a nun who could not, we will agree, accept-to publish a work condemned by the Pope, M'^*^ Fontaine. o[, religion Sister Thérèse, of the Carmel of Avranches. Some some time before, the impudent Ferry declared that "there is no There were no textbooks allowed in schools (1).

(1) It is this Oonipayré, cnh'bram in his inarmels the siiffcai^e niii-versel, who, (iaua mie reunion [Mihlique for the élfolion? «1»; 1885, threw a bowl of t'oiu to the 61ecleuti> who were against the opposing candidate-pnrluni.-te.

– You are wrong, Mr. Argumentative, said a peasant to him, deprive yourself of tomorrow's duties.

448 JEWISH FRANCE

Everywhere, I repeat, you meet the Jew to lead and poison religious debates.

Take this episode of the second expulsion of the Benedictines of Solesmes, which had a particularly revolutionary character. so much.

These poor people, thrown out the first time, are gradually returned home. They have no fortune, in fact, they cannot live outside the monastery where they settled their lives, where their library remained, where they have these work habits which are, each of us knows, so important for the learned.

Among the radicals, even violent ones, many knowing this, would have kept silent by distancing themselves that the representatives of this order, which saved civilization in the Middle Ages, who collected in the cloisters the masterpieces of The human spirit, are a bit like our colleagues.

The Jew Charles Laurent (1), informed by the police Jewish, goes to find its director, the Semite Veil>Picard, and said to him: "Good news! There is harm to be done." He denuncio these old men, he provides details of their stay the most detailed and this Pilate of Freycinet disgraces himself-nore by expelling men of whom he was the host, the protégé, the obliged.

I am not like the Pharisee who prayed standing up and who boasted before God that he was righteous. The bad ones acquaintances could have made me a seemingly-lle to those of whom I speak, to these men who, says the Scripture, (have the right hand full of iniquities and the left hand

(1) On June 1, 1883, we see Ms. Marie Laurent presenting the daughter of Mr. Cobleulz in Tiniliaiou rellgieuîe, at the 100th of the rue de to Victory.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 449

full of presents. There are, however, some things that I do not have would never have accomplished. If I had known that pro-rabbis crits were meeting to coo (1), I would not have them certainly not denounced. Laurent has no such qualms.

Here again, we must stop to examine the psychology. Born into a milieu of hams, like Lockroy, The editor-in-chief of Paris is obviously closed to certain feelings of delicacy and honor than others breathe in some way from the cradle; it is excusable perhaps, in this respect, up to a certain point. The fact of this young man, of this writer who becomes an informer strange. I am told that he wears, in some circumstances, the officer's costume, I cannot believe it and cannot imagine, in France, a body of officers quite singularly com- placed so that a confessed informer could take his place there.

As he is, he is curious. He not only has the men- your hairless actor, it's all white. What does he eat? so to be like this? Like his peers, he was one of the freed from Gambetta and, from the garter of an Egeria

(1) Mijnuder is to gather together to study Talmudic doctrine, the Kulacca. According to the Talmad, trailed Sirassin, third God, after leaving the Temple, reserved for himself in heaven a ceMaiiiiiiiieu four cubits tall where he saw a part of the body.

In Yeschuot, treatise of Abodu Zara (Cult of the pagans), cliap. ler^ we read: The day has twelve hours, during the three preinicies God myaude, during the second quarter God is besieged the flood whole, but seeing that the whole world is coufiahle, he rises from his seat of justice and sits on his seat of mercy. During the third quarter of the day, God sits and feeds the child whole, from rhinoceroses to fleas; during the fourth God sits and plays with the Levialhan, as it is said in the Psalms: "This Levialhan that you created to play with him. "

450 JEWISH FRANCE

red, was made one evening, laughing, a decoration which confirmed Marcère, the austere minister, who could only respond with tears at certain accusations.

If you want to see the soul of an opportunist, read a volume of this Laurent, Mr. and Mrs. Neuhurger. Was the Neuburger in question related to the ingenious inventor of the Ncuburgiennes? I don't know. Still, that after having been condemned for usury, and before found the Bank of Paris and Brittany, which rallied so much small savings, he had created as a pass time a financial institution under the title of Credit rental.

Laurent, young and candid then, it seems, because it is this time, I believe, which dates from his nickname of Comme la Moon, was seduced by the appearance of the fences and by the good appearance of the offices. He brought his money there so that made it profitable, and was treated by Neuburger as a sinnple goij. He lost everything, pleaded and, although defended by Joseph Reinach, he came up against the law very wisely, whatever in stock market games.

Not satisfied, as we understand, Laurent devoted a. volume to drag Neuburger through the mud. Nothing is It's strange to see someone who claims to be a writer, spend two hundred pages telling you that one day he bought Pamplona, another day Otto Bondsmanes, that he raised Romans, that he liquidated Suez. to question, regarding dry setbacks, Ms. Neuburger which seems quite foreign to all this. The book has never been reduced to this task.

Despite everything, IUnsieifr and Mrs. Neuburger are not a document to be completely disdained for the future – it is very interesting to see that a man who was already condemned, ob- a stream of complaints from a man who has seen him (his Government) like Laurent, was able to quietly found a new bank without the police, absolutely convincing- that the money we would deposit there would be lost, inter- come in any way.

JEWISH PENALTY 401

This transmission by hereditary religious hatreds or anti-social instincts is one of the shows that have struck most in the course of this work. Without ac- to attach to heredity the fatal character that the modern science, it must be admitted that it plays a con- amazing in the constitution of beings. There are real diabolical predestinations. In 1790, the Marquis de Roche- strong, lord of Coulanges-la-Vineuse, ruined gentleman became a supporter of the Revolution, planted in the courtyard from his castle the first tree of Liberty that one had seen in Burgundy. The tree is blessed by Father Pyat. The gen- Tilhomme was the grandfather of Henri Rochefort. As for the priest Pyat, he fell in love with a nun and had two children from her- children, the eldest of whom was Félix Pyat. Isn't it strange to re- find these two names in the Commune?

Can a convict's son be a saint? Yes, says the Church. But the sociologist, in accepting this assertion, is forced to recognize that, in order to stay on the path of virtue, he would need more effort than others. If he received of education, the man born in these conditions will avoid all what clashes head-on with the law, he will shelter his evil action behind phrases, words of progress, of war clericalism, it will rely on a community like Freemasonry, but deep down he will remain the son of convict. He was a stronger psychologist than Bourget, than the one who said: "Parents have children who look like-hurt deep in their hearts."

Look at Challemel-Lacour. We might not have published ourselves the documents relating to his ancestors, but they are in the public domain; everyone has them has read and reread; it is therefore permitted to the philosopher and to the thinker to draw the conclusions that seem to him righteous (1).

If he had received no instructions, the former head of the French Foreign Office probably looted Cal'uire

(1) Here are these pieces which, from Zola's point of view, in his History of a Family, constitute a human document of considerable importance. According to a letter addressed to France On February 23, 1882, the death certificate of the father of the former mid-Minister of Foreign Affairs, died at the maritime hospital in Bresl, that is to say, in the penal colony, registered in the civil registry of Brest and that of Fert4-Macé, the place of residence of the convict, as well as to the town halls and the registries of the courts of Brest and Domfront. It also appears that that there was a relative guillotined under Louis-Plulippe.

The father

We read in the Journal de Granville of May 12, 1838:

BANKRUPTCY

"By judgment of the civil court of Granville (Manche), dated 11 May 18:78, the name ARMANn-FinËLR Constant CHALL.EMKL-LA-COUR, grocer in Avrrnnche^i, was declared bankrupt.

"Mr. Théroulde was appointed as commissioner, elLefiançois, huis-sier in Avranches, trustee of the said bankruptcy.

"The judgment further orders that the person of Armand-Fidèle-Constant Challemel-Lacour will be kept in custody by Legros, bailiff in Avranches.

Grandfather and Great-Uncle

We]]i in ^e Journfd d' A 'ençon (hi May 14, 1815:

"Judgment given by the conr W assizes of the department of Orne, sitting in Alençon, during the session of the first quarter of 1815:

"April 20th and 21st. - Alexandre-Foutuné-Ahmand CH\LLEMEL-himself; a distinguished graduate of the École Normale Supérieure, a skilled rhetorician, to have it looted and gets away with damages— interest he does not pay. Born into the ranks of the people, he

ROCOUX, formerly bailiff, residing in Joué-du-Dois, district—ment of Alençon; FiuNÇOis CHALLIÎMEL, linen merchant, residing—rantà la I<'erié-Macé, district of Donifiorit;

“Convicted of complicity in forgery of commercial documents,

“The following were sentenced:

"The first at twenty years, and the second at six years of forced labor, to the withering of the mark of the letters TF and soli—definitely at the expense.

The great-grandfather

Indictment of the lawyer of the liai to the Bailiwick of Falaise

The lawyer of the Uoi at the bailiwick of Falaise, who had communication of the complaint presented by Mr. R... of Al-^siiiil, ptoi>rlélaire, de—dying in Joué-du Bois, against Mr. “Challemel-Lacour,” no—to the village of Ferlé-Macé, set of all the pieces of the trial, requires that Mr. "Ghallemel," accused (>by the said iu—lorniatia "of having been armed," on September 5th,
"accompanied by his two sons Rocoux and Mesnilcourt," by his fer—
first, named Levannier and Bobot, from another individual, Michel Chollet, and two unknown men, all armed in their own way, some axes, tnsils, others hunting knives, "sticks
"shod, and, in this war apparatus, to have transported themselves on the property of said Mr. R... du Mesnil, to have, said Mr. Challe—
"mel, chaired and worked himself at the receipt of a bailier,
"to the demolition of a nmr serving to close and share the inheritances—
"ges du |>l lio^iaul," to have cut down two walnut trees planted on the same neriiiai;e's.

Particularly warned of having continued these excesses of all kinds and of which we did not know "of the xen"^ile, although the complainant" tuui ma—lade that he was, himself, transported to the scene and had interjected cljmeurde haro to ignore.

Warned again "of having left|"secured, at ten o'clock in the evening, always accompanied by his two sons, » named Chollet and some unknown people "armed with guns and swords, in the garden of the complainant, of having devastated and torn down palisades serving as a fence, finally from >èa'ii carried to all possible devastations, despite the repeated defenses in a clamour of haro, w

"Be it decreed, as well as his two sons, Rocoux and Mesûilcoul," the

434 JEWISH FRANCE

would have said to Mr. de Carayon Laloiir: "I'm going to kill you!" Polite and the lilted, without this garlic varnish being able to disappear over time—Originally perverse, he writes: "Make me all these people!" Culture for him was only a means to do more harm to others and to make more of a connection to himself (1).

named I.evannier, Bobot and Cliollet "to appear personally—moves (raising Mr. the lieutenant criminal » and in the tlt-lais of the or—donation, to lend interrogation on the facts reported in the complaint and resulting from the interrogation, "to be subsequently required cost—between them and named what belonged to him.

This August 28, 1790. Signed: Brujnet.

The son
Dijon Court of Appeal.
Hearing of January 24, 1879. — Judgment.
The Court,

Whereas the above facts constitute real attacks against persons and property, and give incotlleslab[^'meDt opening to an action for damages against their authors, for the benefit of those who were victims; that it is a question of to examine the extent to which the various appellant parties are responsible and what is the value of the conclusions, taken by them* before the Court.

Whereas, in this case, the facts on which the de—requests constitute NOT sr.LM.KMiINT quasi-offences, but drs de—beds even CHIMES; that it is, moreover, a question of alleirttos carried to individual liberty and to property, both of which are placed under the protection of judicial authority by the principles fundamentals of our constitutional law.

Jointly and severally condemns Glial'emel-Lacour, Vassel, etc., etc.

(1) Almost all the politicians of lag.iuihe have thus in their end of the previous places which made them remain in suspicion—cious by the nunuëif's people liu country and. threw them torps and, souls in It^s bius de lu Fi'aiic-Mdii^<>nuune which u'csl not ddiicilc in the

To all these war machines, to all these means attack against Jesus Christ and his Church, the Jew joined anti-religious propaganda by the scandal sheet, the obscene publication, pornography (1). In all that*]^ ladle at Toidureje Jew is a past master, he has the genius por- * cin. Toussenel did not go too far when he wrote: "The pig is the emblem of the Jew who is not ashamed to wallow in baseness, in ignominy, in usury to increase-to lie to his capital, which does not find infamous speculation as soon as there is profit to be made.

Here again heredity appears with a character in some-that kind of imperious. This ci-ass.; of the ghetto, this filth proverbial, in which the Jew lived for centuries, seem to have permeated him forever. The horror of Isaiah Levaillant for cleanliness is not an exception; there is obviously a form of neurosis, a beginning of pica and malaxie in the incredible torrent of immon-printed or drawn dices that the Jews have made to flow across France for several years. They have truly-restored in this France which was Christian the cult ancient Phallophories, without the artistic side which is mixed in Rome and Athens with these public exhibitions choice of his recruits. The president of Gnmol, the minister of agriculture, was clever enough to elude the rigor of the laws, but he was the object of demoralizing conflicts. All the newspapers have published the judge-rendered, on August 13, 1847, in a case of fraudulent subtractiondue to the bankruptcy, a case in which he was involved Gomol (MarliiiiGilbert).

(1) From the Tiliuud, it is a wonderful presa<;e to dream of excreiiiêiils. I*tesque all the » publications sadiijL es arel éilité by the Jiiif.s A Jewish bookseller, a bookseller today, started I wanted JusOne.

9

406 JEWISH FRANCE

of shameless images and cynically paraded attributes
by the city.

This rue du Crois- is a real Jewish landmark.
sant, this halls pornographic newspapers where the stalls-
The Israelites, pressed against each other, fight between them to see who will have the most debauched imaginations-ideas. The historian of the future who will draw up the catalog of this complicity of the government, will not be able to believe his eyes.

Scenes of sordid debauchery, monks driving around drunk with girls, priest whipping a naked woman, like in the poster of The Debauchery of a Confessor, groups shameless, everything is there. Formerly, the fathers of families, the common men would have given the prefect a bad deal police force that tolerates and encourages these turpitudes; Today, we see in the populous districts entire families, fathers, young girls, children watching and commenting at length on these Priapeas. That's where it went France (i).

Ignotus, with his gift of seeing and making the spectacle

(1) This fury to defile the child's ass has the proportions of a true nioiiomania (I characterize conlagious. The (laws of the Court of the Assizes of Ir-et-Loire (March 1881) contains a professor of the lyco-% M. VuUet, holding to the young people entrusted to your care the most filthy and offensive remarks, providing the director of a fairground called the Reimblican Minerva or Sanctiimmagmin, a canvas where religion is far*born into ridicule, and forcing his students to go see her, calling out to him the passengers on the public highway to force them to enter.

In Marseille, in April 1884, a MT., inspector division-child labor in theniaufaclus, fii visiting a workshop-young islanders from the Rouet district, suddenly undresses 86 moutre completely naked to these eiifauU.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 457

from the street, painted a striking picture of this secret museum became public, of this scatology spread out in broad daylight.

In these working-class neighborhoods, most women are in hair. There are a large number of small children. In front of each de-picture shop, there are groups of men, women, pe-little girls. Everyone laughs-except maybe the little girls, who look serious and at first as if startled. I heard and noted the reflections of this audience.

"Hey, look at this bishop" This is the caricature of Mr. Freppel. Certainly, I admit the caricature of an bishop who has wanted to face all the dangers of the Forum. But, here, the attributes the most sacred aspects of religion are ridiculed. A kid said to his youngest companion: "Look, kid, his chalice where there is a mutt that spits..." Apart from four or five exceptions, insulting. The public simply detailed the vision aloud who was in front of him, as he does, when he attends a spectacle in a fairground booth. < Look... a priest who is doing the home search. He is received by a woman in a shirt... This gentleman with horns, who looks at them through a hole, it is the husband of the bourgeois woman... »

Ah! Ah! This priest whipping a little girl... and this bishop who was next to him with his miter... »

The biggest success was for a lithograph, very large, whose violently clashing colors caught the attention of passers-by.

It represents a kind of chain of convicts. The convicts are dressed as priests, – as the people say. Each of the convicts has below his tonsure, on his back, a large sign. It reads in very clear characters these various inscriptions: Convicted for rape of a young girl. – Convicted of two hundred and twenty at-keep quiet about children...

I am not mentioning other grounds for conviction which do not can be written here – and which are nevertheless spread out there, in front of the little boys, little girls... This image has the biggest success of curiosity. Four times, – that is to say, two men, one Gavroche's wife and sister, with a silvery voice, launched II "i0

4t)8 THE Jewish fiance

cooi monta obscene ircs which made suddenly stagger, like under a gust of wind, the group of women and children...

Apart from these news, – the Mydén's of a bishopric, the Qaêlé at home, the New Christian Martyrs, are the des-sins published in previous weeks.

This pornographic war "seizes every opportunity, uses all means.

By the execution, the Tickets of the Holy Farce of Leo Taxil, very carefully drawn, almost come close to art; collectors, later, will be happy to find as a testimony of what could be done with impunity in our time/On each side, nuns and priests are represented in an ignoble altitude; above is a holy Pontiff, a sovereign prisoner, but with which France has not yet broken completely diplomatic report; he is wearing a galley slave's cap on which we read the number 13. The work bears the signature of Ernest Renan, Collector of the annalhemes and these words:

How we fall! we think, seeing the name of the an-former student of Saint-Sulpice printed on this filth that he never dared to disavow! What punishment would this dis-perpetually renewed taste that will take researchers futures by digging through all these shames to finally write this definitive story that we are only sketching today-today.

Superior in character to Renan, Léo Tnx he, at least, knew how to tear himself away from this mire. He was ashamed of being the man Jews and he braved their anger by separating himself from them.
They are the Jews and the Franks, he recognizes it.
himself, who had led him to the path he was on, this
It was the Jews who supported him, preserving him from all risk-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 459

that, guaranteed him that he could dare anything without danger.
It was the Jew Sirauss who was the first publisher of Leo Taxil, this is the name that we find at the bottom of the first edition of Down with the Skullcap. It is Mayer who gives a bonus the Confessors' Manual, which protests when the hon-Some indignant people tear down the posters from the walls filthy announcing the secret loves of Pius IX. It is Benoit Lévy, who defends Léo Taxil, is being prosecuted regarding these Tickets of the Holy Farce^ not for contempt of the public modesty, not for having provided the means of com-put countless scams, but for c(simple fine for filing the second copy.

The Jews have a great strength going for them: the rhonnôleté of their opponents, which prevents them from using reprisals.
Suppose, indeed, that I have the idea of writing some inconcoming to M''« de Rothschild. Imagine the welcome what would religious people who want to do with my project have in store
I would like to honor myself with some friendship, my Catholic friends, the humblest of the faithful: d Do not do this, let apart from insults what is pure, what is chaste, what who is weak.

The Jews of the Lantern have no such scruples; they tell you calmly, with many supporting details, that a nun, Sister Saint-Charles, gave birth to a child on the Aix train. They got away with it for some-hundreds of francs in fines and damages.
Even damages are strongly contested by the public prosecutor, representative of morality. He would be unfortunate not to give the name of this magistrate which responds to the name of Morin. Taste the raisonneaward damages; there was defamation without

460 JEWISH FRANCE

doubt, but Sister Saint-Charles is a res-observable and well known; however, the damage caused is all the more less than the person who suffers from it is more respected and more esteemed (1).))

According to this singular doctrine, whoever would discuss the Tropmann's morality would be more culpable than the one who would drag Saint Vincent de Paul through the mud. I am wrong-would be very sorry if "the acacia was not known" to this magistrate paradoxical and if he did not have a Masonic apron under his prosecutor's robe.

What I say about Sister Saint-Charles may, moreover-theirs, apply to all the scandals mounted by the Jews.

Suppose that Camondo or any Jew had been unhappy in his marriage. Feeling he is dying, he takes away from the woman who cheated on him for custody of his son, he prays to the old woman mother whom he worships to raise this child honestly. A rabbi comes to console this man, to bring some hope of a higher life in this cruelly stricken family.

Do you think that a Catholic newspaper would have gotten involved in this?
intimate drama^ would have attacked this grandmother, insulted this rabbi? Certainly not. See, on the contrary, what the Jewish press, Paris, Veil-Picard, Lanterne, Mayer, Voltaire, Lafitte and Strauss, have drawn from

(1) Grenoble Criminal Court, presided over by Mr. Piat Dervial, December 1882.

If we take Morin's point of view, it would therefore be necessary to ad-put that the court paid little attention to the reputation of Ms. Hu-gues, since he granted him 2,000 francs of dointnages-iulérêls and that he did not pay the La/<ier;2(?) that he one hundred and fifty francs of damage-interests towards the Sister Saint-Charles. I hasten to say that this would be a forced conclusion, we must not see in the disproportion of the two bilfs that further proof of the servility of the judiciary euveri the deputies of the left.

THE JEWISH PERFORMANCE 461

this Chauhies affair, in hatred of this noblewoman Duchess of Glievreuse, guilty of wearing one of the most

In this respect, the novel by Alexis Bouvier, published in

(1) All this campaign, declamations on \n motherhood, ap'loie-menlson the mother i)rivée of her children, naturally leads to pro-to cure a Jewess of a matter. Whenever you see the Parisian press suddenly at war over a disaster trophy or scandal, say to yourself: "There is a brave Israelite who wants to earn a few louis." The Delpits are getting restless, the Jews the move.

It is Mrs. Gersl who is chosen to wear the diamonds of the du-Cliaulnes's check at the Mont de Piété, and it is possible to think that she received some remuneration for his efforts. La Lanterne of March 9, 1883 gave us the portrait of this devoted woman:

"M""* Gerst is mirchatide at U toilette and lives Chaussée-d'Au-tin, next to the French Republic. She has a large shop there where we see piled up the most diverse objects, from the dentures such as grand privy, from silverware to bibs-the most unusual, the most unexpected lots. This is how, next to of a silver soup tureen that Mr. Garabetta almost bought, and which is co-worth ten thousand francs, we see hanging a beautiful hunting horn all dented, which is worth seventy-five cents, and in which is past a Chantilly wheel, the end of which floats on an inkwell of gilded zinc worth one franc fifty.

"The mistress of the house is a small woman of the Israelite type very accented, with a pronounced Alsatian accent, and universally con-naked in the Chaussée d'Antin district, where everyone refers to it as the Jewess.

It goes without saying that Mrs. Gerst protests that she only acted out of love. ,for rhuuiaiilé. "The duchess," she said, "had a lot of friendship for me and often said to me: Gerst, you are going to do such and such thing. I did it and didn't tell anyone about it, although often came to tell me: You know Chaulnes, tell us about it therefore of his projects.

What a lesson in the spectacle of this woman refusing to sell out the advice of religious saints who would have helped her save her body and his soul and arriving to run aground in a bric-a-brac shop in brac, between a dented hunting horn and an old soup tureen, for to hear oneself called /in Chaulnes, by a saleswoman in the toilet Follow! That's the rumor that should have been made...

u i6.

The Lantern, under the title of The Two Duchesses, is still a document to consult. The names themselves are barely modified; the abbey of Solesmes became Tabbaye de Solente, she is the theater, is it necessary to say it, of the most disgusting orgies. The rr:oine Gadouiii devotes his days of talking dirty and chasing after dishwashers. In Solanges de Vroix Saint-Luc, Albert Delpit, this Alexis Bouvier of the salons, took over the same theme but with some form. The Jew^ Ollendorff printed the work, the Jew Meycr praised it in his diary and the Jew Koning promised to play the piece.

I confess that, in this respect, I clearly separate myself from the Catholics. I cannot explain why they did not com- sent to some pornographer a novel The Two Ba- Ronnes, whose title would have been spread on the walls next to The Two Duchesses poster. Jewish shawls indicated so as not to be mistaken, two Israeli baronesses at barely veiled by transparent initials giving themselves over to most reprehensible acts, a synagogue interior soiled by debauchery, a rabbi playing an aqua- tick... You see the plot from here.

The mistake of Catholics is to place their feelings of men of the world, of well-born men, of gentlemen above the responsibility they have to watch over the poor, on the simple, on the naive who are misled with such publications.

– You are guilty and very guilty, I said to one of them, not to use all means to com- beat evil. Among the hundred and fifty thousand readers of the Lantern, ten thousand, relatively honest, undergo the influence of printed paper and are absolutely convinced that the monks of Solcsmes spend their lives perpetuating all crimes. At the next revolution, they will believe very do well by shooting the religious who fall to them on hand.

JEWISH PEOPLE 463

I am perfectly convinced, for my part, that if we founded an anti-Jewish bookstore on the bookstore plan anti-clerical, we would manage, after a year, to suppress completely not the very violent discussion of religious questions, perfectly legitimate discussion, but the outrage to priests, to the Sisters of Charity, to ceremonies of worship.

Similia similibus Jews love mud, give it to them them, and they will leave you alone.

What laughter rose from the benches of the left when Mr. de Lanjuinais came to complain to the tribune of shameful exhibitions of the Republican Museum which promotes from town to town, torture scenes featuring monks? Wouldn't he have done better to raise some funds?
and to organize a show where Fasfeassinatdu would have been seen little child of Metz by Raphaël Lévy, the martyrdom of Fr.
Thomas in Damascus or redo Tizla Elzar. The Jews would have shouted, Mr. de Rothschild would have shown his teeth, Naquet and David Raynal would have become agitated and Waldeck, who jeered so pleasantly Mr. de Lanjuinais, would have gone up to the tribune to declare that everything that was respectable should be respected, and that harmony between citizens had always seemed the most enviable of possessions for a government sincerely republican.

I do not intend, of course, to stir up all the filth of Jewish journalism, to recall all the insults, all the ignominies that they poured on the

464 JEWISH FRANCE

Christians. Any pretext is good to strike at what they call Vensoutané. The most beautiful, the most touching ceremonies of our worship, those which have been going on for a long time, even from the point of view of the eyes, the joy of old France, are occasions for blasphemy and vulgarity.
processions are tightrope exercises, mascarades, comedies, fardes, promenades of religious tinsmithing. The Blessed Sacrament is called the ^f. the priest's pendulum.

These are the kind actions of people who, under the Empire, as I have related, were indignant that the name was given from Jew to a usurer in a medieval play; of people which, a few years ago, had fifteen people sentenced days in prison a young man who, robbed by the Jews, had published in the Furet, of Montpellier, a satire in verse entitled: The Jew.

How do you find them? Are they ticklish enough, before? Are they insolent enough, intolerant enough after the triumph?

What is astonishing about all this is the total absence of all originality.

new idea, not an unprecedented infamy. It's the Talmud poured into the stream, it is the Hebrew blasphemy translated in slang. Here again the poverty of imagination of the Jewish.

For the Jewish press as for the Talmud, the preaching-tion is a bark Nabuab, the saints are libertines Kedeschim, the saints of the courtesans Kedeschot, the church-these are bad places or latrines Bet moschah or Bel kyce, the crosses an abomination Toebe, the holy water of dirty water Maijim temeim, blessing a curse

JEWISH PERSECUTION 465

Kelalay the Eucharist an impure sacrifice Zahut tarnished (4).

You all know the scandalous story that the Dreyfus They Lockroy tell from time to time about the appearance of the Immaculate Virgin to Bernadette in the grotto of Lourdes, an apparition attested by countless miracles, confirmed by the Church, after a careful investigation which lasted for many years. According to them, it was a woman of Lourdes, which they first referred to in veiled terms but that they now clearly name this gnome hideous Goblet dared to insult Celle from the Senate tribune who has protected France for so long. Surprise with a captain of cuirassiers by a young peasant girl, she would have deceived the child by telling him that she was the Virgin. This is abject no doubt, but it is nothing new. The misfortunes-who dishonor this journalism, which has had men like Carrel, Chateaubriand, Genoude, Veuillot, Marrast simply plundered the Talmud. For the Jew, in fact, the Holy Virgin is the object of as much horror as her divine Son; they call her a hairdresser and a coupler of women, and claim that she committed an adultery with a soldier named Pandai'a.

In YeschuotjttrSiiié Sanhedrin, chapter ArbaMilot, he is said:

(1) In addition to the Talmud, many Jewish books verse the outrage on Christ and his Church. The story of Our Lord Jesus Christ was written in Hebrew, under this title: 2Vto-ledot-Ieschati, History of Jesus Christ. Unable to deny miracles of the Savior, the author attributes them to magical operations and to the virtue of the ineffable name that he would have had the skill to steal in the Holy of Holies.

"This book," says Mr. Drasch in his Letter from a Converted Rabbi, "does not exist

This is what they did to Saladin's son, whom they hanged the day before of the Passover. "Ask: The son of Satada! Is it not rather Pandara's son? Rab replies: The husband's name was Satada, the lover Pandara." Objection: but no, the husband's name was Pappos, son of Judah?" Answer: "So his mother's name was Satada. » Asks: "But no, the mother's name was Miriam (Mary), a beautiful and pious woman.? » Answer: "That's true, but if we give him the name Satada, it's after the use of the city of Pumbadita and it is said: this one has moved away (in Chaldean: Sata tada) by committing adultery. The gloss says thereupon: "The son of Sata tada is Jesus Nocerì {of Nazareth), This is found in the same terms, in Moè'd, treatise of the Sab-beats^ chapter Ila-Bone, at the end (1).

To all these forms of attack we must add perse-terrible, elusive, indefinable shock which is exerted up and down the social ladder now that we've driven out honest people of all functions.

Where does this persecution end, where does this persecution end? It is almost

(1) Let us purify from these Jewish miasmas, which I ask of you Sorry to make you breathe, let's remember the adorable episode of life of Blessed Giles, who was the third compipruon of Saint Fran-Is of Assisi and of whom the Seraphic said: "He is one of the paladins of my Round Table." A religious day, I will doraiiiraiii, doctor eo theoology, tortured for a long time by a doubt about the virginity of the Mother of God, came to find Thumble's brother. Gilles was warned halfraculous; he goes to meet her, without giving her time to depart, he said to him, striking the ground with his staff: "Brother pre-chorus, Married is a virgin before she gives birth." And a beautiful lily sprang-land tit at the right moment. Striking the laleiro again, he continued:
"Brother preacher, Mary is a virgin in her childbirth." A second lily rose from the ground. Finally giving a third blow of the stick in earth: "Brother |>rogue," he cries, "Mary is a virgin after her childbirth, n El a third lily of dazzling whiteness as the first two stood before them. And the religious do-Ouinicain, no less struck by the authority of la()aiole than by the tri[de
"minister of the lilies, will relive carrying in its own this divine peace which he had until then sought in vain

I

impossible to say. She is of every day, of every moments; it occurs in a thousand ways through countless-agents affiliated with the Freemasonic and Jewish police and sometimes not even clearly realizing it that they do; she denounces, she slanders, she smears, she tends traps, she organizes scandals, she dishonors those against which she cannot gather enough false witnesses- gnages; it leads some to madness, others to the following cide and, as soon as you want to hug it, it slips between the hands, she challenges you to name her.

The agent of this dreadful work is called Legion; he was born on the rot of the new layers, dear to Gambetta; he takes on all disguises, he dons all the shapes, he takes five or six grinds from his bag.

When a priest displeased Masonry in a village, the agent comes to the cabarets to collect what he needs to build an accusation of indecent assault or murder that the Jewish press is responsible for propagating; if at the same time he notices that an inn, a little isolated, is run by a old man, he becomes a political informer, a criminal informer- nel, he gives the elements of a case to the prowlers of Paris that he knows. What hold do we have against him? If we surprises huddled in a church where fingerprints were taken locks, he declares that he is on the trail of a big crime committed by a priest, and the magistracy of today- today is too well trained to imitate the action of a enemy of clericalism. Fifteen days united we pillage the school church, but the police, who took care not to discover the. criminals who had robbed the Treasury of the basilica of Saint-Denis has too much wit to look for the real culprit. Our man, moreover, is not content with simply monitoring the evils of clericalism in the churches, he follows his ma-

4G8 LA FaANCK JUIVK

works, he enters the barracks, he visits the forls under pretext of von- if we have not reserved a place for the alms- niers and, in memory of the KuUurcampf, no doubt, ne- does not neglect to let Germany benefit from its observations military.

Wherever he is arrested, he is sure of impunity. stands, in cITet. Agent Tricoche and Cacolet have a great chief who is the police prefect. Formerly, it is said, at dawn, when the gambling den valets and brothel boys com- began to sweep the rooms and let in some air in these dives where cork vapors floated everywhere- ruption, a morning emissary came to deliver to Fouché the bauche. Today Fouché is no longer alone in feeling the pain, he shares the profits of the shady agencies with everyone of Republicans. He is like the honorary president-raire, I want to be the honorary president of a huge gambling den; the Tricoche and Cacolet house was declared an estab-public utility company; it does everything concerning its state: she spies on the priests, she spies on everything that could compromise them; it provides excellent information-slow on freight forwarders like the Bloch brothers who fled in 1883 after stealing six hundred thousand francs to Parisian merchants; she pro-stifles Vice and persecutes Virtue.

Sometimes there is a misunderstanding. We accidentally attack each other. to the wife of a radical MP, then we hear a nice va-Carmelite. Like the freedom of conscience of a Dieyfus, the hon-The leader of a republican is, it seems, of a particular ular, it is a rare piece; it takes care of it and the newspapers conservatives, who would not defend their own, do uu infernal tapnge around this precious honor. It is not not bad, by the way: the stirred mud stinks more than when it remains stagnant, and the social chemist can in-to study the composition of mephytic vapors that it releases. We must lidler for example: barely, by the beauty opening, did we see the cesspool which is above-below our republican Paris, that everyone shouts: "(Put the plate back!"

JEWISH PERSECUTION 469

God forbid I disrespect a mother of slandered family; I do not believe that one can* find in This violent book contains an allusion that can even be brushed aside. the honor of an honest woman. It is permitted, however, to watch and judge the spectacular piece that we have mounted on the occasion of the Hugues affair.

What a room, more suited to inspiring Republicans than that of January 8, 1885! Terrified in advance at the idea to be the target of attacks from the radical press, the President Bérard des Glajeux relinquished his responsibilities, with a unheroic prudence, of the right to maintain good order, he delegated all his powers to Lunel, the head of the guards of the Palace.

Is this Lunel related to the Jewish stockbroker of this name? I don't know. In any case, after being fired, he was reinstated in his job, thanks to the energetic support of the Lantern and the Vlnlransigeant. Entrance gates rons of the Palace of Justice, and the kids chase the passers-by of their offers.

Pimps and prostitutes invaded the courtroom;
This vile world mixes with the juries, drives the lawyers out their benches. A public girl, half from Oshabiiljo, watch, the horn opened and the min" lur^N- • •

470 THE JEWISH BRIDE

clief (Jii jury and the attorney general Bernnrd. A magistrate, in n^guarding his neighbor, recognizes a thief he has condemned \e 42 May previous. The president, pressed between barrier prowlers and former galley slaves, hardly dare make a move so as not to disturb his assistants.

Evening comes. All this excited and nervous com-begins to exchange bawdy remarks. The women lend themselves-tempt to touch, empty (Champagne oats, loudly give appointments in the hotels of the neighborhood, then, tired of waiting, not daring to leave their places, publicly sacrifice to nature on the floor that they defile (1).

It is before this audience worthy of them that the defenders of outraged virtue.

Mr. Henri Rochefort was responsible for the prologue in his newspaper. Who does not remember with what ferocious spirit he relentless on the poor Ilorlense queen, to whom M™« de Rémusat cUe-mcnie, who is not tender, gave an eloquent liommago, he repeated a hundred times that she had been the mistress of Admiral Werhuel; he called the Empress
In the most outrageous way, he claimed that the prince imperial was a bastard; he renewed on the unfortunate Marie-Anloincltc the attack that the executioner committed, it is said, on Mary Stuart, he picked up the slanders of Hébert, to accuse this queen of nameless and slapped morals this severed head that the executioner had not dared to take (!) See, on tîntes these icons insroynbtos rjne nous atténuoas, the ioiirumxdG l'<'|io<|i!(' (le|Miis the F/z/'oo until the Just>ce and a tableau lies viv. ineiii. Iiros-c «le celle orgie eu p't'iiie s.ille d'audience in the place {'/'m'uite. It's o^l \a qn'û fan<Jia |»ni>er to go account of this which was the justice in France in 1885, declares that a woman's honor is sacred and that Those who dare to touch it are vile.

But Analole de la Forge has just entered the scene. 11 a probably congratulated Mayer, "his old friend," when he accused a Sister of Charity of giving birth in a train car, Here he is, AikSi, singing his great aria on honor women (1). Don't try to make this che- I believe that slander against a woman is also infamous at Mayer's as at Morin's, this gallant man answers you- cynically: "Morin was not useful to my candidacy- nature, and Mayer is infinitely so; if Morin had had a Republican newspaper I would have called him: "my old friend. 3"

The one who is most indignant is Mr. Gatineau, which relieved the army so much that he was struck since with apoplexi as he left Yvon's workshop, where he had gone to see the portrait of General Forgemol. Jamaica more cllronté diffa-

(1) Anatole <Ie îla Forge, we remember, indulged in a heat-reuse apologift for the assassination.

The president, despite his weakness, had a movement of protest-tion; he covered what was corrupting for a country this fact of a representative of the nation coming alone to assert the right of kill; he tried to bring the witness back to modesty.

De la Forge, under this well-deserved literacy, seemed to experience a swell movement, then in front of the eyes "all the stones-reuses who were there, old Beau straightened up: "It's my feeling-ment," he said.

Neither the Uoiippiiri nor the Pasha of the Icehouse have gone that far; they did not excuse the assassination, they pleaded the circumstances uuanles, drunkenness... To be well informed about Telal d*e-|)rit ge-general, obset vez the f.çoiï of which the conservative newspapers speak of I incite him. Of Pcni', u!) ii^mitic tie righteousness «U of heart, dare not blame this Robert M.icaie re' [>ub icuinc^u'eu euvelo^j^aul sou Mâme in the^ most lau&es epitheles.

472 LA FKANCT5 JUIVR

amateur has dishonored the French bar, which counts however, beautiful specimens in this genre.

Wait until he has finished being indignant and you will see it. to shake hands with the hat raised M<^ Cléry who, in the Marais trial, accused, without A shadow of proof, an actress to have given the

in a critical moment.

A little further on, he will greet Mr. Cresson, a former police prefect, a member of the council of the order. This one, in the lawsuit brought against M^{re} Edmond Adam by his brother-in-law, was not content to take what, in the life of the woman of letters, may seem ridiculous—cure: books, embassies, receptions; it was look in the diabetic night pot and it has told the court what he had seen; he spoke of "the delirium of adulterous Venus to her tied prey (1); » he has public-solemnly and solemnly affirmed against Mrs. Adam of the facts as slanderous probably as those articulated against Mrs. Hugues (2). The filthy beast, for all these democrats, is the

(1) This is what Mr. Le Berqnier, in his speech at the conference of the .-l.iiijiaies liii 1^{re} December 1884, apiie'.le "pleading the causes the more'< ciiflauMii»'es, EtQs exceed the line which separates the line from the line—cence, the necessary diocusàiuu of the aggressions l)leosaulcs fl sterile.» "The prince," he adds, "is courteous and it is an honor to protect at the right altitude of men divided in opinion, and 8'e.xpln|nfnil on everything with a moderation that does not harm anything the siiM'ériié, nor even to the liveliness of their convictions, »

The Minister himself did not hesitate to defame Alphonse. Djii ict en doimaiit a misleading meaning to h llr^'s all perâOU—v Ueili'.—éf.iiu»» with the laioscr—ui'er of life lilléra re.

(ij CdZiule i^ii^ iibuntiuu uu IG iiovcutljie t8bl.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 473

poor, dirty wretch, who goes away, for forty sous, look for arguments that bring in ten thousand francs lawyers when they present them to the judges by giving them a gravity that they would not have in the Ladle of a Morin (1).

Public opinion in France has lost so much per—

(1) The republican newspapers, so respectful of the honor of women, yes found a way to love "not an unhappy woman who had no legs and who lived on the charity of the pastors! You have all known this sad summit of human miseries which is was born on the Boulevard des Capucines and that Charles Yriarle forgot in his Celebrities of In street. Assuredly, you will stria atieudu that the press never attacks this unfortunate woman. You do not

was a former prostitute who, pursued by acrenis of the morals, had broken both legs jumping from a window to their eclipse. But this woman had never been registered on the re-records of the ()rostitution; it had never been sought by the morality officers and she had never had legs.

"This unfortunate woman," says Mr. Macé in his book: The Service of safety by S071 former chief, e&i an honest mother. Ma-laughed, thirty years ago, to a Mr. L., baker worker, she had eighteen children, three of whom are still living, live in Paris and work there. an honorable profession and enjoy an excellent reputation.

"This widow, incapable of any other work, has always earned her life by imploring public support. The regulars of the boulevard con-had been navigating for a long time and came to his aid.

"But since she was slandered in the only box she possessed – her honor – everyone looks at her with tne()ris and no hand opens for her anymore. She was able once, with gifts charilab es, raise a large family; she can no longer today-today suffice for its own existence.

Admit that this victim is much more interesting than Ms. Hugues who is young, beautiful, spiritual, who makes busts and who has to defy a husband who reads admirably and who has already killed a man in a duel. Alas! this ass-de-jattle does not seem sufficiently distinct to Mr. Anatole del Forge. We must take into account the hatred of the poor which is special to Republicans-Masons (See chapter-three i*' of this same book VI).

474 THE JEWISH FRINGE

perception of the just and the unjust that she is incapable of account for all this; for her everything is reduced to stage plays: she applauds when it is well played and it is All.

Superior to everything, the Republicans can dare anything. If a Christian woman exasperated by persecution had allowed herself to resort to the revolver, the newspapers friendly to Mr. Hugues would have denounced it together and the law would have exhausted its rigors on her. You have seen, on the contrary, the atti-Study of Judge Athalin before M^^^ Hugues, suddenly transformed from the goddess of Liberty into the furious Eumenides; he overwhelms her with politeness, he kisses the hem of her dress asking for his protection; he refuses to confront the accused with the corpse of her victim, which is a compulsory mality, and this under the pretext of saving a emotion to a woman who can have all the qualities, but which certainly does not resemble a sensitive, if it enemy.

We are here, moreover, in the pure Jacobean tradition. well. Death alone seems capable of expiating the slightest offense against the august person of the Jacobin or the Jacobine. Léonard Bourdon, the villainous proconsul of whom Taine told us about the exploits, was insulted one evening in Orleans in coming out of a bad place and receiving some blows in a drunken brawl. Do you know how many human beings—hands were sacrificed for this fact? Nine. One of these evil—Happy had nineteen children, four of whom served in the armies (1). The [^armors of these unfortunates came to supply, (Ij Wallon, Hall of the Revolutionary Tribunal.

JEWISH PERSECUTION Â iD

not crying, the Convention to give grace; the Convention remained impassive and the condemned were led to the sup—accomplice in red shirt.

A twenty-year-old girl, Cécile Renault, introduces herself to Robespierre's concierge with two small knives in his pocket. We kill his father, his brother, his sister, his ring and fifty-six people are involved in the trial. being guillotined, always in their shirts. It was so handsome as Fouquier-Tinville, to go and see the cortege, delayed his dinner that day"

Republican writers, who find this admirable and who shouted with joy at the assassination of Moriu, all declare themselves in favor of the abolition of the death penalty death (1). What Pasquins! •

(1) Clovis Lingues would not be a complete Jacobin if he lacked that drowns l)y|»o(;riie, that affection decloialoue of only ones liars. The inuiine who shouted to his wife after the crime: "You Well done, my Jeannette!" and who found it simple that we kill someone starving for "doorbells," Jadia regretted. in the Days tie conihat not to be the good God to compt the sun to rise on the day when some misery is carried out which has cut his mother into pieces or strangled his old father;

When the crowd waits for them to stand up

The day delivers a living assassin to the executioner,

This good one, he made even more infamous,

I pity him and I pity his mother, poor woman
Who gave him his lay (and who still loves him.
I tell myself that hearts are deaf to sacred calls.
That societies should be better;
A century of pain, condensed into six leagues.
Is experienced by all those who are thrown into the ecb,if,iu<l;
That one has no right to the grave, and that one must Eire just and luerenlin the guillotine.
All the human beings res|)ire in my chest,
All the saug that you poured boils in my vein here;

470 JEWISH FRANCE

What can be done about this persecution? Nothing. It is perseimproved cut that Desmoulins foresaw when he wrote: "It is the clumsy despots who help themselves of the Layonnettes, The end of tyranny is to do the same thing with judges."

The authoritarian regime, this all-powerful centralization-health, already so heavy when the government machine-tale was ruled by men who had a fragment of conscience which, at least, were connected to French traditions, has become a terrifying instrument of oppression in the hands of yesterday's vagahonds, of newly naturalized foreigners, vindictive Jews and hateful. Magistrates, commissioners, agents, all of this is united by the original community. All have done roughly the same jobs in the past, lived between two fears of the little suspect industries. If you had to complain-dream of some kind of power, I don't think you found great protection with Cartier, the former Crémieux's trusted man, who declares, in a election meeting, that "God, family and property are swings.

As for the commissioners, there is no day when following some too dazzling adventure, one of them died his office for a cell in Mazas. One, a magistrate and wine merchant at the same time, is prosecuted for fraud.
The other, a man named Rougeau, he operated in Saint-Denis,

And I, who do not believe, would like to be God,
For when I see that the executioner is getting ready
To beg someone, to cut off a head,
A correction of evil by an excess of evil,
I prevented the day from doubling the signal!

JEWISH PERSECUTION 477

demands 10 francs instead of 10 francs from one of his administered; he is only saved, says the Clarion, through the intervention of Læwe and Camille Sée (1). The com- The Viviers commissioner fires a revolver shot at a resident so peaceful of his commune and is arrested at the moment when he rushed at him, probably to snatch his mon- three. In December 1883, the police commissioner d'Orbec, Hebert, is sentenced by the Assize Court of Calvados to three years in prison for indecent assault (5;). Cardinal, the police commissioner of Vitré, is more still astonishing; it is responsible for providing nights of love to his friends and he randomly chooses among the women the most irreproachable in the city. One evening, his companion orgy, Leroy, editor-in-chief of the Radical of Rennes, shows him the desire to sacrifice to Venus. Cardinal does not hesitate no, he opens in the name of the law the house of an hon- woman, Ms. Porée, whose husband worked at the station was absent, throws the fiery republican into the arms of this lady woke up with a start and seized with terror, and withdraws. The woman screams, defends herself, beats the drunkard

(1) In the session of January 21, 18⁴, Mr. Delaltre recounted before the House about fifteen thefts, abuse of power, deli- menls accomplished by this character; Mr. Margue replied that it was very well and the left was of his opinion.

(2) Among the peacekeepers prosecuted in August 1884, for having struck an unfortunate old man named Miguoguet, who died as a result of this violence, we see nn ygent- by the name of Miyer (again), previously convicted []Our blows and injuries. Sentenced to a fine of 200 francs, he was released acquitted on appeal. Another guard binds the [»aix Jew, Cyrille Jacob, knocked out, on September 14, 1885, the caretaker of the house he was li- milk, rue Obeikainpf, 47, and was sentenced to two months in prison and five francs fine.

II 27.

who wants to take her by force. Finally the affair gets out and, in December 1885, the Court of Appeal of Rennes?, ruling under the chairmanship of Mr. de Kerberlin, condemned; Cardinal to six months and Leroy to one month in prison.

Broussier, first police commissioner in Guines, where he had committed countless thefts, had been sent by the minister in Vendôme with advancement. There he found It's easy to go to the station, rip open a bag of dispatches and to take away the loaded letters. The jury of Loir-et-Cher sentenced him to five months in prison from February 1886. "I am still police commissioner, he said to the president, the ministry accepted me for the colonies. y> He will return to his post at the end of his sentence. and probably before.

It would be a shame to omit Joyeux, the commissioner of police of the Folie-Méricourt district. This Lapla- this, which all the newspapers echoed in the month of May 1884, is one of the most moving, one of those which mon- best understand how hard our society is on the little ones. This Laplacette, entrepreneur of credit sales, two or three times millionaire, had simply restored, for its employees, the chain of ancient slavery, but in the making it even heavier.

To prevent his brokers from abandoning him, this Republican boss, since we were about to decorate him, had found an ingenious way. As soon as a slight error occurred in the account of his employees, as soon as he they were missing two or three francs worth of stamps, he charged them- knows of breach of trust and frightened them with the mandates of blank appearance given to him by his accomplice and his partner, Commissioner Joyeux. The unfortunates were brought into a room, which was called Za cage, in which kept the commissioner's secretary permanently ready to verbalize in case the employee responded with a word rude to the insults with which Laplacolte overwhelmed him. There, panicked by the idea of prison, terrified by this device, they signed a statement in which they admitted having stolen their boss.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 479

The signatories were now at the discretion of Lapla- this. Six months, a year or two years later, when the business were going badly or that the need to strike the mind of the personnel was felt, we took at random one of these unfortunate, as one took a slave for the moray eels, own admission. We put the name on a board, which we called the progress table, so that this example terrorized others.

Eighty poor devils were thus executed.
Eighty human lives were soiled, withered, broken forever! And the others! Those who had without stop this sword of Damocles over your head, do you imagine?
what they had to suffer.

Joyeux was not prosecuted, he was not even dismissed;
he was allowed by Gamescasse to assert his rights to a honorable retirement

All these geijs, once again, are taking care of each other them, because they know about each other's histories-tories to send everyone to the galleys.

Custodes ipsos quis cuslodiet? says the honorable man distraught when he saw the public security guards a-to tie to former communards to plunder the poor world. In February 1884, Provendier, an officer of peace of the ninth arrondissement, sadly compromised in the break-in of the Capuchins' home and already prosecuted

480 JEWISH FRANCE

for embezzling funds intended for placed agents under his orders, appeared before the Assize Court of the Seine; he is sentenced to two years in prison for forgery committed in complicity with one of his friends, Mr. Gilson.
Mr. Gilson had played a considerable part in the pill-lage of the Saint-Ambroise church under the Commune.

Another peace officer, Goût, was arrested in October
bre 1884, and sentenced to one year in prison for extortingthat large sums of money were paid to the directors of the Circles, using the name of Puybaraud, the head of the cabinet of the police prefect.

Rougeau, Dulac's secretary, had taken an active part to the execution of the decrees. As for Hébert, the Bugler of the 17th October 1883 tells us that while in Bayeux, "he had made with the Jewish sub-prefect Strauss, decorated for this exploit, and the secretary of the sub-prefect, assault of brutality to break down the gates of Tabbaye and to drive out the RR. PP. Premonstratensians. » Unable to keep it any longer, had sent it to Orbec.

Gotton d'Englesqueville, who had shown so much tenacity-formerly imperial prosecutor in Ajaccio, judge at the court of Pau and advisor to the court of Caen, he had to leave the judiciary and, after having exercised various professions. he was lastly a horse broker; that's where we went to get him to make him a police commissioner. Pursued by remoid, he believed himself to be the target of attacks of invisible criminals and had claimed that an individual, remained unknown, had planted a bomb in his apartment-ment; a few hours before his death, he sent to the prefect- a dispatch which carried these words: "Mazas in debris; Louise Michel and the Capuchins blew up Paris.

JEWISH PEOPLE'S CRIME 481

A. Margarof, the mayor of Nîmes, one of the thirty-three members of the Supreme Council, who, allied with the Protestants, had shown real frenzy in all the acts of religious persecution, committed suicide in April 1885, in the continuation of nasty money deals.

There would be very interesting things to say about the punishment of the lockpickers. Almost all those who were mixed with these scenes end in disasters.

The locksmith from Lille, who had agreed, despite everyone's refusal his comrades, to lend his help to the prefect, makes a infernal machine and then kills himself.

In February 1885, a man named Astruc, who had figured in the first rank during the execution of the decrees to Montpellier, is sentenced by the Assize Court to three years from prison for complicity in theft.

Everyone who has been to pick the Bomb Trap at the Plant died within the year in very difficult conditions sad (1).

(1) Who does not remember the dilhyrambs sung by a certain alleged press (-ousiervalrice, about this Darrème, dis[])aru in one of those obscure dramas which abound in our so-called epoch- what pul)licity where we have never seen so many mysteries, for excellence slow reason that one could not squint at anything of this "little approach the government without throwing away mountains of rubbish? Banème that was offered to us as "the nicdele of public virtues- "private and private" had played a role in the execution of the decrees all the more odious since, as long as he had believed in the success of the Monarchs, chistes, he had aflithé islands exaggerated religious feelings.

A correspondent from the newspaper La Croix gave some details near Bressuire.

The devoutly Catholic population of this Vendée region had come forward to protest against this infamous act. During that the prefect excited by his presence and his words the worker in charge to make the Ocsignol play, a Vendée beer approaches him

482 THE JEWISH FIANCY

Without doubt, the facts are explained quite naturally. human point of view. It is not in the elite of the population that the power was able to find auxiliaries and all the hangmen are not hanged, they always end up, in continuing the course of their exploits.-, by hitting too violent- the law so that we can hush up the affair. It is, I believe, Joseph de Maistre who said that there were more coquins running after punishments than punishments courrant after the rascals.)) Despite everything, both sides sometimes meet.

The Ballerich brothers rushing, Tépée and the revolver in the fist, in a newspaper office, don't they seem the personification of the Police itself, panicked, distraught, perverted by impunity, what am I saying, by reward of men like Dulac and Clément who accomplished, without have been continued, acts that the Code punishes! precisely from the penal colony (1)? Everything is linked. In terms of ef-fraction:

and sends him, in a certain place, his foot armed with a solid hoof. The crowd was threatening; the prefect had |)eur and did not turn around even (the |)ow to know <^ni had just been kept silent from him.-" this ^riititicaliou.

"He took the blow without saying anything, and the good woman took her sahol, which was aclitdé ei ()réceeu=emeut preserved under glCe, on a «;lie-mined of saUui

u For nii>i, in the death of Barrème, I recognize the hand of DitHi a.ipesautie d'uue manière terrible contre un persecuteur excom equipped.

"What I fear most for this poor man is that since his good exploit, he would not have been able to lift the excommunicate cation.

(1) Compare Rocbefort's article, Les Policiersfissnssin, with the article de llocht^fott going with two friends, in IStJS, to hit him with a printer, and, before having, attracting on the b.Hile- vard .Montparnasse that the workers came out. It was the [irendère

JEWISH PERSECUTION 483

We begin with the convents,
It's with the newspapers that we end up.

We can imagine the scruples that people like
I Officials of people who have so much to be forgiven.
A police commissioner from Angers, Poilu, is responsible, at November 1881, of an investigation against a priest.
Most witnesses testify in favor of the accused and are quite surprised when their statements are read back to them court to see that they had been made to say absolutely everything the opposite of what they thought. The ingenious Poilu had simply called to his office and, under a pre-any text, had them sign a blank sheet.
The Indictments Chamber, seized of the case, dismissed the fraudulent intent by noting only that the magistrate had systematically omitted to report the testimonies favorable to the accused!

We understand what can happen in a country organized like ours^the force j^u^..^ae entrusted to such men.

to nix the idea of attacking an irresponsible agent, a being wholly ins-instrumental like the printer. I do not excuse the a^Messioii that a of the Bal'ericii brothers paid with his life, but it is incorrigible that Rochefort has the same cliose as them in coudilious which are brought it closer to an ambush.

If I point this out to you, it is especially because it in-once again says [the deep ignorance of all these people who,
as soon as his self is at stake, absolutely forget about the beautiful things which he trades. Without doubt the examination of conscience to which oblige the frequentation of the Sacraments does not preserve our pautrue nature so afraid of falling back into evil, but it prevents this state of complete demoralization where the soul no longer has the feeling of what is allowed and what is not, m La cuafes-sion, a dilénergiijuemenl. Lamennais, was established to prevent-dear the sin of rotting in the heart of man.

484 FRANCE JEWS

On this point the future Islander would do well to consult The Chronicles of Ignotus.

It is in a special volume, devoted to the movement vain who is one of the few who learned their name at the crowd since 1870. Many don't like it; others exaggerate its value; I find, for my part, that it is impossible to deny him a very real gift of expressing himself in a personal language of sometimes very original thoughts and very high. We can apply the definition of the artist to it by Varnhagen: "An artist is one whose ideas are formed images. »

I admit I'm not always enthusiastic about portraits. I don't talk about the portrait of Rothschild, it is not worthy of the writer and the author seems to have blushed since he has not gave no publicity to the volume in which it appeared. Alphonse, it seems, was himself disgusted by it. "Here, my dear, he is said to have said to the baroness, showing a newspaper Jewish in which Catholics were dragged through the mud, this is how we whip them..... and this is how they lick us," he added, throwing the article to the ground. dlgnotus.

Never has adulation for the Jew been pushed so far. this century, rich in incredible adventures, which saw a son of Fortune to be crowned at Notre-Dame eleven years after the execution cution of a descendant of Saint Louis, where the empires and thrones roll carried away by sudden storms like tree leaves in the autumn wind, Ignotus claims without laughing that the founder of the dynasty of Rothschild insured his house "even against the future." The beautiful promissory note that the bankers and the pretty girl have there prophecy that the first captain will falsify tomorrow

JEWISH PERSECUTION 485

not very brave, the first insurgent leader of frank temperament-who, instead of stupidly attacking convents, will come, cigarette in hand, quietly put in arrest of the entire Celtic brood of barons

To be less flat the other portraits are not not always more faithful.

In my opinion, Ignotus, as a portraitist, did not enough love for this drawing that Ingres called "the probity of art." He does not care enough about sincerity of the contours and the truth of the lines, it is fun and interesting without always worrying about being accurate.

The reason for this relative inadequacy is simple. This writer, who has such beautiful parts of artist and poet, is onlooker in some ways. If he is sometimes the tender son he often remains the inhabitant of Loire-Inférieure on the movement in Paris. The onlooker, who is in him, paralyzes and de-arms the observer when it comes to looking into the white of the eyes of these contemporaries who almost lie always, who take on artificial attitudes in disagreement with decoy, acts; it serves him, on the contrary, when it is a question of look at the street that can only be understood by sharing a little bit of his way of feeling.

What will remain of this modern painter who, unlike as he perhaps imagines himself, knows better how to see the men than a man, the community than individuality, this are his social studies, his paintings of this new Paris, monstrous, improbable, his dramatic analyses of this upside down world where good people are now at the mercy of criminals from all countries.

Collect these fragmentary works into one volume, add the book by Maxime Du Camp, add the present book which says what these men, concerned with not to make enemies, do not dare to say. Complete the everything by the book that someone, without a doubt, is to prepare in a corner and which will contain what I did not want to say: the intimate details, that everyone whispers in the ear, the revelations about the gambling dens secret, on private life, on the shameful underside of this government. And, if the capital disappears in a formidable cataclysm, you will have sufficient materials to rebuild the giant city that yesterday was called the city-queen and which, tomorrow, will be the beggarly city, the city discovered-ripped, dishonored, desperate.

486 JEWISH FRANCE

Du Camp gives you in his book cold as the stones, in this book of a completely edilitarian literature, the admirable and pompous decor, the monumental and grand setting-Diocese of the imperial city, but, in this work, almost exclusively with official documents, the movement and life do not exist. In Ignotus, you will find painted in the natural state, ad vivum, the bizarre world that installed himself impudently in this brand new ruin of a collapsed world as the bohemians settle down two or three times a year in the Tuileries Gardens, during their rags to the statues of the consulars, patching their shoes-sure Irouée at the feet of the marble goddesses, lighting the stoves of their nauseating kitchen under the trees august that our kings had planted to pour the fresh-warmth and shade for passers-by.

A regular at the palace and a lawyer himself, although he only has little pleaded, Ignotus breaks down very well the way in which functions judicial persecution. He explains very lucidly how the innocent is condemned in advance, even with a sort of appearance of justice as soon as the magistrate Franc-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 487

Mason agrees with those who organized a business, either in an electoral inferentiality, or for the purpose of blackmail. Studies on closed doors, secrecy, attacks on modesty are of a thinker and a legalist.

The child, the writer says very well, is not very clearly aware of the reality of things. Just as a newborn baby stretches out its arm to touch the most distant objects – even the child gradually distinguishes the materiality of acts. He confuses them, present or past. He does not make a big difference between this what he saw or heard. Sometimes he thinks he heard what he saw –and saw what he heard.

A criminal lawyer, Mr. Forster, told me that in London he had, in front of several medical witnesses, gradually persuaded to a little girl that she had eaten a candy an hour before, when she had only drunk a glass of red water.

Now, this child is the witness who is usually regarded as the most believable and the most raw. There is this criminal adage: "The smaller the witness, the more it weighs!"

This is what the Freemasons are counting on, excellent in these preparations for trials of attacks on the modesty. We make the child believe in the reality of certain facts that never existed, he is made to learn a lesson that he repeats out of vanity so as not to appear to be lack memory. In this respect, the organizers are incredibly skillful in their choice of subjects. In a village where I lived the Brothers were adored, the same teachers had been there for twenty years, they had raised the whole country. A young Brother arrives, a scandal arises produced and it turns out that the father of the child, who claims to be tended victim, had been sentenced formerly to twenty years of forced labor for indecent assault. Obviously there had, on this occasion, either corruption by the father, or pre-hereditary morbid disposition in children to carry their imagination on certain ideas.

488 JEWISH FRANCE

Among countless such cases, the story of which would extend indefinitely, this book I take at random the affair to make Abbé Mulot.

Abbé Mulot, parish priest of Saint-Leu, in Amiens, was a venerable 71-year-old priest who had gone through life doing the well. During the cholera of 1866, he had braved the died while caring for the sick and the locals from the suburb of Hem had pooled their resources to offer him a golden crown as a souvenir.

When a witness was asked, Mr. Hocquet, mayor of the commune of Templeux-le-Guérard, where Abbot Mulot had been a priest, what was his reputation then, he replied simply: "If I had wanted to bring four hundred here people from Templeux to testify in favor of Mr. Abbé Mulot, they would have come en masse."

Abbot Mulot had to defend the rights of the Church between the city of Amiens. Dauphin, the protector and friend of Erlanger, and Goblet, who is worth even less than him, had been indignant at such audacity. It was resolved that the poor priest, "whom one would set up" to employ the expression of one of the witnesses. A teacher who, before to belong to teaching, had been part of a circus ambulant, came to tell that children had received priest what they called "naturalist lessons."

The trial took place in June 1882. Robinet de Cléry, in charge of the defense of the accused, was magnificent, but had it not been so, the cause of truth would have triumphed anyway. The president of the court was an honest man and a man of wit. After two or three questions; he knew what to expect from the innocence of children they had in fact already appeared two or three times in cases of indecent assault. It was a specialty at them; Freemasonry moved them from department to department in the department. The judgment was very explicit on this point;

JEWISH PERSECUTION 489

With regard to public indecency:

Whereas, if they had existed, the indecent gestures, objects of this second charge, because of their seriousness, does not would not have missed, from the first day, to be revealed by the children, at least two of whom had previously been involved as victims or as witnesses, in moral issues;

Camus, there was no question of these acts in any way, and that It was the next day, in front of the police commissioner, that two children started talking about it;

Whereas the defense, to refute this testimony, has just-ment noted the numerous contradictions that exist between the statements of the various little girls, not only on the gestures in question, but also on other circumstances accesevenings of the scene, contradictions all the more inexplicable as the facts would have taken place before their eyes, in a space relatively very restricted;

Whereas the investigation and the debates have, moreover, revealed the pressure exerted by a person (the secular teacher Mette) on children, and whose animosity against the accused cannot be doubt;

Whereas the unassailable morality of Abbé Mulot and all his past protests against this new head of prevention;

For these reasons:

The court dismisses Abbé Mulot from the prosecution, without costs.

An enthusiastic ovation was given at the end of the hearing.
to the unfortunate old man who, very strong in the face of persecution, almost fainted with joy at seeing how much he was loved. A of our colleagues, Mr. Nicolas Boussu. opened in his newspaper

490 JEWISH FRANCE

the Courrier de la Somme, a subscription which was press-which was immediately covered and used to purchase a chalice gold(l).

The teacher branded by the court received nahirelley
the advancement she deserved; she was called to a position in Paris.

I confess that I do not have the courage to reproach too severely-to the unfortunate woman her unworthy conduct. How difficult it is-sometimes to a poor girl, without principles of morality very solid, to resist the pressure coming from above!
The inspector, a large, decorated man, speaking loudly, exerts a real terror on these weak beings; placed between infamy and the fear of losing their place, they succhow much while suffering perhaps more cruelly than one believes it.

because it can be considered as the typical trial of the Freemasonry.

The date explains the acquittal as the acquittal-ment explains the law on the judiciary. Today

(1)Year mn'ndc jnin 1883 the return of Father Fyten, after his acqnlteiiiciit i»ar the Douai Assize Court. was also a real Iriopli.
Uiiiofoiilo iiniueiise had rushed to meet the roxccllenl priest shouting: "Long live Rabbi Fyten! Down with the Francis-Masons and the slanderers-niateurs!)) read sail strewn with flowers all<M)dail the abbot who took there place next to the dove; sails of nautical vessels, vehicles of all soiled, swathes of peasants followed to the (island. The abbot Fyten had or the cbaue of being brought before the jury; if he had appeared due to the inagi&lrls Fian('s Mùçmus, it » ûi probable-ment lin i ses jours in uue i-risou. How many pities iimùceuu yes peri uiufi 1

JEWISH PERSECUTION 491

Abbé Mulot would certainly be sentenced to five years of prison (1).

Ignotiis was right when he wrote:

What will become of everyone's security when the judiciary will belong to declassed beings? We will arrive at the hours the darkest moments of Roman decadence. The new magistrate ^e^a the instrument of revenge or particular appetites. The Coule will be mistress of the courtroom. You have already seen a priest, who-(Lepôis was acquitted - arrested preventively and taken to prison between two gendarmes... on foot, one Sunday, at the exit of the high mass. Was there no pressure from the crowd on secondary magistrates?

What happens to the priests today will happen tomorrow or the day after tomorrow to the laity.

Now the jury is chosen by two different degrees of examination-minators: 1® the assembly of mayors; 2* the assembly composed general councilors and chaired by the president of the court civil. What will it be like when this president is a magistrate of last-last category?

What will it be like - when the prosecution is composed of me-prized? when the excessive right to preemptively arrest a citizen will be in venal hands? when the accused can be held incommunicado, according to the whim of some investigating judge-

(1) The well-inspired Frinrs-Miçons waited for the new law on limagisiraturc to pursue Me"" Plllou. This poor fellow was in at the same time a source of initiative and movement; he had created, one knows it, the Vollaic Pantograpliie which, in application of the rule of the goldsmith's works, i)eruiet to give to very good luarclie of objects which once were very precious and thus puts the works of art at the reach of all. Order to him, the village "the circuit, where misery once was general, had become a small Saleute: lodgers for the workers, houses (school, retirement homes, hospital, everything had been improvised by MK' Pillon. The Jewish goldsmiths had vowed naluteiUrneul an imidacable hatred to this priest [dein of heart and devotion; they appointed a man whom MK' Pil- We had previously been accused of scalding and managed to cost damn this buffoon of an entire village.

492 THE JEWISH FRINGE

tion, to whom today would you not entrust your purse?
when the judgment will take place behind closed doors, without the control of the opinion-public nion?

At that time, accusations of indecent exposure will be more numerous than ever. Women will be the most formidable instruments of the social Revolution – as well as other women are today its most formidable adversaries. saries. You know that woman is the best human being, or the worst human being. Their mind is like hi-swift washer that can fly highest in the sky – and the lower towards the mud!!!

What will it be like when the scales of Justice become a ba-grocer's spear, where dishonor will be sold for money, like salt and pepper?

God is replaced by the attorney general vis-à-vis the crowds.
What will it be like when the Attorney General is the elected official and the instrument of the lowest passions?

It should not be believed that at that time ordinary citizens will be able to emerge from political struggles. It would be madness to believe it. No one will be able to watch from their window what is happening in the street – like on a Mardi Gras day. The streams from the street will go up into the houses I

We can understand the determination that the Freemason put into Jewish society to behead the judiciary. The old magis-treaties were for the Jews, even of a relatively superior, a perpetual subject of astonishment; they had in front of this voluntary poverty the same impression of stood before these men who rendered justice for nothing, in the impartiality of their conscience, when they could have gained so much by selling it.

Isaac Pereire often recounted, as one of the surprises of his life, the vile that he had made to a first president that he laughed obliged to see for a trial of an importance considerable. The financial richness had been harnessed, he had returned to the magistrate.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 493

– Mr. X?

– On the fifth floor, the door on the right.
Deeply surprised, absolutely breathless, Pereire had climbed the five floors and he had found, in the mahogany the more banal, an eminent man who had also shown himself to the current that his visitor of financial matters.

Pereire, who, as a Portuguese Jew, was accessible to certain high feelings that German Jews will never have, was left struck by the simple granite love of this poor man who, devoted to the highest social functions, besides that of priest, lived on the fifth floor, while deciding on lawsuits involving millions. Lord of Armainvilliers, the happy plutocrat had felt that day that there was something above money.

It is obvious that a magistrate of this caliber would not have ever consented, like Ilumbert, to make the success of the operations of the Cosmopolitan Jewish Bank, to be stopped the directors of the General Union the day before the meeting of a shareholders' meeting that could save everything.

The Jews used all means to achieve to get rid of these magistrates who were bothering them.

At the time of the vote on the law in the Senate, there were unheard of facts. The Freemasons went to steal ballots in the desks of their colleagues, and placed them in their name. At the meeting of Monday, July 30, 1883, Mr. Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire comes to declare that he had no Mr. Martel gave the mandate to vote against Article 15, and that a The Senate allowed itself to put a confounded figure in the ballot box. Mr. Koidi'ol in the meinc dccl;iral.iou for Mr. Diciidé-

Defly. There is, as Mr. Buffet notes, a fake in public writing. What does it matter! The Freemasons of Foixton sign to Humbert; of the Union Chain which presided over this day there, and this one, who sniggers when you speak in front of him of conscience or honesty, cynically asserts that the vote is regular. The Roman Senate of the last times hardly offers a more abject spectacle (1).

(1) It was the Jew Millaud, as we know, who evaded the vote by stealing for the Jew Naquet who, has not yet given his resignation from deputy, could not validly take part in a vote in the National Assembly. Millaud hoped, thanks to this trick of Scapin, to be notified from the outset first president at the court of London in place of the upright president Millevoix, but at the last moment Marlin-Fcuillée the 11th felt his heart failed him and he shrank from such a choice.

Note that the indelicacy of this Jew who files a fraudulent theft in such an important matter is Llanice by none of the men of his own. The incorruptible Brisson liii-ue: no does not seem to find this bad. What could be more instructive than this passage from minutes at the time when the President of the House announces Naquet's resignation.

UJ. Jolibois. – It's only today, if you accept the resignation of Mr. Naquet, that Mr. Naquet will have ceased to be a deputy. So I'm going to claim that there is a so-called senator who stole in the Senate, not having the right to do so. (Applause from the right. – Noise)L

Mr. President. – In any case, the House – and the president only [icul speak about what happens in the House – is seized regularity of the resignation of Mr. Nucpiet.

Isn't this (/in all your thoughts) fabulous?

The Republic, moreover, has introduced into parliamentary customs – to silence the habits of the carpet-francs. We steal the ballots, we make false, we counterfeit the. ^ ocntnres, without the pre.-iiienl, <pje it is Brisson, Flopiet or Le Uoyer thought of intervening. Mr. Lagiicrre, in the session of 29 December 1888, which describes as "legal fraud" the vote of Mr. Fiaiiiconia; Mr. Baoul Daval declares that certain flights are couatiluent "forgeries in writing [public passiblos of the court li'as-ises;" the Count of the Eagle notes that the Chamber is "a cavern of brigands. » Poor France J played, the Christian magistrates were replaced by Jews like the Béer, the Alphanderry, the Eliacin Naquet, the Léons, the Blochs, the Katzs, the Pontremols, the Rossiifelds, the Anspachs, the Sommers, the Dalmberts, the Durands, etc., etc.

Imagine a Christian arriving in front of one of these Jews! What satisfaction this man will feel in being able to apply his code to him! What evil smile will illuminate his face when he can ruin an unfortunate goy, in practicing the piecepts given by Rahbi Ishmael in the Talmud to the tractate Baba-Kamina, chapter 11 Gozel (the thief) :

"If a Christian and an Israelite come before you to a dispute, if you can make the Israelite win his case according to the Jewish law, do it, and say to the Christian: This is our legislation; or Link, following the law of the Christian, make win the Israelite and say to the Christian: Such is your legislation. If, on the contrary, you cannot make Israel win-lite in one way or another, we will use against the Christian of tricks and frauds (1). »

(1) The Review of Jewish Studies which reproduces these quotes from the Talmud recognizes itself that the translation of these fragments of the Ghemara^G Bahyloae '(is exact, precise, very scientific and the sense of p:issage in general well understood.

Abbot Clnl)aiily (reads on this subject that now that the magistracy has become Jewish, "Catholics will have to be careful to have no lawsuit with the Jews or with their proselytes, Freemasons." That's advice worth its weight in gold.

Some facts demonstrate the hatred that animates these magi-Jewish treaties against Christ and those who worship him. In August 1885, A young man breaks a cross. In front of the Corbeil court, the unfortunate man answers "boldly," it is the Lantern who speaks,

496 JEWISH FRANCE

What this judiciary is, daily scandals arise are responsible for teaching us. The magistrates live with it the accused, they have the same mistresses, they drink with them those they will have to pursue or judge. We hear in the courts of dialogues like this one which is genuine-exquisitely and which many newspapers have reproduced. The scene takes place in June 1884, in front of the as-located in Aude, where the accused, Mr. Guibal, was sentenced to death for the murder of a girl, Marie Coquillière. The

I arrived in Perpignan on September 1st.

I went to see my niece, who was the mistress of the substitute teacher.
public prosecutor.

I had dinner with her, one of her friends, -- who was none other than Marie Cerbère, -- Mr. Substitute and Mr. Public Prosecutor
blique.

Afterwards, we all went together to watch the races.
of bulls.

I wanted to leave, but these gentlemen insisted on making me stay, and we were at the Alcazar.

Mr. President Roussel. -- You have a very honorable family-beast!

One of your nieces lives with the public prosecutor, a other with the Perpignan substitute.

-- Yes, sir, the accused replied proudly.

that he did this because he does not like crosses. Substitute Cahen takes charge of his defense: "If it were," he says verbatim, "an object of art, a valuable painting, I would demand a severe condemnation, but a cross!.. » The president, Mr. Birague d'Apreniout, who over-lived, I am how, to the purification, recalls, in some words indignant, this Jew with modesty; the substitute, sure to be happy; by his leaders, TL^plies insolently and denounces the president to the. Lan ter ne, who covers the magistrate with insults and Cuheu with Ūeurs,

JEWISH THOUGHT 497

The (lehafs of the Gard Assize Court, in May 1885, we have revealed the crimes of Dr. Vij^ouroux, the Fai-angel sister of Laugogne, an alleged victim of the 2
December, who had been appointed justice of the peace for this fact:
This old satyr defiles his niece Pliilomene, in the presence of his wife, and every year he puts a little child's corpse from his works in a suitcase. Then, equipped with his di-doctor's degree and arguing his functions as a judge of peace, he will make the declaration at any town hall in hiding behind professional secrecy and claiming-as he found the body in the wagon. One last line of audacity loses him, he calmly brings a new pe-small corpse at a town hall where he had already made a statement analogous, he is arrested; he dies in prison and the niece alone

The Guillot affair showed us what provincial theft is. in our Republic. The Vigouroux affair, like a window suddenly opened onto a brothel which would be in at the same time a cemetery, shows us what de-provincial bauche whose followers are all protected by the Freemasonic secret (1).

As First President of the Court of Appeal, we have

(1) A jiigpmont returned to Saône-et-Loire, in August 1884, show how much all the antotilés are in collusion for the bad. The sub-prefect of Ghâteau-Cliiuon, Mr. Desvoisins, Mr. du Re-fuse, tax collector, and Mr. Paris, land collector, had fired shots at a private chapel; the door had been riddled with bullets. To get to the party, these three well-matched officials were sentenced to one franc of damages moges-inlérêts.

It will be hard to believe what I am saying, nothing could be more accurate. This case, the result of which is mentioned in the Flyaro of August 29, 1884, is recounted throughout by the newspaper i'Autunois.

H 28.

498 JEWISH FRANCE

Mr. Périvier, who spends his life with the Dreyfus of guano whose trial he is called upon to judge and who says in full Audience: "In our time, what has not posed a rabbit ?))

As advisors, also at the Court of Appeal, we we have Margue. I think the need is not felt to connect me on this side.

On a cleaner, but still cheerful note, Mr. An-Drieux told the story of a cousin of Mr. Martin-Feuillée, Mr. Martin-Sarzeaud who, appointed judge at the tribunal de la Seine, had the idea to increase these profits from running a brasserie in the evenings on rue Royale (1). He got confused in his duties, he shouted: "five years from prison!" to someone who demanded a moos, and after the substitute's conclusions, he shouted: "a bock to the ace! without a false collar!

The brewery not having succeeded, Martin-Feuillée made a name-his relative, advisor to the court of Alexandria, to the app-points of 48,000 francs.

A whole volume would not suffice to enumerate the facts of this nature. True to my system, I take these because they belong to the common domain, that it is impossible to dispute them. Who among us would not have to cite even more revolting and surprising stories? In a department of Brittany, which would be easy for me to designate a notary who had stolen the funds deposited in his eluded and ruined countless unfortunates, was named justice of the peace for electoral services. He had the audacity to return to the midst of his victims and the representative of

(1) La Lifjne, 10 June 1883.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 49i)

the RCPIILiCnine justice could only escape by fleeing those who wanted to lynch him.

This is yet another very curious magistrate figure that the one that Figaro (1) presents to us in the person of Mr. Glerget-Allemand, President of the Civil Court of Màcon and particularly protected by Mr. Martin-Feuillée.

His appearance was rough, his manner surly; his language all-hard days had given him the picturesque nickname of "Gueule-of Steel," He did not take a softer tone towards his subordinates-Qés that by inviting himself to dinner at their house - what he called modest-to graze.

This amiable man died in July 1885 and a judge of the new layers, named Martin, in the speech he delivered on this tomb, offered the deceased in example to the populations as the model for all civic virtues. Alas! as for Guillot the pain does not soon turned into general astonishment.

It was then learned, in fact, that this magistrate had exploited the country on the largest scale. Devoid of any resources other than his salary, which he usually had paid in advance, he had put to contribution and as in a regulated cut number of people and in particular the ministerial officers who were under his control dance. Notaries, attorneys, bailiffs, and children were victims of his maneuvers and its subtractions.

This is how he proceeded. He went to a notary, and, after having spoken of its properties ravaged by phylloxera - pro-properties that existed only in his imagination - he alleged a temporary financial embarrassment and asked to borrow 3,000 fr. (>"was the rate for notaries. The notary, fearing

(1) Figaro, August 1886.

500 JEWISH FRANCE

Fifteen days later, Mr. Clerget knocked on the door of another study, started his spiel again and ended with the request invariable of 3,000 fr. The notary, happy to oblige the president, and believing to be the only one to be "honored" by this trust, will- was holding the three thousand dollar bills.

Six notaries from Màcon were thus taken. One of them even received twice the president's visit. At 3,000 fr. per visit, cost: 6,000 fr. These so-called loans were made by notes with interest, but the honest president was no more concerned with interests than with the remains. One of the notaries, a victim of this borrower, wrote him a day to claim payment of interest. He did not receive any answer. Only, some time later, he learned that he was committed by the president to a liquidation on which he does not comprehend was not: "Ah! there are my interests!" he cried.

It is fair to say that President Clerget was very broad in terms of taxes. He used to say that you had to take money where there was some. – The notaries of Màcon took it well seen.

The attorneys and bailiffs were no more spared. to suppliers, they will wait a long time for payment of their notes. A wine merchant from Màcon is mentioned to whom Mr. Clerget – German owes 800 francs of supplies and 100 francs of ar- lent people. – This merchant had a rather joking remark: "That surprised me, he said, he always found my wine excellent. » Par- blue! at that price!

Beyne, public prosecutor in Mont-de-Marsan, forced a young girl, Noémie Pesquidoux, to give herself up him, in promising him impunity for a minor offense of which she is accused, threatening her with all the severity of the law if she refuses his dishonest proposals. The young woman daughter, who became pregnant through the works of this virtuous magistrate, is obliged to summon him to obtain maintenance for his child. Beyne has the bailiff Souques prosecuted, who took the liberty of summoning him. Finally, the affair excites a such a scandal that we decide to revoke this strange cha-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 501

moral pawn who was acquitted before the Court of Appeal for slanderous denunciation.

All of Paris resounded with the scandalous quarrels of Mr. Edouard Laferrière with one of his former mistresses—braids. The State Councilor (1) had seduced a young girl, then abandoned her to marry richly. These are there the morals of his peers and one should not be surprised this. Usually, however, the most debauched themselves—themselves liquidate these situations properly. This Franc-Mason, zealous member of the Masonic Revival lodge of Boulogne-sur-Mer, found nothing simpler than to strip the one he had just left and the filigree sequestrations—to prevent him from protesting.

The victim, Ms. Niemowska, herself recounted these facts in the complaint she sent to the prosecutor of the Public.

Mr. Prosecutor,

Thursday, October 9, seven o'clock in the morning, the house where I live was surrounded by the police.

Repeated punches on my door and knocks from violent, uninterrupted stamps forced my maid to ask, at such an early hour, who was there.

- We come from the concierge.
- The concierge does not send a messenger.
- Open up, we want to speak to your mistress.
- She's not there.
- The concierge told us he saw her come home last night,
- Madam is not receiving. Who are you? Your name?

(1)Mr. Laferrière has since been appointed Vice-President of the Council of State.

S02 JEWISH FRANCE

- Durand.
- Don't know Durand and don't open. If you take the clerk—police officer, push in. Madam has no business with the commissioner—sary.

From there, repeated punches on my door and knocks with a bell to break it.

I got up because I was sick and went to bed.

—Who dares to make such a racket in my house?

— Open up, we have to talk to you.

— I don't receive this morning.

— I am the police commissioner.

— I don't open, and nothing proves to me that you are sir the police commissioner.

The hullabaloo continues. A discussion at the door between the so-saying police commissioner and the concierge.

Words of the said commissioner, in a low voice, to the concierge:

— Call the maid, say it's you, the concierge, that rous ôles f.cul^ that she opens.

Voice of the concierge:

— Anioinette, open up, I'm alone, I want to speak to your mistress. Is she stubborn in not wanting to open, her mistress is afraid.

Complete silence from me and my maid.

Resumption of punching the door and ringing the bell to break it.

Commissioner's voice:

— This lady is stubborn, I am more so than she is, I will wait, Should I stay until five o'clock in the evening? Too bad if I do soandalc, it's not my fault, and he starts it again tumultuous hullabaloo.

A neighboring midwife, living on the same landing, of-ask what was happening:

— It's the police commissioner who wants to be opened, re-the concierge lays, and madame doesn't want to.

— Take her by starvation, she will be forced to open for send for food. A chair was placed on the said commis-saire, who replied that, in his profession, he was used to stand.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 503

A novivcau, f3c punches redoubled (5s, stamp blows and this, until eleven thirty.

– Decidedly, it won't be for today. (Pa-textual roles of Mr. Commissioner.)

Two individuals with royal faces were standing on the sidewalk opposed at my house and pointed at my windows with their hands.

The whole street was in a frenzy; the shopkeepers, merchants of wines, laundresses, upholsterers stayed all day in observation, aiming at my windows. All tenants of my house were at their door: the scandal was public.

These two individuals remained on guard until four o'clock. and a half, as well as a uniformed officer, and throughout the daytime.

The man who took a false name and called himself Durand, was Clément, whom we find at every step in black story and who answers: present! every time he there is a home to violate, a safe allegation to commit-three, an ilicgalile to accomplish.

Admit that our poor expellees can have something joy when they contemplate the infamous assembly that for-the three men who were most actively involved involved in the execution of the decrees. Cazot, the man of the law, is being sued by shareholders after the bankruptcy of the Alais-au-Uhône Company, and forced to resign of President of the Court of Cassation. Laferricre, the representing jurisprudence, breaks down the doors of his former companion to regain possession of letters compromised. Clement, the judicial magistrate, half Lebel and half Lecoq, wear the tricolor scarf to go liquidate the loves of Iuat's advisers.

Under such conditions, we understand ^ desperate mission of this priest of Seine-et-Marne who, pursued by the Jewish band, is seized with terror and kills. You must read the story of this agony in the Lantente (number of dinnanche 18 November 1883). Nothing is more tragic. The story has also been brought together more late in the brochure. The unfortunate man, returned home peacefully and content at his presbytery after a day of good the slander that has been printed against him and he cries out:

504 JEWISH FRANCE

"I am lost (1) I"

The storm then bursts under the skull of the priest of village, he traces on paper a last protest of innocence: I am innocent, I die a victim! y> writes—he; then he slows down to suffocate, he lights a small stove of charcoal, but death does not come; so he wants protest again and the brain already filled with mor— vapors such, he scribbles some incomprehensible words on this paper that was found the next day, says the Lantern^ "stained, soiled, blackened *^onime if one had tried to draw on it characters with the aid of a finger dipped in ashes. He has the strength to drag himself to the attic and in the morning we

(1) It is useless, I believe, to demonstrate at length the innocence of the poor priest who never made anyone doubt then^uà
At the time of the crime, he was six kilometers from W.

The Jews have given only two proofs of this cnlpahilile. Here is the first: Limit of Thursday, November 22, 1SS3, .S frinary year 90, third column: This day/at mêtne, at Ferreux, the curt^ vtnl—ii, according to rusog'f,dii e /es]irièressur the cvrpy of Duban? N< n... Even uiiméio, fourth column. The vehicles of Duban arrived on the 5th, placed in the evening, at Cfifinipcf'wtz, coiurnnne from where de'pehd the cliàtrau of Ferreux To add insult to injury and horror, next to the obedient Piu/fîl, curc of C/iarnpceneiz of/icinit... le cwé Frtirot. Uosyassin Oiuil come due î the prayers <U: i Eyl<s€ on the body of SU vicinne!

Quainl 1 "priest does not say it is projive who is conpal.l^". quanA tt officiates it'— .-t one more i-rinnj. Kionii"zv..u< therefore Mi,';in [ikmc^jd"; caaipa;^iie tr.iqi.é I ct'lli— faijx. ui is.— .ki find something hanging. We believe first, says the Jewish newspaper, that it is an old cassock, but soon we notices that in this old cassock there is a corpse—vre (1).

JEWISH PERSECUTION 505

Suicide is undoubtedly the crime of crimes since it is the only one that cannot be repented of; it is the crime of Judas. But, as one can guess, from the human point of view, the panic that takes hold of these humble people when they feel that The pack is upon them! Who can they turn to? There was a party in Ferrières that week; can you imagine the poor man priest asking for assistance against the Jews of La Lanterne some guest rushing joyfully to the hunting rendezvous? "The Jews, my dear abbot, but they are delightful people,

(1) You should also look at the November 25 issue of the Illustrated font published weekly by Lanterne^ la Semaine comic by Coll Toc with this subtitle: The Assassin Priest or Virtue rewarded. We see the priest sitting in front of a well-served table in face of a woman in a cheerful attitude, then God the father, at-pulling the priest towards him; a larger drawing represents the priest hanged and sticking out his tongue; at the dead man's feet dragging on the floor, there is a copy of the Lantern, It is indeed very comical. I have two copies of this sheet, which does honor to Eugène Mayer; I have one at the disposal of Bedarrides and other impudent people who often emancipate themselves by speaking of "poor Israel, so good, so tolerant."

Let us also note, among the ignoble imaginations which characterize, indeed a time, the cavalcade organized in the village of Sainlines, in March 1884, with the authorization of Mr. de Selves, prefect of the Oise. On floats decorated with foliage, tillers were installed. Other tanks served as advertising cars for a serial novel of the French Republic. In a cart closed by a curtain that we would read for two cents we had placed a goat and a female dog who were supposed to represent the unfortunate priest and the woman whom slander attributed to him as his mistress. All that The villages in the suburbs of Paris contain disreputable people followed on horseback or on foot, drunk from the morning, shouting refrains which would have terrified the Marquis de Sade.

IX 29

S06 JEWISH FRANCE

the baron has magnificent woods... This good friend I I will blame him all my life for having made him wait for a let it run.

The guests must have been happy. There was certainly.
double fanfare, one for deer hunting, one for manhunt. Our elegant sportswomen, our pretty Christian women from the suburb, smiling with enamored eyes at the somewhat heavy graces and highly episodic jokes-
The handsome Maurice Ephrussi, the son of the merchant of Odessa apples, have hardly thought, I am sure, about the old cassock that hung there in a presbytery of village and who was swinging on the stiffened limbs of a priest of Jesus Christ.

One cannot imagine the impudence of the slanderers inventions that the Jews pile up on everything that touches the Church.

figures of the English Catholic episcopate?

Here is what the Israeli Archives imagined about him
'official journal of French Judaism, usually more circumspect than the Lantern, less noisy in its hatred^

According to them, Mr. Howard is a Jew from Prague.

Mr. Howard, they claim, was not born into the Catholic Church.
lique; it is not the holy water poured on his forehead which wiped immortality to his soul, but these are the waters of the sea Red through which his ancestors passed, it is the knife of Mohel (peritomist). This operation was performed a quarter of a year ago.
forty years, on the body of the future Monsignor, in the city of Prague, and when the father addressed, during the ceremony of the circumcision, the prayers in use, he hardly suspected the future greatness of his son! Let us add, to be honest, that the old Austerlitz – this is the real name of the Archbishop of Saint–

JEWISH PERSECUTION 507

Peter – had not at all wished for this kind of elevation for his son, because he was sincerely attached to the religion of his fathers, and the tiara itself would not have made him a perjurer of his faith. The Monsi-Gnor, his son, was brought up in the sound traditions of religion Jewish, and it is more than likely that before the age of fifteen he had never set foot in a church.

The dispositions of the young Auslerlitz would have attracted on him the attention of a rabbi from Prague, Mr. Teweles, who would have started his education and given him– some– some notions of music. On the death of his father, the young man was forced to give lessons in how to live and well–
Early on he entered the Prague theatre as a violinist.

It was there, the Archives continue, that the grace in the form of a young... English lady on whom beauty exceptional performance of the young virtuoso had produced a profound im-pressure. Howard moved from the theater to the wealthy Englishwoman's hotel and The next day, he was able to announce to the parents of his students that now he no longer needed to run for the stamp. In 1852, he received an invitation to come to England and accepted.

We have no authentic details of his stay in this country; we only know that the doors of the salons more aristocratic people of London and Dublin were largely opened and that it was in England that he converted to Christia-nism to devote himself to an ecclesiastical career. He changed at this occasion his name of Austerlitz against that of Howard. The arch-Bishop Manning honored him with his special favor and he became

In the year 1860, he was presented to the Pope as a member of an English Catholic deputation. Pius IX, at whose house the sense of beauty is very developed, retained the young priest and immediately granted him the title of "Cameriere délia sua santita, » distinction which at the same time earned Ini the title of Monsignor. In order to ensure the Pope's new chamberlain an income suitable, the ladies of the English aristocracy clubbed together for a sum of 30,000 pounds sterling which they gave him as a gift.

508 JEWISH FRANCE

In Rome, as in London and Dublin, the most aristocratic salons cratiques eagerly open their doors to the new cameriere, who enjoys the special favor of the princely families—Barberini and Borghè, the richest and most influential of Rome. Even today, Howard has lost none of his kindness, but he no longer needs to resort to it; the prelate finds himself in a position where he can do without a protector. The red hat seems assured to him: we do not know if His Eminence still thinks about the sad days she spent in the Ghetto Prague, near the old Rabbi Teweles, who believed he was making a torch in Israel, and if he were not happier than today despite all its greatness (1).

There is not a single word that is exact, it is necessary to say, in this whole story. No Englishman is unaware of the origins of M[^]*" Howard, who is a cousin of the Duke of Norfolk and whose place of birth is mentioned in the list of prelates of the Roman Court.

Edoardo Howard, nato in Hainton, diocese of Nottingham, 13 febbraio 1829, délia sm di Pio IX creato and pubblicato addi 12 March 1877, of the title of the SS. Giovanni and Paolo, Arciprete délia Patriarchal Basilica Vaticana, Prefetto délia S. Gongregazione délia R. Fabbrica di IS. Pietro.

Educated at the Catholic college in Oscott, young Howard entered the army as an officer in the guards and, in this quality, he led a platoon at Welling's funeral—your in September 1852. Highly appreciated in the high English society, he obeys an irresistible vocation and he went, in 4853, to receive orders in Rome.

Pius IX had given the purple to Me Howard; Leo XIII seems to have obeyed one of those noble thoughts, which are familiar, choosing him as the cardinal in the canonization process of Joan of Arc, as if, de- sent by an Englishman who had been a soldier, the honors granted to the heroine should have had a character of repair.

(1) Archives israélites, volume 36 (number of August 1875).

What does it matter to the Jews! The effect is always produced and the story of a violinist, who converts out of interest and maintained by English women, will be taken up in some- some years and told to the tribune by some Paul Bert.

Seeing the holder of an already important cure, as Frairot, don't even try to fight, we can guess what must weigh our congregational insulators, entangled in their dress, ill at Taise to respond to accusations that very often they do not understand. Even before appear in court, they have mud up to chin.

I have never encountered anything so complete in this kind of insults lavished on a certain proud Numasius, who was acquitted almost without debate by the jury of course, because the accusations against him do not were based on absolutely nothing. Brother Halp, Brother Bazilien and Brother Meillier were also acquitted. also literally covered in opprobrium. The Freemason- Jewish society finds a certain profit there; as soon as it wants establish a secular school in a country where the brothers are loved, she sends the order to her magistrates to mount the af- to do. If the innocent is condemned it is all profit; if manages to get out of this bad situation, he has nonetheless been insulted, vilified, outraged for six weeks, and You are free to announce the result in one line in the newspaper that defamed in three columns.

510 JEWISH FRANCE

Sometimes the incident gets serious. Two Jews fight on the body of a priest and blame each other for to have stolen a slander from a big report. In the month of February 1884, the Jew Eugène Mayer accuses the Jew Paul Strauss for having unduly appropriated his literature to take it to the Toulouse Dispatch. – It is not literature, replies Strauss, besides, I work for a good cause, for a good cause everything is permitted.

Along the way, we learn that this Paul Strauss, oppor- overzealous Tunisian, and currently a municipal councilor, has was sentenced, in 1879, to three years of public works for in passing, but it must be said that the revelation is not surprising no one in this world.

How could the men who govern have any scruple towards Catholics, whom they pursue with a implacable hatred, when they do not hesitate to assassinate those who, sharing some of their doctrines, have preserved a background of honesty and find their morals bad and their reprehensible methods?

The death of the unfortunate Saint-Elme is certainly one of the most incredible pages in the history of this time. The unfortunate man belonged to an opinion which is not the mine and I will not be accused of obeying party spirit speaking of him; but this execution of a writer by henchmen, in the middle of the 19th century, is made to excite the indignation of all.

Reducer of an advanced log, the Sampiero, Saint-Elme had fought with infinite discouragement opportunism which, in Corsica, had ended up establishing itself by relying on these greedy and corrupt beings that always contain a population even fundamentally honest and loyal like that of Corsica. He had spoken out against the conduct of the prefect Trémontels who, according to his expression: "had made pre-function a brothel and a branch of the Bondy forest.

THE JOHN'S PERSECUTION

Emmanuel Arène saw his candidacy lost and tried to take on the attitude of a captain ready to cross from Paris the mountains and the plains to punish the insolent who allowed to walk in his shadow; he declared as Cyrano de Bergerac's castle, what he was going to do hang the four elements and send to defend the genre human to be alive in three days."

Saint Elmo, who had been an officer, answered calmly to this braggart that he was willing to do half the chemin and that he would come to Marseille.

Afraid, he threw himself into Veil Picard's arms and do Waldeck-Rousseau. The secret funds were put to contribute and a few days later an assassination attempt took place on the dreaded writer, the assassins were police officers disguised as bourgeois. Saint-Elme, as soon as he recovered from his injuries, tried to ask for an explanation to the prefect (1) who held his meetings at the Café Solferino and

(1) This prefect, who pompously called himself de Trémontels, was simply called André. Before being prefect of Corsica, he had been prefect of Aveyron and it seems that in this position he had allegedly committed numerous embezzlements using fictitious mandates. At least that is what the official who succeeded him in Aveyron, Mr. Démangeât, in a letter addressed to the New Pressed and published by her on November 12, 1884: "I refused many times. repeated, says M-Demanj^eat, and despite numerous letters of report- pel of Mr. Leguay, (I 3cler of departmental affairs, who con- the case was born, to justify unjustifiable accounts."

It is true that in the discussion of an interpellation which took place

51 '2 JEWISH FRANCE

had set up his office there. The prefect had him knocked out blows with an iron bar by the prefecture caretaker with help by the recovery master. To be sure that the attack would succeed, the public prosecutor had defended this man threatened from all sides for having weapons on him and, whenever he knew he was going to be attacked he did so- knows how to search and disarm so that he cannot defend himself. I The journalist's trial, long delayed by his condition of illness, was deeply moving. He was transported in court on a stretcher, dying. Near him stood the poor pregnant woman who had wanted to accompany her husband and who was wiping the sweat with a handkerchief already icy water running from his forehead.

So we saw this thing that we had never seen before France, while the assassins, sure of impunity, strutting around the room was a horrible scoundrel, the lawyer general- ral Bissaud insulting, mocking, this man who was grumbling already, affirming that the assassins had acted well and that Saint-Elme ((played the comedy.))

From the crowd came an indignant protest as Bissaud sat down, sniggering. Saint-Elme made an effort to answer this infamous, he could not succeed. Some hours later he was dead.

in the House, on November 10, 1884, concerning the revocation of the same Mr. Démangeât as prison inspector, Mr. Asmodée JLaroze, Undersecretary of State for the Interior, cast doubt on the probity of the latter, who was reinstated in the administration under Brisson ministry.

WaUleck-Rousseau had solemnly declared to the House that he had ordered Mr. de Trémontels to bring a case before the jury to clear his name completely. Tremontels feared revelations. overwhelming and the matter remained there.

JEWISH PERSECUTION M 3

These monstrous facts are in everyone's memory. discussion in the House of the interpellation of the extreme left on Corsican affairs threw on our public morals—ques a blinding light. Assassination by bravi paid by the prefect (1), electoral fraud, corruption of all kinds of relief distributed for the loss of livestock which had never existed, everything was there. Mr. de Douville-Maillefeu, seeing this tide of rising towards the government mud, seems to have experienced that admiration that one feels before certain unleashings of the sea and cried out with a kind of transport: that Let's say everything! Let the shame flow to the brim!"

The House did not even have a platonic censure for the Trémontels and the Bissauds and voted for the pure agenda and simple.

Nothing was as singular as the attitude of Brisson the incor—breakable. Whenever one tries to denounce to the tri—some of these prevarications of ministers or of public men who are obvious without being able to prove materially, he cries: "Give proof 1" This time there was irrefutable testimony from the concus—

(1) We do not have the island, Mr. deMultedo, general councilor, told me, of what opportunism has done to Corsica in a few years. Where has returned to the wild and the law no longer exists for those who do not belong to the dominant band. On January 25, 1885, a worker, Dominique Antoine Urbain, was struck five times knife in the heart area. The one who hit him, a man named Franchini, who has already played a role in the Saint-Étienne affair, is acquitted by the Ajaccio court, and it is the victim who is condemned to the costs. Everyone takes justice into their own hands; the number of murderers who took refuge in the maquis, which had fallen to "60 at the end of Troipire, is now over 1,200.

II 29.

and Peraldi. The president abruptly changed his rifle shoulder and declared to all those who wanted to treat this question "that the interpellations from colleague to colleague were defended."

However, there was no doubt. The former head of the accounting of the Morelli company, Mr. Semeri goes, had claimed that Messrs. Arène and Peraldi received a subsidy monthly for the benefits they had obtained at the Company, thanks to their position as deputies. According to him, the sheet one hundred and five of the copy of letters from the Company contained a letter thus conceived.

Folio 105. xMarseille, August 24, 1883.

Mr. Peraldi,
deputy of Corsica,

rue de Monsigny, in Paris,

We have the honor to send you herewith, in a re-ordered, the sum of 750 fr. in seven banknotes of 100 francs and one of 50 francs, the amount of your monthly salary of August.

Please, etc. Signed: Semeriva (2).

Mr. Semeriva further maintained that the books of the Company bore, on the date of December 14, 1884, the following mention:

Indemnity to Peraldi, month of November 1933, seven hundred

Ci) This Emmanuel Arène, who willingly passes himself off as a descendant of Arena, is the son of a Jewish hardware merchant from Marseille who came to settle in Ajaccio.

(2) See on this subject, outside the Official Journal of June 6 and 8 1884, the Corsican Question, by Mr. Ernest Judet, and the reprint of the newspaper Samviei o of which Saint-Elme was the editor-in-chief.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 515

fifty francs. Compensation at Arène, month of November 1883, one thousand francs.

Peraldi defended himself weakly and as an excuse contented himself with saying that he was a notary, which struck one with astonishment—ment people who could not understand what the ment. If he were honest he had, to be exonerated immediately-immediately, than to ask a court of honor to to check whether the sheets bore the note in question.

He took care not to do so and the Republican Union group continued to warm up this young concussionist in his breast. Mr. Ranc who, at the time of the Bolland affair, had fought hard, under the pretext that the friends of Gambetta could not be suspected, did not give sign of life. He too was very simple, however to go and leaf through the Company's books.

Freemasonry is not satisfied yet and it dream of perfecting the mechanism of persecution.
As Mr. Guillot has demonstrated in a work whose sincerity does honor to this investigating judge (1), the new
The new code of criminal procedure removes any recourse to citizen victim of arbitrariness.

There is here, once again, a real system, a form of government that will remain in history. Instead of rely on people of violence and force, as did Terror, the current regime relies exclusively on the people of cunning, deceit and indelicacy; he groups them into one in the manner of a union, it gives them a certain credit on the

(1) Principles of the new code of criminal procedure, by
M. Guillotjjudge of iusLruclion.

516 THE JEWISH FRINGE

law and holds them by the threat of closing this credit; he concedes a kind of impunity subject to certain conditions of devotion, he grants two or three crimes to commit
as you choose, like you would a tobacconist's.

Which neither Ignotus, nor Mr. Guillot, nor anyone else have indicated those who dealt with the persecution carried out by the Freemasonic magistracy, it is the psychological state of all these persecuted people, great and small, who renders their tortures a thousand times more atrocious than they would be for us and at the same time almost puts them out of action defend. There is again a kind of confirmation of the accuracy of Taine's words, which seem so simple: "the Pievo-lution is a return to the state of nature. » The misfortune of these honest persecuted people is to remain civilized, to believe that we still live under the regime of laws, that the magistrates are real magistrates, that the police, the administration, the justice systems operate regularly. The accusation of which they

a normal situation.

I always remember a nice story that I was told told by Alexandre Dumas.

One day he meets a woman in a living room who, after having roasted the broom for twenty years, had ended up sneaking into the real world or something like it.

This woman treats Dumas and his work from top to bottom, she reproaches him for having only ever described environments unhealthy, of never having staged an honest women.

Dumas listened. No doubt if this reproach had been made to him addressed by some innocent young girl, he would have smiled this way of judging his work and would not have responded. If the one who spoke to him would have succumbed to the pull of the heart,

JEWISH PERSECUTION 517

if she had been the victim of one of these deep passions before which the being is so weak, the author of Demi-Monde would certainly have been silent again, because if the spirit is hard at he, the heart has tenderesses that the common people do not know.
This was not the case here. The one who spoke thus had been a prostitute, she had received money to deliver herself;
It was prostitution that paid for the hotel in which she lived, the horses that carried her to the Bois, the paintings master who furnished his home, the finery which adorned its elegant decrepitude.

She continued to talk about virtue, to brand the girls corrupt and corrupting writers.

Suddenly, Dumas fixed his sharp blue gaze on her, then hitting him vigorously on the stomach.

—Are you finished? he said simply.

A flood of tears came to the creature's eyes...

Are you finished? is a useful word. The most shameless among our Republican fiddling, our dishonored magistrates,
Our administrators, familiar with all the crimes, hesitate sometimes to directly attack a regular Parisian to only bother with what is honest; they fear this Are you finished? mocking, contemptuous, vengeful, who would remind to these impudent people all their past infamies.

respect social conventions, do not know how to say: .4s-Are you finished? Malesherbes didn't tell Fouquier-Tinville and It is one of the most horribly comic spectacles that can imagine that that of all these great Speakers-comments, of all these austere and venerable characters stooping to giving reasons to the miserable cutlery of blood that then filled the courtrooms.

Fallen into some trap, struck to the heart by

518 JEWISH FRANCE

some campaign organized against them, the victims of the Freemasons go to brood over their misfortune in a corner; the husband sometimes looks at his old companion, and both understood each other, they think of the same thing, to the misfortune of having lived too long, to the broken career, to the name that they naively imagine themselves dishonored (1).

What book to write about these intimate sufferings, about these dramas that happen in every city and almost in every village! This book, only one of us could have write it poignant, heartbreaking, sincere, as it should be in a word; it's Alphonse Daudet; he might write it.

What book more tempting for a generous soul? There is simple and humble people who are very moving to re-keep up with this formidable governing machine-mental set in motion by wicked mechanics.

What could be more impressive than the story of this poor man?
organist of the cathedral of Uzès, that all the newspapers have told (2)? It is a sort of advisor Krespel, one of these half-fantastic chapel masters like in a Hoffmann paints, he lives outside the real world in a musical dream, he smiles while walking to divine melodies that he hears singing within him. The lessons he has in town and in a convent provide the necessary for this sweet chimerathat which lives on little. Christmas is approaching and he counts that day to play a piece that will be worthy of the masters immortals of Paesiello and Palestrina. "You will listen this," he said, and his good face lit up and radiated.

(1) See the death of Mr. Maîltrejean, an old magistrate, struck by Marlin-Feuillée, seized by a black melancholy and who committed suicide month of February 1883.

(2) February 1883.

The Freemasons of the city, who meet in a small establishment like the one Concourt described in the girl Elisa, have sworn to lose this naive and ingenuous man. The investigating judge already sees himself as Keeper of the Seals if he can to convict this innocent man. The musician is arrested under a heinous accusation.

We achieve a first success. The superior of the state-Saint-Maur building falls dead when we come to him tell what is being prepared. How can such things be-Could they have happened? There is a material impossibility. A Sister is always present at music lessons attended by parents.

The prisoner nevertheless remains in solitary confinement for three months, struggling in vain against this horrible accusation. Three times the investigation is closed for lack of any basis-than to the imputations; three times Freemasonry does it resume. Finally the Assize Court acquits the unfortunate man musician against whom there is not a shred of evidence. "It doesn't matter," said one of the leaders of the affair, "we have it still prevented from playing his music on the ca-theatrical.

"The humble still hold on; we take them by the famine. At the bottom of the eleventh arrondissement, rue des Trois-Bornes, a poor family laments around the bed where one of his children is dying. There is no bread for the parents, nor medication for the child; we wait anxiously-sow the response to a request addressed to the office of charity... The answer is coming... The parents declared once they sent their eldest son to the Brothers' school, sends them a receipt of this declaration for any assistance ration.

Isn't this atrocious joke very Freemason-

5:20 JEWISH FRANCE

that? Don't you feel the sneering and harshness there? cold of the masters of the day, adventurers from all countries who share the money that some imbecile Catholics continue to pay to our charity offices?

What these offices are, a worker said in a-public meeting where he named one of the commissioners as being himself registered on the list of public assistance. Ignotus, recalling that out of two one hundred and forty administrators, one hundred and ninety had there were "wine merchants, launderers some of whom have their families registered with the office even paid for the cleaning with alms money (1).

The example we cited above is not isolated.
cynical joviality, the noisy joy of evil accomplished is a features of the current persecution. The great happiness of an inspector of public education, when he has before him him a nun, that is to say when he can be insolent with impunity, is to soil what is pure, to imagine a ambiguous question, to risk a word with double meaning which makes the brothers and friends scattered throughout the room.

– What is a libertine? asks an inspector a Sister.

– I don't have to answer this question that you don't address me only because of the clothes I wear.

(1) Figaro May 14, 1883.

There are always people who want to go too far. Guvillier, merchant of seeds in La Cliapelle, was one of this number; he paid his employees and even his tailor with vouchers from the welfare office; the scandal seemed to exceed the measure and in January 1886 it was sentenced by the 11th Chamber to eight months in prison.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 52f

The one who thus put this learned evil in its place had to cold blood; how many nuns, already trembling to be thus in spectacle, would have been dismantled î

In a speech to the Gers General Council, Mr. Paul de Cassagnac recounted some of the exploits of the inspector Carbasse who encouraged teachers to insult the Sisters.

A nun comes to the exam, her heart beats very strong, she is all frightened in front of this crowd, she feels that the words will stick in his throat. You who have a little soul you guess this state from here, I am sure.
It is in God alone that the poor girl hopes, he will give her the necessary strength, she kneels in a corner of the room, she joins her hands and whispers a little prayer.

A teacher saw this movement.

people of his kind, do you want me to give you Tabso-lulion? I'm Carme...

This joker from the stream was called Carme.

Carbasse, striking his knees with his hand, laughs at the tears when I saw the poor Sister turn pale, completely terrified, in front of those eyes fixed on her.

What acts of courage one would find among the people, in the provinces and even in Paris! The first to resist the atheist law, which independent, well-off people accept servilely, is a carpenter from Lavaur who, defended by Mr. Bellomayre, won his case before the commission school. In another corner of France, in Jarzé, a mothe dear telegraph postman, Baillou, who is suffering from an illness incurable, father of five children, refuses to send his daughters to the secular school. The awful Jabouille, the prefect of the department-ment, threatens to revoke it; the honest man stands firm

522 JEWISH FRANCE

and gives up his livelihood rather than allow corruption-to his children.

All these, however, fade before this valiant plebeian from Montaure (Eure), this mother of seven children children sentenced to twenty-two days in prison, under pretext of violation of the law, arrested by the police, in October 1883 and taken to Lou- prison viers (1).

This sentence was absolutely arbitrary. The young man boy of this unfortunate woman having, in the month of April 1883, reached the age of thirteen, one could not, without commit an illegal act, prosecute and convict the mother for not having sent his child during May at school.

The Louviers Public Prosecutor's Office was forced to recognize this evidence and the public prosecutor, seized with shame

(1) See this case, which proves the extent to which it is arbitrary.
arrived in the province, the issue of the Patriote de Normandie bearing the date of October 20, 1881, and the Religious Week of Evreux of the 3 November 1883. "We will not fail in our duty," said in term-mining the Religious Week, and we publish, so that they are 3praised in the pillory of public conscience, the names of the members of the Montaure school board and the justice of the peace of Pout-

"The members of the school board are the citizens: ;

"1. Boutry Césaire, mayor of Montaure and owner.

"2. Alépée Basile, former owner, former butcher, currently-ment weaver.

"3. Richard (Jean-Baptiste), son, weaver.

a 4. Martin (François), former assistant, owner and weaver,

"S. Deriberprey (Julien), deputy mayor, owner and weaver-rand, all domiciled in Montaure.

"Let us now remember the name of the justice of the peace of Pont-de the Ark that pronounced the condemnation.

c His name is Dussaux.

JEWISH PERSECUTION, 5^3

a little late, gave the order to release this poor woman. She was nevertheless past eleven days in prison among people without confession, treated as a criminal.

The Justice of the Peace of Pont-de-l'Arche, who had committed a real forfeiture, did not even receive a reprimand; he was on the contrary congratulated by the Keeper of the Seals, at least if we are to believe this wretch who loudly affirmed that This act of good pleasure would earn him advancement.
case it is still in operation.

If you want to see what equality before the law is,
Go to the Legislative Body. No one has bothered of this peasant woman who carried seven children in her womb and who was thrown into a dungeon in defiance of all rights.

She is now a Prussian woman, the wife of a Belgian.
convicted of theft, publicly practicing prostitution and giving his appointments in a furnished room run by the mother of her husband (1).

The representatives of France are taking care of this intereassuring creature for an entire session. Delattre withers to the podium the officers who dared to arrest this woman when she was picking up passersby. The whole gaucho naturally supports the speaker. A prostitute, a Prussian, a Belgian ex-convict, there is indeed in this mopolites. This mud clearly gives off this aroma that the Spullers, the Steegs, the Lockroys smell with delight.

(1) See on this subject the book by Mr. Macé, the Security Service, from which we have already borrowed more than once. The former head of the safety to have all the parts at the disposal of those who would like to be informed about Mr. Delatlre's client and Mr. Delatlre himself.

024 JEWISH FRENCHNESS

Down with the French woman, who wants to raise her children honestly children! honor to TAUemande who gives himself up to passers-by 1

Here is another moving victim: Lenoir, a coachman. You may have met him in Paris and, if you were In a hurry, the meeting was not conducive to you. The poor—A man, half mad, no longer remembered the address that gave them to travelers and sometimes left them on the way. The Freemasons had stolen his child, the mother had died of grief and he forgot to earn a living for come ten times a day to ask for news of his son to Mr. Lacointa (1). The former Advocate General at the Court of cassation, who so nobly resigned at the time decrees, had been touched by this great pain; he had become the counselor, the consoler, almost the friend of this proletarian. While the unfortunate man found, as all those who suffer, some relief in telling his story eternal story, the magistrate sent his maid to guard the cab to avoid the coachman getting a fine.

The matter was very simple. The child, sent by the way of iron, from Paris to Toulouse where he was to enter a state-religious education institution, had been addressed and circum-agreed, in the Narbonne station, by a Freemason, named Richard, who had put him in his wagon and had placed him in apprenticeship in Cette, with a confectioner of the name of Lavaille. There they had tried to corrupt this young intelligence by reading to the child every evening the im-world publications produced by the anti-cirical bookstore.

(1) See the eloquent and simple account of Mr. Lacoïuta, in the Corresponding on 23 February 1884. Under this title: Child Thieves, Mr. Léon Lavedan also published, in Le Figaro, a very detailed account of this kidnapping.

No doubt, one could not hope that justice would dare pursue a Freemason, but as soon as the facts had been reported to the public prosecutor by a man who had occupied the Mr. Lacointa's situation, could one refuse to render immediately to his family the victim of an attack if odious? Nothing was done about it. The head of the prosecution service was one of these men recruited by the Republic in the slums and who know that by putting themselves at the service of Jewish Freemasonry, they can get away with anything impunctually. The first representative who presented himself with a letter from the father was insulted and the torn letter was thrown at him in the face. The second representative was threatened with blows of iron bar. We knew the poor father and we speculated there above. A good soul provides him with the means to do the travel and bring back his child.

Lenoir brought a suit against Citizen Richard for embezzlement-miner's life. It was then that we saw as always the Jew appears behind the Freemason. Lisbon, the year former deputy, constituted himself Richard's protector and pleaded for him.

Mr. Lacointa, while he was director at the Ministry of justice, had repeatedly forced this Jew, but the other contrary the delicacy of honest people was born too well to think to show the letters he had written to ask order or to thank; so he did not hesitate to insult to sult the honest magistrate and accuse him of having interfered in this affair with a political ulterior motive.

Needless to say, Lisbon finds it perfectly legitimate the act of taking a child from his parents by proselytism anti-religious. In this the Jew reveals himself once again in all its brutal cynicism, in its absolute absence of principles. Freedom of conscience, the right of fathers to family are for him only scenic effects; he is the first to laugh about it when he's no longer on stage.

526 JEWISH FRANCE

About little Mortara, the Jews had stirred up all Europe, disturbed all the chancelleries, caused floods of ink; when it comes to the son of a French plebeian, The Jew Lisbon declares that it is permissible to kidnap a child to his father (1).

The Montpellier court ordered the appearance of Lenoir and his son, but we had been careful to refuse legal aid to this destitute man. He was able to,

to be treated like a criminal by the president of the court. Is it necessary to add that his appeal was dismissed? complaint?

The men have not yet thought of collecting the names of all these brave people who resist everything to defend their faith, in a volume which would be the golden book of the little ones; but God long ago wrote them in the book of his justice. They are more than courageous indeed, they are heroes. No support supports them. The rich Christians have fun, dance, bet on the races, invent petticoat figures; they hardly think of those who suffer for their convictions.

In the interesting work of Mr. Wallon, the Tribunal revolutionary in one chapter is entitled the Second-hand Dealer Mauclaire, confessor of the deed. Nothing is more curious.

(1) In 1859, the Jews had set all of Paris in motion and made even the Emperor because two young prisoners were David and Isaac Solomon, damned for theft, had been the object of ten-conversion rates.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 527

This g-agne-pelit is neither a royalist nor an aristocrat, he is Christian above all; he is arrested for saying that those who had destroyed the Catholic cult were beggars. Under the locks he wants to affirm his faith and he writes two beautiful letters which were the only charges brought against him.

Pierre Mauclaire, captive, Chamber of Pikes, No. 15. From Luxembourg town, this 15th of May, the year of grace 1794 and the year iv^e of the persecution of Christians.

It is with justice and truth that I have used this term, on November 24th, by writing a letter of six pages to the villain Ghaumette and his accomplices from the municipality of this unfortunate capital...

It is with greater certainty that I use this same term today, and with the same firmness that I write as a free man speaking to slaves who imprisoned me for telling the truth. Am I not right in saying that we have been in open persecution for four years, in beginning with the ministers of the Catholic faith and by an infinity of Christians who have perished and who perish every day?... How many of innocent victims who moan in the prisons of this of their conscience. They cry out tearfully to their God for whom they suffer. Do you believe, scoundrels for the most part, that God will always be deaf to their cries? Oh no! time revenge is ready to break out against the executioners...

God and people are tired of your tyrannies. Never the old regime has not provided so many crimes.

Elsewhere he adds, in the style of a prophet and with a surge of faith which makes this illiterate man profoundly eloquent:

In that great day of revelation, there will be guilty ones!
How different will be the judgments of God from those of men!
The innocent people they killed will judge them in turn.

S28 JEWISH FRANCE

God, what evils you are going to send on this unfortunate woman! apostate and profane France, to punish it for all these impie- your!...

Convert us, Lord, to return to you and do penance- tence of so many crimes... Give us, by your mercy, a very Christian king, to change the pitiful state of France; raise up with zeal your temples, your altars and the relics of your saints, who have been desecrated with such fury. Give us, Lord, holy ministers - to preach the true religion, to offer to the thrice holy God the only victim capable of appeasing serve your anger...

This obscure victim of the tremendous storm. Before going to the scaffold, Mau- Claire takes leave of her fellow prisoners in dignified language of a confessor of the first centuries.

If, by chance, there were among you all some who have to complain about me for some faults that are mine escaped in spite of myself, I beg them to forgive me bottom of their hearts, in response to the love I will have for them always, and even beyond after my death which is very pro- chain, in punishment for my support of worship and religion Catholics, and that I firmly and courageously reproached the ab- countless crimes that have been committed over the past few years month.

But I, strong in my conscience, I wait for them with a step firm and calm; I will show them, if it pleases God, that I

I will be freer than them If it only serves to irritate them, the less I will have the consolation of dying for the justice that makes my dearest delights. How glorious it is to die on a scaffold to support religion!

I have often thought of this man. The revolutionaries erect statues to Danton or provide pensions for our expenses to the false victims of December 2, never the Christians of the Restoration did not bother to know if some martyrs, like Mauclaire, had not left a family. Isn't it great, despite everything, this craftsman who dies voluntarily for his religion, not in full battle, like the Vendéans, but in this Paris always more indifferent and more skeptical than the countryside? Isn't this soul beautiful that has remained faithful and believing in the triviality of a profession which does not elevate point ?

JEWISH PERSECUTION 529

It is on the poor, almost exclusively, that it has weighed down above all this persecution which, directed, demanded, paid for by the Jews, will bear in history the name inscribed at the head of this last book: Jewish Persecution.

A radical newspaper, in a day of frankness, recothis fact was born himself.

The bishop, having sometimes considerable resources, the priest of the big city were not reached. We struck with particular rigor on the server and on the monk. Among the religious orders themselves, these are the most the poor who suffered the most. All those weak people who lived, thanks to the association, were literally condemned to die of hunger.

I saw, on his deathbed, one of the victims of the decrees and the memory of it has remained indelible to me.

If you don't know the Hermitage, go visit it.
Nothing in Switzerland beats this strange, picturesque and charming.

The Hermitage is the name of an ancient convent hidden by ancient fir trees, which rise to the top of a high mountain overlooking Noirétable. From the top of a dolmen there, I don't know how, in the early ages of the world, we sees, on clear days, the summit of Mont Blanc, but the gaze hardly thinks of going so far; it rests amazed and delighted on an incomparable panorama: on the right, the thick masses of the Bois-Noirs, on the left, the mountains of VoUor, in front of you, the plain with its multicolored checkerboard, its golden wheat, its green meadows, its oats, its rye. Above all, this impression of the sky that you think you can touch by raising your hand and which lends this landscape, seen from so high up, a particular aspect.

This is where, about twenty years ago, some Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament than the population of the country surrounded with veneration. They were not very dangerous, because at the time of the decrees, there were three of them in all. How exactly did things happen? We have never been able to know exactly. The mayor of Noirétable, a doctor, belonged to a Bonapartist family as long as the Empire had been able to distribute places, which had become ardently republican as soon as the wind had turned. It was moreover a fairly good man who seems to have wanted to put everything right for the better without having succeeded.

On the morning of November 4, 1880, the sub-prefect of Mont-Brison, who answered to the name of Mauras, came to expel to be the good religious and he sketched a grimace when he saw the ascent to be accomplished. Cliemin doing so, he had re-gathered some unpleasant information about the dispositions of the peasants, hearts of gold, but very capable of fire a shot at the criminals who go to pickpocket the doors of harmless religious people who had only done good to all. In short, cowardly like all his peers, he had a fear of the devil.

Seeing the character's hesitations, Mr. Bertrand said: "Let's have lunch first!" Convinced – and this opinion does honor to his intelligence – that the happiness of the

JEWISH PENALTY 531

France did not depend on the expulsion of three religious figures who did not go down to the village once a month, the The mayor perhaps hoped that the sub-prefect would forget table the nasty task that brought it and that everything would remain as is.

We had lunch as we do in Forez; and, at the nightfall, after the Champagne, the administrator republican was very drunk – this is the expression used in the country. He was sent as best he could to his residence and in Aesop of the moral superiority of civil servants democracy over the minions of tyranny.

Unfortunately this time, Raton, the sub-prefect had outsmarted Bertrand, the mayor. Between two shots, without anyone knowing when, he had ordered to a gendarme, named Tarbouriech, to carry out this that he did not dare to undertake himself and to go and throw the religious people outside their homes while he continued to to celebrate the divine bottle and to praise freedom.

Tarbouriech left flanked by a companion and did not have the tender hand. Of the three religious, one remained to guard the building, another headed towards the castle of Mr. de Barante where a retreat had been prepared for him; the third headed towards Verrines, a village below the mountain tagne where he was also to find asylum

This one was called Father Gorentin. He was seventy.
years; for nearly forty years he had preached the E-gospel to the American Indians, then exhausted, suffering cruelly from the chest, he had come there to rest.
It was a bad idea.

In November, snow already covers the Hermitage. Thanks
In the last light of day the poor monk goes away;3a

532 JEWISH FRANCE

at first quite well, but soon everything took around hii a fantastic relief. The paths crisscross, the sil-gigantic owls from the trees under the reverberation of the snow took on deceptive shapes; the cold made make the blood rush to the traveler's temples. Seized by delirium, he probably imagined that he still had Tarbouriech at after him, he hurried his run and fell into the sen-thirds barely passable in broad daylight. At dawn, a log-Ron found him lying there, thought he was dead, noticed that he was breathing-would still be there and managed to bring him back to life.

The poor man was no less lost. He returned to The Hermitage to end an existence whose days were now counted. It would have been necessary, to prevent this old man to return home, to establish on these heights a fixed gendarmerie post. The necessary funds would have been requested-necessary in the House, that the left, always liberal, would have found this proposal admirable and worthy of her; one didn't think about it.

This was the story we were told in the village one morning.

sion at the Hermitage which we never miss whenever the desired vacation brings us back to Forez, which has become our adopted country.

When we have traveled about a league we stop for a few minutes to a hamlet called Les Baraques.

– Do you know the news? we are told when we let's arrive.

– No.

– This poor Father Corentin is dead, he has finished die sooner! He was prepared for the rest; yesterday Sunday, he said goodbye to us. "I will still have the strength to say my Mass today, and I will pray for those who have

JEWISH PERSECUTION 533

loved ones and also for those who persecuted us, then I

I will go away" He said his mass and left for an hour

After

The thought of the brave man who had died saddened us, but soon the charm of the road distracted from this feeling.

Nothing is as wonderful as this climb in July. Lilies of the valley, daffodils, and spring gentians have already disappeared, it is true, but there remain the wild carnations—ges, pansies and violets that line the path. We climbs through enormous ferns that form a green pedestal with large oaks, tou— birches agitated and trembling days, to the leafy beeches which prepare to the dark fir trees at the summit.

Sometimes a regular murmur astonishes the ear, it is a stream that flows in silver foam from some rock covered with moss and which must be crossed on a trunk of tree. Like the Oberon of legends who jumped over—over torrents without wetting its bells, the French children—jump over the obstacle. My little niece, Anaïs, who said so kindly that she wanted to learn to write for making copies for his uncle, excelled at this game and it is in vain — that my other niece Marie, already more serious, gave wise advice.

When we reach the end we let out a cry of admiration. in fact leads to a green velvet carpet which makes this eternally young nalui'e. i

Despite everything, the proximity of death gave this landscape a melancholy he doesn't usually have. The sinister cry of the owl which resounded obstinately in this solitary-study said that there was a corpse there. At a window distinguished an almost imperceptible glow which made a II to 0.

334 JEWISH FRANCE

strange contrast with the radiant clarity of this day of July.

This light came from the funeral chamber. What room! Something more destitute than a cell, a large tiled room open to all winds, at the back a bed of a child and in this bed, on a broken straw mattress, under a blanket that was worth twenty sous, a little old man stretched out with clasped hands. A night light was finishing consume in a glass and near the bed a beer cut to the hastily in an unplanned, rough fir tree, waited... (1).

I cannot express to you the emotion that the sight of this little old man and the disgust that took hold of you for these Republicans full of everything, traffickers in everything, stockbrokers out and thinking of coming to look for this solitary and humble to throw it in the snow at night.

For all the furniture in this room a broken chair; on a white wooden shelf some leaflets of ou-

(1) The sub-prefect pursued his victim to death; the religious had asked to be buried in his beloved Hermitage; The acclaim was brutally rejected.

The same thing happened almost everywhere. Here is what which the venerable abbot of So- wrote to V Univers in April 1884 Lesmes, Dom Couturier.

"One of our old brothers, driven like us from the abbey, there is four years old, has just died in a neighboring department. I mourant, he had asked for the grace of being buried in the cemetery of the parish of Solesmos, whose name reminded him of so many dear ones memories. This file seemed easy and had nothing that could compromise public interest. The request was therefore made in the name of the family of the deceased. But after 24 hours of hesitation and negotiations probably with the ministry, the piefel responded by ee singular telegram:

"The death of the deceased is not So/e^wes, there is no reason
"to grant the permission you request to transport daug
"this commune the body of the deceased."

THE JEWISH PKASEGUTION 533

religious works, a brochure: Social Salvation by VEu-Sharia and the Providential Vocation of the J^èlerinagesei a completely curled up volume, probably left there since the 17th century: Treatise on Christian perfection by the
P. Rodriguez of the Society of Jesus, translated by Régnier Desmarais, of the French Academy. The unfortunate man had not not even enough to buy devotional books.

This whole house with its stone stairs to the marrickety houses, its crumbling walls, offered the image of misery. In the kitchens, you know those kitchens of monks where Jewish writers have succulent meals prepared slow and worthy of the head of Rothschild, there was for all stock up on a bushel of sprouted potatoes.

I came back again to say a Our Father and an Ave near the bunk of the old man who seemed to be sleeping childish and involuntarily I thought of Freycinet. 11 y had more than one point of resemblance between this little old man and the senator that we see with his mouse head, his smart face gliding through the Senate groups. I'm-jays that he too would lie down one day in a beer, a little more careful no doubt, and in memory of me the words that Saint Marianus said to the proconsul returned who attended his last meal in prison: "Pte-long for me to recognize me at the Last Judgment deny

Why think of Freycinet rather than another?
you will say; if he signed the decrees, which we tend to forget too much, if he presented them to the House, he withdrew to last moment. My God, if I thought of Freycinet, it's simply because he is not a thief. The Republicans tell you, and this frankness honors them, - we recognize-let us be born that our statesmen are all embezzlers-

536 JEWISH FRANCE

naries and crooks, but there is one exception: Freycinet.

cinet a representative character, too, and as the embodiment of a certain common state of mind in France at the moment. With Constans and Cazot, for example, everything is clear: "At what time and how many?" Ferry, he does not act himself' and says: "Ask the price at the Good, see my brother at the Franco-Egyptian bank. Freycinet's motive is different. What dominates in him it is intellectual and moral cowardice, it is this lowering-character who put everything that was honorable in in France at the mercy of a small band of Franks-Masons and Jews (1).

Enter this hotel on rue de la Faisanderie, you you will find Philemon and Baucis there. The man and the woman are

(1) I will cite to you in this order a fact of little importance, blood doubt, but topical. I have it from Camille Doré, a brave lieuship's owner turned journalist, and who certainly swore sometimes, although a good Christian, he never lied in his life. What-A few months before the decrees, he met Bethmont with whom he had been raised. -How is your son? he asks. -Oh! admirablement! I am delighted with his progress now that I have him in the Jesuits.

Bethmont nevertheless voted for the Devès agenda requesting the expulsion of the congregation. - What a scoundrel you are! Doré told him some time later.- Bah! my dear, interest above all!

Is not such an act characteristic of a man whose the father was raised for free by religious people, on behalf of a man especially whom hunger does not grip?

Note that the world, which will be severe for a woman who will surrender to eat, or for a hungry person who steals a loaf of bread, will only have smiles for this man who absolutely sold himself by consenting, for a position as president of the Court of Auditors, to prohibit religious whom he considered irreproachable since he entrusted his en-child.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 537

once went together to convert to Solesmes and the husband, not forgetting in his catechumenal zeal that he was a candidate for the general council in Montauban, even asked the Father Abbot for a recommendation for the bishop of the diocese. - I imagine that these two old men, while talking by the fireside, they remember to each other the circumstances of their journey of yesteryear.

welcome and whom you thanked so warmly, what is it became ?

– My goodness! I don't know; he must be wandering on a road any, because I just put the police station after him.

It is against the poor again, against the poor only-ment, that the school law is enacted. The rich will always the way to raise your children Christian-ment, the poor cannot; for him atheism is obligatory. We called small secular Mortaras, these children who are violently torn from the religion of their fathers. The word is only half right. We don't give them not even one religion in place of another. The misfortunes-rous, for whom life will be the hardest, who would have the most need of faith, hope, an ideal, are deprived of any religious teaching.

Raised without God, living without God, they will die without God.

The proletarian is at the end of his race; on the grave the Romans inscribed the cursus honorum, it is the cursus dolorum that should be registered, if they register tions did not cost so much, on this tomb that we are going dig in the common grave for this outcast and this vanquished.

3

538 JEWISH FRANCE

He worked to enrich the Jews, he was poisoned by the Jewish fortune-telling merchants, dear to Lockroy, he is at his wit's end. Formerly, this disinherited man found near his bedside a being of shame, mother, sister and wife at the same time who showed him .little blue sky.

The Sister didn't need to say much to to assert that there was beyond this cruel and miserable world- a world where all was justice and light; his pre- The sense near this bed proclaimed the promises loudly enough eternal. Charming, intelligent, often rich, she had sacrificed everything and she was there in this atmosphere plagued, attentive to the suffering of all, caring with a smiling devotion to sometimes disgusting wounds, pre-referring to all this title of servant of the poor, that is to say children of God.

to perish in a heavenly homeland. Unfortunate dog who, in his life, never found a good bone, it will be buried like the beasts, perinde ac jumenla.

This persecution of the dying, this secularization, against which 76 out of 80 doctors protested, is perhaps the crime of crimes among so many abominable acts. If any—that a scientist had discovered a consoling drink, would not would we not hurry to buy the precious vials which contain—would be of hope and oblivion? What villainy would not is it not necessary to tear away from these unfortunate people who, for so long long hours, melancholically replaying the phases painful of their difficult existence, this religious feeling—gieux which is the best and sweetest of all ba—my ?

In such conditions, the hospital, this already luxurious stay which one passes only with trembling, has become a

JEWISH PERSECUTION 539

A true hell on the door of which one can read: lasciate ogni speranza.

Long ago our fathers had exhausted the treasures of their charity in the organization of these hospitals which, placed near the monasteries or churches, were like an annex of the house of the Lord. Viollet-le-Duc himself affirmed the superiority that the hospitals had then on our modern establishments.

In the few medieval hospital establishments that we know of have remained, he writes, we find a spirit of charity well understood—and delicate. The buildings have a monumental appearance without being rich; the sick have space, air, light. They are often separated from each other, their individuality is respected and certainly, if there is something that is repugnant to the unfortunate who find a refuge in these establishments, despite the enlightened care that one gives them abundantly today, it is the community in large rooms. Often then the suffering of each patient increases by the sight of the suffering of the neighbor. Without pretending that the cellular system frequently applied in hospitals of the Middle Ages was materially preferable to the adopted system of our time, —it is certain that from the moral point of view it presented an advantage. We would like to point out that it came from a sentiment—very noble charity among the many founders and cons—destroyers of our houses — God of the Middle Ages which they have been running after all their lives without grasping, is still the only thing that has any value. To the Sisters if compassionate, so disinterested, so eager have succeeded Harpies who charge for the lightest office, who tend the hand to the sick, not to help them, but to receive as soon as they request the slightest service.

Today in these hospitals, which cost millions to taxpayers, Jewish Freemasonry finds the

540 JEWISH FRANCE

We can guess, in fact, in what circles, there again, a
A man like Quentin could recruit his staff.
The court hearings have enlightened us on this point.
The Frenchman, of March 30, 1883, published as a table of these singular customs.

Yesterday Friday, the 9th correctional chamber of the court of the Seine had to judge a scene of pugilism and debauchery, in the-which a lay nurse was involved in. During the audience where she had been called as a witness, the president addressed the following apostrophe: "You are a lay nurse at Saint-Louis Hospital, and you spend your nights with the merchants of wines." The public joined in with their murmurs at the right indignant President's appointment.

Ladies and gentlemen, lay nurses, hold on, apparently, to constantly occupy the newspapers of their honorable and friendly people.

Well! Fine, we will talk about them since they want to, and will faithfully report their exploits for the greatest edification of those who will read them.

The day before yesterday we told the story of this young girl, from name of Thuvenat, who, after having spent five of his most beautiful years in a reformatory, had become a nurse of the Government, then, after being chased from the hospital Tenon, where she had been called to replace the Sisters, had launched into a life of pleasures and parties among the soldiers of the 4th line, and finally reinstated by Mr. Quentin in his functions of comforter of the sick, appeared before the tri-Paris correctional court for having treated them too well.

Today, the venerable lady in question is accused by the president of the '9th' chamber to spend his nights at the mar-candles of wine, instead of spending them at the hospital where she is a nurse-first.

We can therefore say that, before the Paris criminal court, Lay nurses follow one another and look alike.

quite suitable for the task given to him! What careful attention must-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 541

to receive poor sick women who spend their nights at the wine merchants!

These facts, which multiply day by day and which show us-thirty what disorder reigns in hospitals, we oppose them to supporters of secularization.

In April 1884, nurse Nermel de Lariboisière is sentenced to two months in prison by the eleventh room for having half knocked out a sick person who wanted to-milk to prevent him from stealing wine.

The Cry of the People (1) overlooks the Bicêtre asylum, where Bourneville, the frenetic atheist, the hoarder, reigns supreme never satisfied, who is both a deputy and editor-in-chief from a newspaper and chief physician of Bicêtre, details which are truly horrifying. The rooms, which are not swept that during official visits, are in a state of disproportion-repulsive loan. The nurses make a game of hitting the unfortunate madmen with punches or blows with keys; when they are in a good mood, they tie up the unfortunate person which falls into their hands and deliver it to the bather who plunges him into a cold bath "keeping his head under Water until the patient's face has turned purple.

The manager encourages his employees and laughs until he twists, when The victims manifest their suffering through terrible grimaces. maces; doctors are content to sign the patients' notebooks and to receive the emoluments granted by this good Assistance; The interns are having a party, the ward boys are imitating them.

Recently, a general paralytic was delivered to the bather; bather was making a cent of pique, so, furious, he growled: "At-" "Hold on, you old scoundrel, I'll teach you how to bother me!" and he

{1) Cry of the People, November 5, 1884.

II 31

542 JEWISH FRANCE

threw the wretch into a bathtub filled with almost boiling water-lante. When the ward nurse, Pariset, came back to get his paralytic, he noticed with amazement that this one was completely tapes," an eyewitness tells us. Today – two months after this boiling bath – the burns are not yet healed!

This is just one case among a thousand.

The same procedure is used for the elderly; one of them was hung by his feet, and remained upside down, for more than a minute, because he had soiled his bed...

In January 4885, a paralytic who occupied the bed no. 19, in the Saint-François room, at Beaujon hospital, "torn from his bed by a drunken nurse and thrown into the coal cellar where he expires a few minutes later.

The trial of this nurse named Bourré, who was left for six months in prison, revealed incredible details—wounds on the negligence of Quentin and Peyron.

This man had been chased away two or three times from all the Paris hospitals for drunkenness and violence towards the sick—and he returned quietly a few months later in the hospitals from which he had been discharged; he went around and he had been successively to Cochin, to Lariboisière, to Charity, at Saint-Antoine, at the Pitié, at the Hôtel-Dieu, at Bichat, in Beaujon!

The sick are exposed to all kinds of negligence when they are not victims of all the mistreatment mercenaries (1). On June 26, 1882, an unfortunate

(1) Read the touching petition addressed, in January 1884, to the President Grévy by twelve hundred patients from the Incura hospices of Ivry-sur-Seine, which recall what they suffered elsewhere from the part of lay nurses and who beg that they not be deprived not the care given to them by the nuns.

"Most of us," these poor people say, "have done a crazy woman Georges is burned alive, literally cooked rather in her bathtub where Marie Contausse, the maid, locked her up and forgot about her. At Tenon Hospital, the young lady Devillers expires in excruciating pain after a wash—that the Prugnaud woman and the Thibault woman told him administered by putting thirty grams of pure acid instead of forty centigrams of carbolic acid; a child was burned alive in June 1883 at the same hospital.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 543

the death of a two-month-old child, the daughter of a lady Lepron, by delivering potassium chlorate to the mother lime phosphate place.

On March 19, the court acquitted the defendants, noting—as long as the terrible disorder which has crept into the hospitals make employees irresponsible.

Whereas, he said, the defective organization of the service of usual medicines, at the Laënnec hospital, could easily bring—stay more raw less loog in secularized hospitals. That is to say, Mr. President, that we have experienced it ourselves—concern of secularization, and that all, without distinction of opinion, We know, without a doubt, that by losing the Sisters, we lose at the same time rest, order and, it must be admitted, alas! care that is so necessary to us and the consideration that is due to us. In support of our statement, we can cite a fact: the pensioners—res of La Rochefoucauld and Petits-Ménages, secularized for three years, have already petitioned twice to request reinstatement of the Sisters.

In the session of January 28, 1885, the Municipal Council, seized of the question, naturally declared himself in favor of secularization, despite a eloquent speech by Dr. Després. A well-known advisor, Menorval, wanted to intervene in the discussion by reading an ignorant letter—ble against the Sisters, which disgusted even this not very difficult assembly. "Mr. Marius Martin and Mr. Després," says Le Figaro, "force their colleague to give the name of the signatory of this ignominy, and it ends to confess that he is an Israelite named David.

S44 THE JEWISH FRINGE

to cause confusion; that the care of the dosage of these medicines, usually prepared in large quantities at a time, was abusive—left to service girls who do not always offer guarantees sufficient age, experience or knowledge; that, moreover, the packages thus prepared in advance, or at least some of them, bore neither label nor indications relating to the nature of the substance they contained.

Isn't it terrible the thought of this hospital where the poisons and harmless substances are jumbled together, where one takes at random, "at random," as they say, without even be guided by a label? What shame must test the old doctors by noting what Quentin made these hospitals which were once a model for Europe.

Louis, placed in the Gazenave room, Charles Vandeleyem and Charles Lecouteux, died in a sudden manner.

We notice that instead of spoonfuls of German brandy-order, they had been made to take a few spoonfuls of strychnine. These facts are so common in hospitals current that no one thinks of being surprised by it.

In Le Gaulois (February 26, 1884), a doctor recounts the astonishment experienced by a hospital department head in noting that its prescriptions are carried out absolutely conversely, to a sick person to whom he ordered wine, one gave-born from milk. To a request for explanation, the director re-laid by a prayer to please reduce by half or at least a third of the quantity of wine prescribed in all-using the financial situation of the Assistance as an excuse. This is where Quentin had arrived with a budget of thirty-four million! Where is this happening? Theft is everywhere. realizes one fine morning that quinine no longer cures and a trial reveals that the administration of the Assistance .puî3li-"that patriotically deals with an Italian factory merged with a German company, which replaces quinine sulfate with cinchonine (1).

JEWISH PERSECUTION 5*15

There is no longer any discipline or control. The National is forced to admit that Quentin "distributes meats rotten to the sick." Justice admits "that the disorder and negligence reign in the hospitals of the Seine (2). >; Let us add that the staff of our hospitals,

(1) We understand the horror that people now feel for hospitals-to the people of Paris who once had equal confidence in your knowledge of the masters and. in the dedication of the staff. During cholera, the unfortunate, believing that everything had been secularized, did not dare not admit that they were sick for fear of being handed over to the staff chosen by Quentin and asked the doctors for mercy not to betray them. Rue de Nevers, a nurse who, supported by agents, came to seize a sick person, was half knocked out by the neighbors.

I know of nothing so heartbreaking as the desperate flight of two evil-happy with my neighborhood. The doctor who treated them must have reveal to Commissioner Bugnottet that the woman was infected of cholera-. So the poor woman, warned that she was going to be abducted by force, begged her husband to save her from this torture, and here are these two beings, the dying woman, the mad man of pain, left in the middle of the night across the immense Paris, wandering like never the wrongdoers, discovers the sick. The couple was taken back to the White House the next day and the woman, who had dreamed of finishing peacefully at home, was dragged to a hospital where she succumbed pres- that immediately.

Under the pretext that there might be a crucifix in a house, prevent people from dying at home, near those they love, no tyranny had ever dared to do this!... Let us add that in the face of the im- possibility of being obeyed, Garaescasse ends up declaring that one had the right to die in relative peace.

(2) A confidential circular from Quentin, which all the newspapers published in April 1884, proclaims, more energetically than we could not do it, the scandalous waste that reigns in these secularized hospitals where, half drunk from the morning, the women who

§4'6 JEWISH FRANCE

I was so devoted, so human, sometimes under appearances rough, has changed completely in recent years by the invasion of foreign students to whom are reserved- granted all the favors and who indulge in the sick all fantasies, all experiences in anima vili imaginable.

At a time when, following student protests French, Le Matin dealt with this question, I published an article on this subject and received from doctors, recently released hospitals, letters containing horrific details. does not have the idea of tortures except for the purpose of vain curiosity- sity, often even just for fun, we do undergo to certain patients. "I saw," the doctor wrote to me, Ghalvan, on December 22, 1884, foreigners pass the probe twenty times in a row into the canal of a mal- happy French people and they laugh, among themselves, at these good French people from whom we learn so well. I can even say that many died as a result of these in- sensible. y>

When Peyron, the brother of Ferry's accomplice in Tex- Tonkin expedition, and which had to this circumstance to be appointed to the management of Public Assistance to the place of Quentin, chased away by general contempt, pre-the nuns were replaced, are unable to distinguish a me- medicine of another. It follows from this piece that in round figures formerly 4,000 liters of brandy were used per year, since the cisation we drink 16,000 liters; formerly we consumed 5,000 li- tres of rum, now 32,000 liters; formerly 144,000 kilogramswine, now 2,646,000 liters; formerly 56,000 liters of wine Banyuls, now 128,000 liters; formerly 1,130,000 liters of milk, today 2,675,000 liters.

I

JEWISH PERSECUTION 547

senta before the students, on December 27, 1884, for announce the names of hospital interns and externs for 1885, an unspeakable scandal occurred. The vociferrations, whistles, insults covered the voice of the opportunistic civil servant who was shouted at from all sides points from the room: "Shut up, bacillus!"

The uproar redoubled when it was announced to these young people
French that, by a scandalous special treatment, the first
The intern appointed was a Cuban, Mr. Albarran.

In January 1886, for the distribution of prizes and medals for internal and external students of hospitals, the scene took on the proportions of a riot. As soon as Peyron an immense clamour arose; everyone began to sing:

Spit on Peyron [bis].
Boo!

Unable to utter a word, completely distraught,
The City Council's executioner flees by a stolen loss. After his departure the tables were overturned, the books thrown on the floor, the chandelier broken.

The boarding school, moreover, this very respected institution where formerly trained the masters of science in work, is not more than a shadow of what it once was since the Jews have entered it. All the traditions of professional honorional tend to disappear there again. In October 1885, the Jewish doctor Goigenbeim delivers to his intern Kahn the subject of the competition. Recriminations erupt from all sides and we are forced to cancel the competition.

The key witness of this investigation, which we will resume perhaps someday to punish the real culprits, those who speculated on suffering to enrich themselves, it is

mand Carrel, Doctor Després who, in a century of universal failure, really appears as a figure loyal and friendly. There is no day when, in the name of science, common sense, humanity, he did not put Quentin face to face with the crimes he committed.

The letter he addressed to the newspapers on February 22, 1883, in response to some lies from Bourneville who had tried to deceive public opinion, is like the summary of the question.

February 22, 1883.

Dear Editor,

Every bad case is deniable, Mr. Bourneville defends himself as he can, and, it must be said, painfully. But I cannot let pass the audacious apology for the alleged services that Mr. Bourneville would have returned to the hospitals, with the help of his colleagues. He These are probably his colleagues on the City Council.

Here, moreover, is the truth about these services and their results:

1° The nurses, to whom the wine was delivered in greater quantities quantity, sell it to the sick;

2° The nurses, whose wages have been increased, generally return-usually drunk on their day out. One of them, last year, on returning, beat a patient in one of my rooms at the hospital of Charity;

3° The lay supervisors and nurses substituted for the nuns-gieuses, have already, in eighteen months, four deaths through carelessness in their charge; a sick person suffocated in a bath; three poisonings-carbolic acid enemas: one at Tenon Hospital, one at Laënnec hospital, the same week, and one last year, at Cochin Hospital. This is the fact to which Mr. Quentin, director ie Public Assistance, referred to before the Municipal Council these days. But Mr. Quentin has misled the City Council, by telling him suggesting that it was an act attributable to the nuns. I repeat, it was a patient from the Cochin Maternity Hospital, isolated building, served exclusively by lay people, and where the nuns are not allowed to enter.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 549

The harm that has been done to hospitals is even greater than I I didn't say it. Order, deportment and morality are banned from hospitals-secularized rates. The disorder of the linen, at the Saint-Antoine hospital and at Tenon Hospital, was such that inspectors had to be sent, last, the lay staff of the Samt-Ântoine hospital, hospital secularized, men and women, changed their costume, and did not even refrained from appearing in the halls in this disguise.

Here, sir, is the staff coming out of nursing school. lay schools of Mr. Bourneville, a school which, according to the latter, would have was founded for the greater good of Public Assistance.

All these facts are common knowledge in hospitals, I I won't say any more. Only, I make the public the judge, and I will I will recall this word from the good La Fontaine:

At work we know the craftsman.

Please accept, Mr. Editor, the assurance of my con-distinguished amazement.

A. Després (1).

(1) In February, regarding the secularization of hospitals in the city, a doctor from Lyon, Doctor Augagnem, republican and free-thinker, addressed three very remarkable letters to the Courrier de Lyonquables which concluded absolutely in the same sense.

"Of the 600 Sisters in the hospitals," he said, "405 are employed in the rooms, are in direct contact with the patients. I actually put, and no doctor will contradict me, that it is impossible to find not only in Lyon, but perhaps in all of France, 400 women able to do this service immediately. We see every day, in town, nurses and we are fixed on the average value of the members of the coiporutiou...

"Between the religious and the laiiiups, there will always be a difference-original rence of extreme importance. The nuns do not embrace-
I don't feel like living in a hospital just to find the means of existence; the causes of their choice are of a higher order
II 31.

530 JEWISH FRANCE

The scandalous scenes of Mardi Gras, to which the D"" Després makes a discreet allusion, are one of the facts even more characteristic of our time. Can it be conceive vision more horrible than the orgy in the hospital, infirmhalf-drunk nurses and nurses looking for each other in the rooms, the Pleasure which screams crushing in its frolics the Dou-
their rattling, the Evohés mingling with the cries of agony, the sick, suddenly awakened, sitting up to look at these men dressed as women and these wom-

the dupes of some horrible nightmare? There really is in these games of Love and Death I don't know what fantastic and macabre (1).

What's missing is Quentin, that big satyr overflowing with health, looking at these things after a supper with some municipal councilors and telling his acolytes between two hiccups: "Huh! My children, how beautiful is Progress? The rooms didn't have that playful feel with the Sisters." I say: it is missing; it is a figure of speech, because ser- probably he was there; such objects are made for him to please.

They are content with 40 francs a year and think they will save themselves. And How much will the laity value the compensation as equivalent to salvation? Acting for an idea, even if it is false, will always be superior to doing something. to act for money. In the army, volunteers have always were preferred to the replacements, to those who were called the sellouts. (1) For the exact analysis of this state of age where the human being, suddenly seized with convulsive laughter, desecrates the corpses and defiles them in a kind of diabolical vertigo, curious minds will good to read Michelet's admirable chapter on the moral crisis that France went through in the 15th century during the horrors of the Hundred Years' War. It was then that the repre- Performances of the Danse Macabre, in the Cemetery of the Innocents, where In the evening the crazy girls did their job on the graves.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 531

In almost all secularized hospitals, analogous scenes The changes to those mentioned by Dr. Després are taking place now. h' Echo delà Brne^ reproduced by Figaro of November 13 4884, tells us what happened at the hospice in Meaux following the death of a poor old woman of seventy-four years old whose thinness had cheered up the staff.

Following custom, the nurses prepared, after the death, to remove the body of the deceased, when a feeling of indescribable curiosity pushed them to feast on the sight of this poor corpse in all its misery. They discovered it completely, without being stopped by the emotional protests, the supplications, the cries of indignity even of some sick women and of a young child eleven-year-olds who witnessed this desecration.

A fat, plump, twenty-year-old nurse who as- stood for the thing, served as a point of comparison for the nurses" amidst the sneers, mockeries and most inconvenient- Nantes reflections.

the Sisters did, before placing her on the funeral bier which is used to transport the dead to a special room, the nurses. The first took the corpse and threw it across this stretcher with a sinister noise that was heard in the neighboring rooms.

Now do we want to know the outcome? Here it is:

Attracted by the noise, a supervisor arrived and simply silence... the sick; then, as soon as the dead woman had been placed in the stretcher, the fat nurse, paralyzed by laughter, was seized, lying over the dead woman, the lid was closed, and the all taken away in the midst of laughter, cries of joy, in a word of a indescribable tumult (1).

(1) In a few years, under the influence of official materialism, in France we have seen feelings disappear, such as respect for death, which seemed innate in the human heart. In cer- In some hospitals, the dead are now being thrown into the mêlée coffin.

A young woman living in Saint-Denis, impasse des Gémeaux,

552 JEWISH FRANCE

Isn't that exactly the feeling Michelet is expressing? when he writes: "The human skeleton, in its forms angular and awkward at first glance, recalls as we know life in a thousand ridiculous ways, but the af-Rook grin takes on an ironic air... less strange still by the form as by the oddity of the poses, it is the man and it is not the man. Or, if it is he, he seems, this horrible minstrel, to display with atrocious cynicism the supreme nudity which had to remain clothed in the earth.

These fits of unhealthy gaiety, this need to see suffer-fry or die for laughs tend to become widespread among our students who are no longer just skeptical and good children like their predecessors, but who have arrived to the persecutory and hateful materialism of the Lanessan and of the Bournevilles. In October 1885, the inter-nat in Bullier was the occasion for unspeakable scenes. women were beaten, martyred, subjected to the most ignoble treatment; some of these unfortunate women were seized by terrible nervous attacks which only served redouble the hilarity (1). This is what by destroying all

Mrs. jvi.,.^ entered Thûpilal from Saint-Denis, October 12, 1885, met-milk into the world, that same evening, a child, who died a few leagues

October, in the coffin of a person who died the day before, and it is the doctor who wanted to examine the little corpse who discovered this monstrous act. A similar act had already been observed on October 13—last October, for the child of a lady L...

To more securely conceal this fraud, we did not even have declared the child dead. You see the guarantees that a semiblable administration offers to families.

The Gaul, November 7, and the Cry of the People, November 9 1885, recounted all these facts at length.

(1) The People's Cry of October 10 and 13 contains on these Sacruel twists and turns of sailing details.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 553

belief in souls, the republican government has made of young people probably born with instincts honest and generous, he corrupted even the Bullier ball! Quentin must be proud of the result produced by his passage to Public Assistance.

Quentin, in fact, is the complete Freemason (1); he does not sees in life only appetites to be satisfied and he satisfies them—done widely. A former friend of Delescluze, he abandoned the hour of danger a man who was thin and who said: ((This is the time to die well! " to reconnect to Gambetta who was fat and who said: "Now is the moment to live well!" Since then he has only prospered at the expense of the sick and we are even surprised that the proofs of disgust that the princes gave him every day

(1) He is a Lowlon, too, we believe. We see from 1837 a Charles QuenlīQ flooding with his verses the Masonic and ge— Universe to look at the death of Hiram.

Hiram is no more! Only the Widow's sons.

They endure such a hard ordeal with strength!
Let us receive stoic lessons from the hero;
From the heavens he watches over the salvation of the Masons
Jehovah alone knows the fate of the Hिरaraitps:
Who can set limits to his power?

A single fact is enough to prove how much Freemasonry is shamelessly when she claims that in these persecutions on the sick people in hospitals, he agrees with the feeling of the popu—workers' movement; it was again Dr. Després who pointed it out,

General Seine,

"The management of the hospice," he said, "on the invitation of Mr. Quentin, asked for a year the mothers who carried or sent their children to the hospice, if they wanted their child to be baptized. After a year, we stopped asking this question, ^have you Why? Because in 1882, for 2,000 children presented, one mother, only one, asked that he not be baptized."

S54 THE JEWISH FRINGE

of science have finally been able to decide to withdraw (1). After all, perhaps he is less contemptible than men like Mr. Paul de Rémusat, for example, who, raised in a Clerical atmosphere, placed at a cer- some height of intelligence, do not dare to take the defense poor people and do nothing to at least try to prevent- dear, by a vote, the infamies that one commits (2). The The Roman Senate had its pedarii who never spoke. and who were waiting to vote until someone gave them a sign; they transported en masse to the side where it was needed; this is called- milk pediî^ws in sententiam ire. It is on their knees and not on their feet that our senators of today will to the ballot.

The Sisters protested, in their own way, against secularism.

(1) The unfortunate patients almost got even worse. In the month of August 1884, all the newspapers, we remember, announced the appointment of Strauss as director of Public Assistance. With this one the poor Christian who would have been surprised making a sign of the cross would have been sure of his case. Peyron, it is true, does not is hardly better, but at least he has not been convicted infamous.

(2) Here are those who abstained, that is to say, who did not did not have the courage of their opinion in the discussion that took place at Senate during the abolition of chaplains in hospitals.

These are :

MM. Barthe (Marcel), Blanc (Xavier), Galmon, Cherpin, Cuvuot, Deffis (general), Donnot, Dumesnil, Dupré, Eymard-Duvernay, Fré- bault (general), Galloni d'islría, Gilbert-Boucher, Grévy (Albert), Guicot, Hébrard (Adrien), Jaurès (admiral), Lacomme, Lasteyrie (Ju- the of), Lemoine (John), Le Royer, Luro, Milhet, Fontarabie, Péli- sier (general), Pons, Rémusat (Paul de), Rigal, Roussel (Théophile) Rozière (de; , Scherer, Teisserenc de Bort, ienaille Saligny, Wurlz.

failed; after having been treated as we know, he only waits the next day, hopefully, when it will be swept away for good.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 553

sation, they redoubled their heroism at the time of the cholera; they had been chased away, they were called back when it was necessary to brave death and they came back saying as usual: At the will of the good Lord! They fought valiantly everywhere. In Paris, it was necessary, so that the hospice for the elderly on Avenue de Breteuil, founded by the Little Sisters of the Poor, was decimated, that the Municipal Council helped the plague and that it caused the deaths of old people from hunger.

– What are you saying? cries a shameful republican. to be, this time you are exaggerating.

– No! A newspaper less hypocritical than the others, V Intransigeant, admits the fact in its issue of 12 November 1884.

All the residents of this house are old people. poor, whose physical constitution, already so weak, is rendered even more debilitated by the bad food they are given.

We know that Public Assistance distributes to all asylums and hospitals the remains collected in the refectories–colleges. This is how the old people's home of the avenue of Breteuil formerly received, every day, a certain quantity of food coming from Chaptal College. But, there is two years, on the proposal made to the Municipal Council by the colonel Martin, former lieutenant colonel of the Imperial Dragoons, this food supplement was removed from the hospice and has not been replaced. So that currently these poor old-lards have absolutely nothing to live on but their regulation ration, which is one of the thinnest. So it is not surprising that the scourge makes many victims among them.

Colonel Martin, in a war where so many mistakes were committed, but where the courage of the officers and soldiers was not contested by anyone, is the only one who was convicted of cowardice in the face of the enemy. General Lebrun recounted the fact at length in his book Bazeilles–Sedan (pages 68, 69 and 70).

556 THE JEWISH FAITH

crushed, General de Failly saw some cavalry among General Granchamp's troops; he immediately dispatches towards the regiments of General de Bévillé, one of his aides camp commander Haillot, with the mission of inviting the officers who ordered them to carry out a charge on the left flank of his army corps, to clear this flank who was at that moment very engaged with the enemy. The pre-first of the regiments that Commander Haillot reached was the 6th Cuirassier Regiment.

The colonel of this regiment, who was our Martin, instead to get ready to charge, found the opportunity opportune to ride... on the principles of hierarchy and protested that he had orders to receive only from his direct superiors.

"No doubt," said the brave General Lebrun bluntly. who, one feels, cannot defend himself from a sort of pity for this coward, no doubt in repulse as he had made it at the request of General de Failly, the colonel of 6[<] of cuirassiers could argue that he obeyed the letter strict adherence to our regulations which required that he not receive gold dream that of his direct client, General de Bévillé; but he It is not uncommon in war for an officer to suddenly see himself forced to forget the rules a little; it is when that it is for him a great act of devotion to accomplish-plead and that he lacks time to obtain authorization of his immediate superior. In the case in question, the commandant Haillot had gone to the most urgent matter by addressing the colonel that he had in front of him; he had not thought of looking-first of all, the general who commanded the cavalry. He did not

JEWISH PERSECUTION ^».H7

was concerned only with the critical situation in which the 5th Army Corps was located.

While the officers of the 6th regiment, desperate to inaction, turned away with contempt from their colonel, Pale with fear, Commander Haillot continued on his way and arrived in front of the 5th regiment. This time, he found before him a Frenchman, a soldier, a gentleman. The colonel deContenson did not answer a single word, he bowed and made-putting the saber in hand to his squadrons, "carried them to the gallop towards the point that General de Failly's aide-de-camp had indicated to him and he ordered: Charge! It must be the supreme cry of farewell that he addressed to his cuirassiers. A moment later, he fell from his horse, fatally struck by a German bullet.

takes the Little Sisters of the Poor by famine is, one understands it, the idol of the Municipal Council. The Alsace lodge-Lorraine, of which this zealous Freemason is a part, does not possess. I don't get overjoyed when he comes here to deliver his patriotic tirades. ticks.

It is on the line of this Municipal Council removing ■food scraps to unfortunate old people that we we will stop. We would not find anything as beautiful.

Democratic pity, republican fraternity, philanthropy Freemasonic, I greet you once again, with the e-square and compass!

1 At the end of this history book, what do you see? I don't see only one figure and it is the only one that I wanted to show you:
the figure of Christ insulted, covered in opprobrium, torn apart by thorns, crucified. Nothing has changed in eighteen

558 JEWISH FRANCE

a hundred years. It's the same lie, the same hatred, the same people.

Saint Peter, fleeing persecution, suddenly saw, on the Appian Way, his divine Master who was heading towards Rome carrying its cross.

—Where are you going, Lord? the apostle asked him.

— I'm going to get crucified again.
Saint Peter understood and returned to Rome.

On our boulevards which resemble each other so much, with their mo-incessantly and the spectacle of luxury spread everywhere, this Appian Way, which was crisscrossed by purple litters courtesans and the gilded chariots of the patricians, it is not not a day goes by that I do not encounter the painful image of the Savior. He is everywhere, hanging in popular shop windows, exposed to the jeers of the suburbs, outraged by the caricature and by the pen in this Paris full of such stubborn Jews in deicide as in the time of Caiaphas; he is the same that formerly, consoling and gentle, performing miracles, walking with us through the tumultuous streets-killers.

For many, I know, this conception does not seem quite high. Perhaps to apologize for their inaction, they do not want to imagine a Christ who suffers every

of the sacrileges committed against him; they do not admit not that we can be, according to the strong expression of the early Christians, the colleagues of the Passion of Christ (1). They stick to a kind of cloudy abstraction that we is excusable for not defending.

(1) Quid gloriosius quam coUegam Passionis cum Chvisto factum flee? Letter from the confessors of Home to Saint Gyprian.

JEWISH PERSECUTION

How much better I like the thought of these primitive artists which show us Jesus associated with the familiar life of the city, appearing in the very setting of the hometown of the painter, as if to demonstrate, by this apparent error which is only the observation of a moral truth, that the God made Man is always and everywhere present among us! I remember a beautiful painting by Fra Philippe Lippi who was, I believe, at the Beurnonville sale: the Christ converses with his disciples in the Temple courtyard and the whole city unfolds before him and before the spectator; passers-by approach each other, greet each other, women hurry back from the market, the boats glide on a river. Nothing is forgotten and the detail more naively naturalistic has its place in this work which mixes the divine element with the human element.

As Christ was in Jerusalem, so he is in Paris. Passion for him is constantly reproduced. Who has not dreamed, in reading the story of this terrible agony, of having found himself on the passing of the One who was going to die for us, of him to spare some suffering, to staunch some of the blood that flowed on this forehead torn by the derisory crown, of at least give the Holy Victim a look that console? Every day the Righteous One goes up to Calvary in front our eyes and most of them watch him pass by indifferently, think about their pleasures, their business. Some would have inclinations to protest; they do not dare, they fear-want to stand out, they say to themselves: "I am calm, if I confess to being a Christian, all the French rabble-Masonic and Jewish will be after me.

Happy is he who has overcome this first movement of weakness-hurt! I imagine what his joy will be on the day of Justice when, before the luminous face of Christ, he will remember which the heavens obey. What a minute that will be uncovered the immense and complex swarm of all human thoughts, where everything that hides appears—will arise, quidquid latet apparebit, where the world will see this that we do not see: the secret of souls, the motives of actions, unknown crimes, concealed infamies, beneath barely suspected, the greatness of the slandered, the abjection of those who have walked through life surrounded by the esteem of all 1

Happy then is he who, crushed under the weight of his faults, will be able to rise up and say: "Lord, I am not not worthy to enter your house, but, on such a day, when you passed through the midst of insults and that so many men were silent, I, powerless and puny, tried to lighten your burden and help you carry your cross!"

Happy is he who can repeat in dying what he said
Veuillot:

I hope in Jesus, on earth,
I did not blush at his law;
On the last day, before his Father,
He will not be ashamed of me.

United with Christ, participating in his sufferings to participate—later to his glory, you will be more directly also, from a human point of view, in communion with the soul of your fathers.

My readers, I am convinced, are not fooled.
red Pharisees who pity the auto-da-fés praising the wretches who, in September 1792, cut the throats of were gathered by the thousands, in the name of humanity and pro-sandstone, prisoners, old people, sick people, mad people.

JEWISH PERSECUTION 561

who made them climb onto scaffolds dripping with blood children, 15-year-old girls, 90-year-old women years old, cripples who didn't even know what they were accused.

Despite everything, it is difficult to completely escape—ment to the influence of what we hear from morning to night, to the impression of the artificial intellectual atmosphere created by the Jewish press and the best sometimes suffer, despite them, what we have already called: the prejudices of the modernism.

his personal observations, everyone will understand better now takes into account the reality of things.

No, the men who made France so great and the Spain of the past were neither scoundrels nor fools; the measures they took were not fantasies of delirious tyrants, but they have corresponded to obvious necessities, to dangers which were manifested before everyone's eyes. The Christian does not have wanted Christ to be thrown, as today, to the gemonies; the Aryan did not want to undergo the oppression of the Semite, be condemned to work to enrich it. A race that is, a gathering of like-minded individuals, a set representing a number of feelings, of beliefs, aspirations, skills, traditions, has defended against a race that represented feelings, beliefs, aspirations, skills, traditions absolutely opposite...

1 Doubtless such a demonstration seems to have no longer hardly any doctrinal interest in the result achieved. The examination of these questions will ensure, at least I* hope so-hates, believing him in his faith by showing him that everything is

562 JEWISH FRANCE

is in this order and that the love of the Fatherland and the love of God are one. The true story will destroy some objections raised against the Church by the creators of his-false story, it will dispel certain scruples which come sometimes to tender souls who know little about enemies which our ancestors had to deal with.

The complete Truth, however, will only be revealed at the horrible clarity of the latest catastrophes. It is when he wanders in the rain, in the light of lightning, in the moor inhospitable that King Lear dreams, for the first time, to the little ones and the underprivileged and that he cries out: "Poor You naked paupers, with unsheltered heads and stomachs unsatisfied, how under your torn rags, you defend-do you dare against such times? Ah! I have taken too little worry about all that!" It is in the roar of the temp-that the privileged, the carefree of the ruling classes-giants will dream, under the spur of their own anguish, to the souls they could have saved.

My book, I fear, will only be properly understood when will have come this great sound\ of which the mysteriously speak secret societies led by Jews, this great evening which must envelop shadows of death and plunge into the France.

So today's pleasure-seekers will go and drag the gran-| roads with worn shoes like the emigrants from elsewhere sometimes.

How telling is this popular engraving which represents-feel like a family of emigrants! The father is there, haggard, bent over, gripped to the heart by the misfortune of his own; the mother holds by a little one who can barely support himself. On the threshold of a German cottage, sitting on a shaded bench in

JEWISH PERSECUTION 563

greenery, a peasant watches these vagabonds pass by and on the face of the outlaws we read this feeling: "This man
How happy he is! He has a home, a hearth, a roof.
f If the conservative newspapers were not, for the most part-part, in the hands of the Jews, it is this lamentable story of the emigration that they should tell their readers about instead of talking to them about balls and toilets.

How dearly this society of the 13th century paid for its vices.
key as improvident and as frivolous as ours!
It is abroad that we really get the feeling of what must have been this existence of exile. Some cities, cer-
Some hotels envelop the soul in I don't know what cold particular.

I can still see myself in this Stork Hotel in Baie, which was a meeting place for emigrants, having coffee in a small gloomy garden face to face with the stork, alive sign of the place, which keeps you company. The walls of the old house, the silence of the city at the gates solemn and always closed carriages, the very sight of this
The Rhine flowing silently fills the soul with melancholy.
If one is sad here, one thinks, when one comes here in tou-sad, with money in his pockets, what would it be like if one Was there poor, exiled? What job to do? Where to go?
Nowhere in these closed cities can one find welcome affable and warm of this Paris where the cobblestones themselves laugh abroad, where the best place is for him...

There were heartbreaking poems of pain in these rooms with red tiles, faded curtains, three horsehair chairs that the Memoirs describe to us^ and where women like Ms. d'Argouges or Ms. de Talmont sometimes arrived in clogs, without clothes. Often even had no room. The Princess of Condé, wandering, slept on the floor and ate potatoes land to water.

One of the triumphant women of Versailles sells her last dress to pay for her husband's funeral and remains alone with her two children. M^{^^^} Montmorency becomes a carrier bread to feed his mother; others soap, go to day. The Count of Secillon established himself as a dancing master and one day he thinks he recognizes one of his friends, the Baron de Pontgibaud carrying the peddler's ball. — this I do not app- shovel more Pontgibaud, answers this one; my name is Labrosse. » And he remained Labrosse until the Restoration.

In London, M^{'''<^} de Gontaud makes small objects of wool at the rate of two sous per hour. Chateaubriand is forced to put his table on his pallet as a cover- to avoid dying of cold; after staying two days without eating he fainted, and was about to expire from inani- tion when the journalist Pelletier came to visit him by chance and took him to stuff himself with roast beef.

It is when they will be faced with exile and poverty than the pleasure companions of the Rothschilds and the Ephrussi will understand the price of this Homeland that they will have nothing made to defend. Only then do they recapitulate- will do everything possible to resist, to prevent this society from perishing.

The test, indeed, will be harsh for these effeminate and these idle. They will have neither good humor nor indestructibility health, nor the inexhaustible spirit of the great lords of other- times; they will not have the strength of temperament of these Poles whom I saw accepting the most modest jobs, sometimes living with nothing, staying in bed all day when bread was scarce and be content with a cup of tea.

Saint Paul said it: "We must hope against all hope-

JEWISH PERSECUTION 5f^0

rance. » Let us still hope that, despite so many con- milkers, this destiny will be spared to those who will have it deserved! Perhaps, at the last moment, courage asleep Will he wake up in some of them? Maybe one of these officers, who were seen, with waxed mustaches, smelling tran- quitting their murderous absinthe after having, in the morning, helped to expel some old priests, will one day feel the red rising to his face and pushing his glass halfway away

The word of the one who speaks first will be completed, can doubt it, in a tremendous acclamation. All France will follow the leader who will be a vigilante and who, instead to strike at the unfortunate French workers, like the men of 1871, will strike at the Jews sewn with gold and will tell the poor gathered around this Pactolus escaping-pani of the disjointed Semite: "If you need, pick it up!"
For me, I repeat, I did not claim to undertake that a work of good will, show by what oblique and cautious enemy France had been invaded, corrupted-stinks, stupidity, I don't want to break everything with my own hands which had once made her powerful, respected and happy. Have I wrote our will? Have I prepared our rebirth?

—'

I don't know. I have done my duty, in any case, in response-by insults to insults without number that the Jewish press lavish on Christians. By proclaiming the Truth, I obeyed the imperative call of my conscience, liberavi animam meam

0

II 32

TABLE OF CONTENTS

FROM THE SECOND VOLUME

BOOK FOUR

CrÉMIEUX and the UNIVERSAL ISRAELITE alliance... 1

Gordon and Reinach. — The mountebanks. — The role of Crémieux.

— The more Judaico oath. — Democratic gaieties. — Crémieux on December 2. — The emancipation of the Israelites Algerians. — The Jew in Algeria. — Usury. — Patriotism
Jews. — The Algerian insurrection. — An Arab hero. — Mokrani. — The Crémieux decree before the Assembly of Versailles. — Foulou evades. — The Jews and French law.

— Tirman and his plan to expropriate the Arabs. — The jus-